THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

A Trumpet Call

The return, last week, of Secretary Stephen J. Corey and Professor W. C. Bower, two of the three members of the Commission sent by the Foreign Society to investigate Christian mission work in the Orient, is signalized by this trumpet call from Dr. Corey, his first message for publication after landing on the home shores. It deserves to displace our usual editorial utterance on the most conspicuous page of The Christian Century. The report of the commission will, no doubt be presented in due time and in such form as will put at the service of both the Foreign Society and the entire brotherhood the findings of the commission. The third member of the commission, Mr. R. A. Doan, remained in the Orient with Mrs. Doan for a further prosecution of the investigation. He will return to this country in the spring.

THE great crisis in Europe is matched by an equally great crisis in the Orient. The nations of Europe are fighting each other in a dreadful war. The nations of the Orient are opening wide doors to the entrance of Christianity and higher ideals. The greatest war tragedy the world has ever seen runs parallel with the most wonderful opportunity the Church has ever seen. America is free from the complications of war, and stands as the ideal for China and other countries of the East. They look to us for ideals, for teaching, for help.

China Ready for Moulding.

The people of China are tiring of their old superstitions. They have seen the progress of the West and are yearning to grow as have the other countries. They have transformed their temples into school houses, and with eager minds listen alertly to every good thing. They are adrift, having given up much of the old but are not yet adjusted to the new. The hour is come for Christianity to take advantage of the situation. To cut down the resources of our missionary work would be to cripple the missionaries and the native workers in a heartbreaking way.

It would be like a hail storm at harvest time or a frost in the early summer.

The Crisis in Japan.

Japan is the leader of the Orient. This little nation has added to her own rare gifts the outward things of western civilization. Her schools and colleges and universities are filled with eager students. She has come to be recognized as one of the great nations of the world. Her present free alliance with England is bringing her more to the front than ever before. The whole world must hereafter reckon with Japan; she is tremendously in earnest. Idolatry is rampant among her people, but there is a deep undercurrent of ardent desire for better things. Japan's people are eager, expectant and hungry for the best. In this critical hour in the world's history Christianity must make good in Japan. An evangelistic campaign is being conducted there now. Hundreds and even thousands of people are attending these meetings in many places. This does not mean that large numbers are turning to Christ, but that the opportunity is ripe to instill Christian ideals and hopes into the hearts of this idolatrous people. They are not all seeking Christ, but they are seeking for truth and we will be faithless to our trust if we do not give them the Truth. American Christianity must rise to the emergency. To fail now is to fail fatally.

There is beginning to be widespread dissatisfaction in Japan as to America's honesty with her in the treaty of the two nations. These questions cannot be settled by diplomacy.

Even the leaders in Japan are coming to think that Christianity and Christian ideals are the only solution for these problems.

Present Responsibility of the Churches of America.

Ours is the only strong Christian country not involved in the present war.

Our people are prosperous and there is plenty of money in our land.

While the nations of Europe are sacrificing life and treasure and progress in their call to patriotism, let the churches of America be true to the call of Christian world patriotism. Much of the missionary work done by the churches in Europe will necessarily be at a standstill now.

This is a testing time for our American Christianity.

If we do not step into the breach as loyal soldiers of the Cross we have miserably failed.

There should be no thought of retrenchment because of the war in distant lands.

Such a stirring of the unselfish and heroic spirit should come to our people as we have never had before.

Shame upon us if we fail in the hour of greatest emergency.

What is our Christianity for if not to serve us in the hour of stress and strain?

This is the parting of the ways for our churches in their relation to the world.

War periods in the past have seen the birth of the missionary societies and the increase of funds. While Europe is passing through her Gethsemane God must have a purpose in our freedom from distress.

The East is our near neighbor.

We must be true in our high hour of responsibility.

Instead of decrease there must be increase.

Instead of retreat there must be advance!

Stephen J. Corey.

Is Christendom Christian?

A Sermon Preached at First Christian Church, Louisville, Ky.

BY E. L. POWELL.

WE ARE still under the spell of the star and the Child and the song of the angels. We still hear the laughter of the children and see the shining faces of those who have been made glad, and those who have made others glad. Christmas marks the birth of a new religion. It marks a new departure for humanity. It is the historic expression in time of the entrance of God into humanity. Its great message is that which has been brought to us through the song of the angels, "Peace on earth, good will toward men." It is prophecy and vision. It anticipates a new creation when old things shall have passed away and all things shall have become new. It looks forward to that millennial time of which the poet sings:

"Lo! the day is hastening on by prophet bards foretold;
When with the ever encircling years comes round the age of gold!
When peace shall over all the earth her ancient splendors fling,
And the whole world give back the song which now the angels sing."

IS CHRISTIANITY A FAILURE?

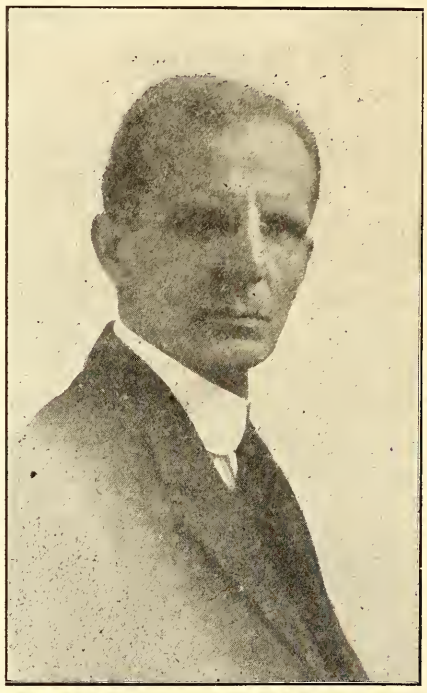
With half the world war-convulsed, the belligerent nations being those nations which have been longest under the benign influence of the Christian religion; with the sounds of the dying in our ears and the still faces on the battlefields turned toward the stars haunting our imagination; with the widows and fatherless children appealing to our sympathy, with all the horrors unspeakable associated with garments rolled in blood, we can but ask ourselves the question, "Is Christendom Christian, is Christianity a failure, has the pierced hand of the Master no power to stay the carnage, is this the fruitage of our glorious Christianity?"

Faith is asking this question with pain-drawn features. The inquiry is propounded from press and pulpit. Never before in the history of the world has faith been so sorely tried. I listened to a sermon this last summer in England wherein the preacher, in tones of utter despair, gave up Christianity as a failure so far as its fashioning power over the world is concerned.

Now, my friends, I do not regard this time as at all suitable to pessimism. I do not believe that faith is being any more sorely tried now than it has been in all ages and centuries. I think it has been differently tried. So far as the question which concerns the power and influence of Christianity is concerned, we need but turn the glowing pages of history to read the story of its triumphs. Its moral achievements have been thereon recorded. We know that the gospel of forgiveness has been proclaimed round the world, and that millions today are rejoicing in the sweet peace which comes from the consciousness of sins forgiven. We know that Christianity has, through all these two thousand years, comforted the sorrowing and wiped the tears from the eyes of mourners.

PROGRESS THROUGH CHRIST'S RELIGION.

We know, furthermore, that Christianity has entered into the customs and laws and institutions and policies and literature and science and art of the world. We know that whatever progress we have today, whatever progress we have made unto this good hour is attributable, in the moral realm, to the religion of Jesus Christ.



Rev. E. L. Powell, who declares that "out of the present war will come forth a new spirit among men."

A POINTED QUESTION.

But I do not want to answer the question in that way. The question, I mean, Is Christendom Christian, or is Christianity a failure? I wish to propound another inquiry: If the religion of Jesus Christ is discredited by this European war, with all of its horrors and indescribable miseries and suffering, why has not Christianity been long discredited by the existence, in the world, of poverty, intemperance, social and industrial injustice, and evil in all of its ten thousand forms? If the power of Christianity is shown to have failed because, after all these centuries, Christian teaching could not stay this mighty European conflagration, then I claim that Christianity has been a failure all along in that it has not been able to completely destroy and overthrow evils that have slain their thousands and tens of thousands in times of peace.

Christianity is under just as much obligation to exterminate poverty, and conquer disease, and insure self-control in life, to promote the peace and happiness and welfare of human society in all its pursuits and activities, as it is to bring its message of condemnation upon war with all of its horrors and all of its miseries. In neither case has Christianity been discredited, because the progress of Christianity is a spiritual progress.

FAITH CHAGRINED.

The advance of humanity has been in exact proportion to the willingness of humanity to submit to the authority of the religion of Jesus. In other words, Christianity does not impose its authority from without; its authority is self-imposed. To the extent that humanity becomes willing, actually to be dominated in all of its life by the mind and will and spirit of Jesus Christ, to that extent has Christianity made its power felt, and no further.

Faith is simply chagrined and disappointed that the progress has been so slow, that the advance has been so seemingly limited, and this seems to faith to have been accentuated, to have been more vivid by the outbreak of this great war.

We are to remember, friends, that the program of Christianity is so comprehensive, taking in all the millions of humanity, and all of the interests and concerns with which humanity has to do, all of its governments and all of its civilizations, that we must regard this progress in millenniums rather than in centuries. The kingdom of God has come, that is, the rule of God over society, only as manhood has come when the babe is in the cradle, only as the day has come when the dawn breaks upon the hills. The kingdom of God is coming, and each century marks an advance along some line of moral development, if not along the whole line of moral development.

SOLDIERS HONOR CHRISTIANITY.

Let us not imagine that Christianity has been discredited because sin has not yet been exterminated from human hearts and lives. Then let us not imagine that Christianity has been discredited because one manifestation of sin, if so this great war shall be regarded, has broken our hearts, and has brought us into a state almost of despair, as we have thought of its terrible miseries.

But I am not prepared to believe that Christianity is discredited by this European war. If you mean that the influence of Christianity has not been felt by the millions who make up these belligerent nations, if the power of Christianity has failed at all, it has failed only insofar as the few are concerned who have brought on this war, and not so far as the many are concerned who are fighting its battles. If Christianity has been dishonored it has been by perhaps 100 men representing the heads of the administrative agencies of these various contending nations in Europe. So far as the men in the trenches are concerned I claim that they are honoring Christianity and that in their fighting they are but proving the power of Christianity over their hearts and lives.

CHRISTIAN CHARACTER SHOWN BY COURAGE.

Do you mean to tell me that it is an un-Christian thing for a patriot to lay down his life for his own country? Do you mean to tell me that those men, whether German or English or French, whoever they may be, who have answered the call of their country, and who have turned aside from home and loved ones, and all of the interests near and dear to their hearts in order to pour out their blood on the soil of their country, and, as they believed, in the defense of the honor of their country, have in any way cast an insult upon Him who hung upon the Cross of Calvary? For myself, I believe that any man who pours out his blood in behalf of a cause in which he believes, any man who is true and loyal to the call of his country, and shows that loyalty by the one sublime act of self-sacrifice of dying for his country has a certificate of Christian character, even though he may be an adept in profanity, and even though he may be a sort of individual that respectable society would turn away from. Heroism such as this is so sublime and so divine that it brings everyone who expresses it in his life into fellowship with the Thorn Crown.

BLAME UPON RULERS.

But the argument I am making is, that if it be true that Christianity has been in any wise discredited by this war, that is to say, if it has been shown by the coming of this war that the power of Christianity over human life has been weakened, that its grip has been loosened, then that is true only as respects the few men that have brought this whole war into being. Theirs is the responsibility; theirs is the guilt. But I am not one of those who believe that this European war is opposed to Christianity. If the issue be what many of us believe it to be, if the issue could not be settled as is claimed by arbitration or by treaty, or in any other way, if this conflict was irrepressible and inevitable, of such a nature that there could be no compromise without dishonor and disloyalty, then for one I believe that the voice of God would have said to the nations, "To your tents, O Israel."

Christianity utters its message of peace, but its author said: "I have not come to send peace on the earth, but a sword." Our own war of the revolution I believe to have been the most sacred war in the annals of time. I believe that the angels of God were looking from the battlements of heaven with approval upon that mighty conflict. I believe that a war for liberty, a war for self-government, a war in defense of honor and conscience and liberty, is a holy war. Why do I say so? I see as the symbol of our religion no academic picture. I see in actual fact one hanging upon the cross saying unto the world that redemption for humanity is to be accomplished only through blood.

THE EXAMPLE OF HISTORY.

Astheticism bids us turn away from the gospel of blood as suggestive of the shambles, but history bids us remember that no great eminence has ever been climbed, no great summit ever has been reached save as men have walked up its sides with bleeding feet and breaking backs. No knowledge has come to humanity that has not been born out of pain, no great picture has been painted that has not been mixed with the blood of the painter; no literature worthy of the name whose sentences have not been heart throbs suffering as the Saviour of the world. It is God's way.

War in the abstract is horrible: wars of conquest, wars of greed and of hate have no justification. But such a war as this, such a war as I believe this to be, wherein is involved the principle of self-government and of liberty, I cannot bring myself to believe, despite the fact that millions may be slain, is under the ban of the religion of Jesus Christ or under the ban of Him who deliberately and voluntarily went to the cross that He might bring to the world the revelation of the meaning of redemption and the method of redemption.

Liberty, that electric word,
Foreseen in the vision of the sages,
Foretold when prophets bled,
She was born of the longing of ages
By the truth of the noble dead,
And the faith of the living fed.

I am an advocate of peace, peace with honor, peace that is not a truce, peace that is based, in fact, upon good will toward men. I am an advocate of war in the name of the Lord God of Hosts, if it be that the life of a nation is in danger and cannot be preserved save through war. Better that a nation, a whole nation shall perish from the earth without having once caught the vision of liberty and of democracy, than that it should continue to exist enslaved. The misery of death would not be a circumstance as compared with the misery of life.

WAR AN UNMIXED EVIL.

But while I do not at all admit that Christianity has in any wise been discredited, even though it be granted that this war is an unmixed evil, while I do not admit even if this war be justified that Christianity has been otherwise than discredited, I must admit that so far as the church's utterance of Christianity is concerned, its influence has been limited by the establishment of certain limitations which to a large extent she has imposed upon herself. Men are saying your Christianity is weak and powerless in the presence of such a great calamity as this war. The marvel to me is that its weakness cannot be shown, in view of these limitations on the Church of God of which I have spoken.

Do you know that it is not until within these modern times that the church has recognized that it was her business to do other than to maintain the worship and the ordinances and the creed of the church? Do you recognize that the word "sociology" is scarcely twenty-five years old? Do you recognize that the phrase "applied Christianity" is almost a newborn utterance? The church has through these many years been giving her attention to the building up of a theology, to the establishment of an ecclesiasticism, has been giving herself to forms and rites and ceremonies and yet despite these limitations her influence, the influence of her gospel and the influence of her Lord has gone forth impressing the nations of the world.

HAS CHURCH BEEN PROVINCIAL?

Not until the twentieth century, certainly not until the nineteenth century, has the church awakened to the fact that the whole of humanity is her domain, and that this humanity is to be understood—its governments, its politics, its business, its pleasures, everything which pertains to the pursuits and activities of society and of the world. Have we not ourselves drawn the distinction between secular and sacred, giving that realm which we call the secular over to the devil as no concern of ours, save as we may bring a convert now and again out from that realm into the fellowship of the church? Has not the church until recently been a provincial, bringing itself under the influence of swinging censors and delightful worship, but not feeling called upon to speak in any heroic fashion as to honesty in business, as to the terrible sins of society that are destroying society, as to corruption in politics, as to all these devilish and hateful things that are supposedly outside of the church?

Why, a man of the world says, stick to the gospel of Jesus Christ, if the preacher should happen to speak of Christian principles applied to political conditions from his pulpit, and what does he mean? His idea of the church, his idea of Christianity is that it is a limited and narrow province that permits simply presenting the question of worship and the telling the story of God's love unto men. Did not one of the United States senators say only a few years ago that the golden rule in government is a barren ideality? And yet what is the golden rule but the square deal? "Do unto others as you would have others do unto you" is nothing more than simple justice and does not even enter into the realm of love and generosity. And yet this senator said that the religion of Jesus Christ was an impertinent interloper in urging adoption of the golden rule in business or in government.

We are having now that splendid series of articles in a magazine by Miss Ida Tarbell on the golden rule in business. Read the message and you will discover that the golden rule in business is nothing more than the requirement of good sensible business economy, that even from the standpoint of that which is materially best for the business man, the golden rule is far and away the best principle on which business should be governed.

THE GOLDEN RULE IN BUSINESS.

But we have just come into that realm, so I say it is a marvel that the charge which is being brought against Christianity, as well as its power and its influence because of this European war, is not true; it is a marvel to me that with these limitations bound and fettered by its dogmas and its divisions and its provincialisms, in despite of these limitations the church has still gone forth into the great world glorious as the sun and terrible as an army with banners.

No, my friends, I am just as firmly persuaded of the ever-growing power of the religion of Jesus Christ, as I am persuaded that, despite the showers and sunshine of a spring day, the day will none the less come to its zenith. I believe that there shall be a redeemed humanity here upon this earth. The church in her gospel has been postponing this redemption and saying that bye and bye the new Jerusalem shall be let down from heaven, and then and not until then shall there be a redeemed society.

When I speak of a redeemed society I do not mean the society of heaven; I mean the society of earth. I mean that we are not far from the time when we shall sail the seas by taking reckoning from the stars, when we shall engage in that which we call secular under religious influences and under a religious spirit and in business and in government alike there shall be recognized the power of the mind and will and spirit of Jesus Christ. That will not bring about a perfect society. It will bring about a redeemed society. Not redemption out of the world, but redemption wrought within the world. I believe we are fast coming to that time.

A REDEEMED SOCIETY.

I can but think that out of this war, out of this terrible furnace of affliction and misery there shall come forth a new spirit among men. Possibly it may be followed by such a religious revival as this world has never known. It may come to pass that men shall be brought to feel after God more intensely than ever before. Certainly there will be a new society; certainly there will be a new world. Oppression will have ceased. Disarmament may not be brought about completely, but armament will be a most limited thing. Possibly international hand-shaking that is so hearty and cordial will come that the nations will give up their challenging armaments altogether.

I feel that something big is going to happen. I seem to anticipate the fulfilment of the word of the prophet when he declares that a nation shall be born in a day. Long centuries of struggling, and then through the stress and strain of this titanic struggle there shall come forth this new humanity, a democracy baptized in blood and dedicated to the service of the world.

Aunt Susan on the Church

With Sundry Reflections Upon the Present-day Superfluity of "Movements."

BY G. T. V. BODINE

Mr. Bodine, the author of this interesting and wholesome commentory on human nature and the Church, is editor of a local newspaper at Paris, Mo., called The Paris Mercury. It is a thoroughly readable journal. Its editor takes his task with a degree of serious idealism not often found in the conduct of local newspapers in the smaller towns. So that in addition to a graphic recital of the news each week the community recognizes in its paper a positive leadership in matters civic, social and religious.

"IF YOU got your specs cunvenient, Mandy," said sister Susan last night, after we had got thro' the sausage an' had settled down to be comfertable, "I want you to read this here ar tickle in the Christian Trumpet, which come today. It sez ther wuz over 2,000 new 'movements' launched last year, an' I gether from readin' it that each one is greater than tother in the wonderful things it's goin' to do. Right over on the next page is another long ar tickle on what's the matter with the church."

"Looks pow'ful simple to me, Mandy—ther's too many uv these here 'movements,' much mind lardges an' clubs. Ain't a day passes but me er the Major one gits a pile o' circulars out uv the mail box urgin' us to jine some movement.

"It may be fer stoppin' the widespread destrucshun of jimpson weeds, endowin' a farm fer homeless skunks, er preventin' wimmen frum wearin' feathers in their hats so as to protect the birds in South Ameriky, but it all reads alike.

MOVEMENTS AND CASH.

"When you git to the bottum it never fails to say, 'please fill out enclosed certificate uv life membership an' enclose a dollar, an' we will enroll your name among those who hev jined this great cause.' If you jined a tenth uv 'em it 'ud take all the money you cud rake an' scrape & you wouldn't hev time fer anything but movements that don't move. I don't know how they git our names er our route number, but they git it.

"More'n this, Mandy, somebody with a mighty little to do has sent the Major's name to one uv these short order whisky houses. Done it cause they knew he voted dry an' wanted to mortify him. Ever time I pick up a paper to start a fire o' mornin's I either git hold of an advertisement fer Ol' Crow whisky er a circular invitin' the family to jine a movement. I thought I smelt cloves on the Major's breath oncet or twict Christmas, but didn't say nothin' about it, though knowin' he didn't git it uv the family bottle, which is kept strictly fer medic'nal purposes. I keep a piece of black thread tied aroun' that, slip it down ever time I take a sip fer my newralgy, an' kin always tell when the Major has been tamperin' with it.

"Howmsoever, the Major does love the taste uv liquor. What beats me is how a man 'ull stoop to sich things as suckin' cloves an' chawin' coffee grains to hide a whisky breath, when he knows it is the surest sign a woman wants. Takin' a nip kin be excused sometimes, but ther's no excuse fer a man goin' aroun' eatin' cloves an' coffee an' smellin' like a custard pie that's spiled.

"But that ain't neither here ner there. I used to think that whisky an' dancin' an' card-playin' wuz what ailed the church, but hev changed my mind. It's 'movements,' Mandy, an' nothin' else.

THE WOMEN'S MOVEMENT.

"Ther's the wimmen's movement, which consists in readin' papers and stayin' away frum home; ther's the Men an' Misshuns movement, the childern's movement, the young folks' movement, the married folks' movement, the temperance movement, the movement to rescue farmers' wives frum th'r turrible condishun, the movement against vice, an' Lord knows what all—jest read 'em.

"TANGLED UP" IN MOVEMENTS.

"Ther ain't a thing folks hez to do, frum breathin' an' eatin' to sleepin' an' reproducin' the'r kind as scripture commands but what's got a movement behind it. If too many childern is bein' born a lot uv wimmen meet an' start a movemen to pervent it. If ther ain't enough bein' born ther's other wimmen meets and organizes to kerrect matters without heving any themselves. If folks is eatin' too much hog meat, which is nacheral this time uv year, a movement is started to mak 'em eat the white uv an egg, an' if they git to eatin' too much o' that a movement is started to stop 'em.

"You caint turn around without runnin' into a 'movement' an' the more uv 'em we have the wus things git tangled up.

"Uv course, Mandy, you know what a 'movement' is. Whatever it tis that has to be remedied, them that feels called on to kerrect it gits together, draws up a set uv by-laws like that uv the Willing Workers, elects a president, secretary an' treasurer, orders 'em to take up a collecshun frum them that don't belong, an' adjourns. That's about the last you hear uv it unless the collecshun wuzn't quite big enough. Things go on jest the same, an' direcly somebody comes along an' starts another movement, an' immejiately everthing else is fergotten an' a new president an' secretary is elected.

"I'd like to know jest fer my own satisfacshun, Mandy, how many presidents an' secretaries uv one kind and tother ther is in the United States—it must be monstrous. Most ever other puson is one or tother, though I never could git myself elected to anything to save my soul.

PRESIDENTS, SECRETARIES, ET CETERA.

"Howmsoever, organizashun is the watchword these days an' you caint be a true pergressive until you git yourself organized. Pusonally, barrin' the fact that it takes a pile o' money, I ain't got no objecshun to movements, unly it does look as if things wuz in a turrible condishun an' that folks caint do things right no more. Them as kin do things half way right hez to be everlastinly lookin' out fer them that caint an' what, twixt lardges an' movements, Anariah hasn't had anything but a tin can meal fer her man in more'n a year.

"Even the nigger is allowed to take an' bring the washin' without her countin' the pieces, an' it's outrajus. Seems to me if things is that bad we jest as well quit tryin' an' let 'em go. It used to be folks hed some sense of duty an' tried to do it, whether it wuz in not spittin' when you oughn't to, havin' childern if it wuz right, bein' generous so fur as you wuz able, er clean an' decent without somebody always a jabbin' you from behind.

"But times has changed and nowadays they leave it all to the president and secretary, who, after signin' up the minits of the last meetin', go about ther business like the rest uv 'em. Peepul is all frettin' away ther time trying to do somethin' by proxie they ain't willin' ner able to do as indivijuals. Kinda lessens responsibility an' makes 'em feel better when the wust happens, as it usually does. Everbody is dodgin' duty an' tryin' to satisfy ther consciences jinin' a movement.

AS TO "LARDGES AND CLUBS."

"This ain't sayin' nothin' 'bout lardges an' clubs. It used to be that a man had his way o' makin' a goose uv himself an' a woman hers, but taint so any more. Even the wimmen has lardges nowadays, an' I never visit Wilyum's wife, Emerine, but she's all togged out to go out somewhere an' "put on the work," as if ther wuzn't enough work an' more at home fer any woman to do.

"Accordin' to Willyum, howmsoever, it taint work at all. They unly jine hans and walk about the room, kinda like marchin' aroun' the levy', an' unly stop ever now an' then to read a piece about the principuls uv our glorious order.

"An' the men ain't no better. Jest elect a man royal this er that uv somethin' er other an' put a robe on him, Mandy, an' he is ruint fer life. The Major ain't never got over lookin' mysterious since he wuz elected Exalted Grand uv the Golden Fleece, an' you cain't git him to church without draggin' him there. Sez his lardge is got plenty uv religion, ever member havin' to believe in God under oath afore he can jine, an' that it aint got no hypocrits, though I notice thet all the church members an' the preacher belong.

"As soon ez a man er a woman jines two er three movements an' lardges, Mandy, they gits superior er tired and stay in bed Sunday mornins. They'll walk through rain fer a mile to put on the work an' I kin fill my atermizer there with water and skeer 'em away frum church.

THE ONLY MOVEMENT WORTH WHILE.

"As fer me I believe all this dressin' up an' paradin' aroun' is paganish. It 'ull do well enough fer niggers, but white peepul, ginerally speakin' uv course, is supposed to have more sense.

"A woman's place is at church an' a man's there beside her. It's the unly movement I know uv that half way makes folks do what they ought to do an' if them as wants to cure the orfull condishun we're in will work ez hard fer it an' give as much uv ther time an' money to it ez they do to movements the presidents an' secretaries will all be doin' useful Christian work, wimmen mindin' ther homes, an' men bein' clean an' decent. It's wonderful to me, Mandy, it gits along as well as it does with all this goin' on about it.

"What we need is more pusonal convieshun an' more sense uv indivijual duty, an' fewer movements. Save that paper to start the fire with."

"The Full Gospel"

A Plea for Accuracy and Honesty.

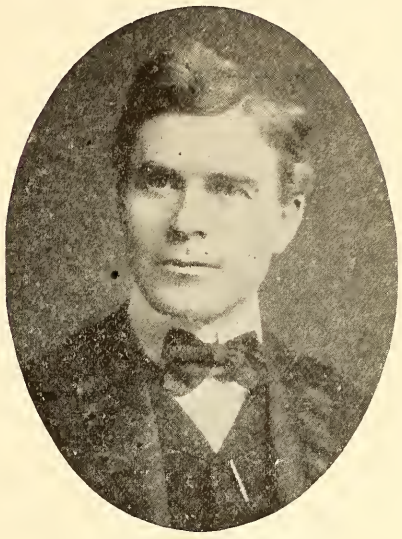
BY WILLIAM J. WRIGHT.

IN our recent convention in Atlanta two expressions were heard several times from men making addresses. Neither has a place in "sound speech that cannot be condemned;" both are peculiar to the Disciples and are in common use, "the full gospel," "a partial gospel."

These expressions are blameworthy in that they neither mean what they say nor say what they mean. To the initiated, "a partial gospel" means either that immersion is not preached at all, or that it is not stressed. It does not say what it means. "The full gospel" means that immersion is included and possibly stressed. It does not mean what it says. A stranger hearing the expression, "a partial gospel," might rightly conclude that "repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ" were omitted from the message proclaimed by others; or that steadfast devotion to God and service to our race were no part of our neighbors' preaching. We shy at using the word "immersion" in these connections, but in avoiding it we substitute language that is false in its implications both as respects the Disciples themselves and others.

ARE WE HONEST?

Accuracy unites with honesty in demanding a better vocabulary. We ought not bring a railing accusation against our neighbors, on the one hand; nor think more highly of ourselves than we ought to think, on the other. Courtesy and truth stand together demanding that when we mention the work of those who fight equally as well as we do against principalities and powers, against world rulers who live in darkness, against spiritual wickedness in high places, we shall use fairer speech if we can command it. The Holy Spirit prompts us to improve our vocabulary, cease this abuse of words, and be done with the covert insinuations against good men whose lives proclaim them as workers together with God.



Rev. William J. Wright.

"The full gospel!" It does violence to us as well as to our neighbors whose proclamation of grace we bring under indictment. The gospel is full when we proclaim it but lacks something when others proclaim it. We have exhausted the gospel! "Ne plus ultra" is written across our present interpretation and proclamation of the grace of God! No further light is to break forth from Holy Writ! "It is finished," when our sermon is at an end! Ridiculous!

THE MASTER'S TEST.

"A partial gospel!" Who but Jesus ever proclaimed a full gospel? Not Alexander Campbell; he was too great and modest to put forth such a claim. So were John Wesley, Roger Williams, Luther, Savonarola, Chrysostom, Augustine. Did Peter? Paul? John? Probably not. As photographs may be superimposed upon each other on a single plate until there is built up a composite photograph containing all the features of the separate prints, so all the features of the good news of God's love for man recorded in the Bible are required even to approximate a full gospel. And that total message has proved far too great for comprehension and proclamation by any individual. Until the angel of the Apocalypse proclaims that time shall be no more a partial gospel is the best and utmost that will be proclaimed by any man.

And here is an impartial test, the Master's own, as to its fulness or its partial character: "By their fruits ye shall know them." The type of character produced, the brand of men made by the gospel, reveals the character of the message. Has the fruit of the Spirit displaced the works of darkness? That is irrefutable evidence that the essentials of the gospel were faithfully preached.

"I AM HOLIER THAN THOU."

These phrases and some others are an unworthy heritage of the age that said, "Our doctrine is right because it is ours; yours is wrong because it is yours. I am holier than thou." The Campbells were not guilty of their use. Their use is unharmonious with the spirit of our age. It is unrepresentative of the spirit of our movement. It discredits our sincerity in our talk about Christian union.

"For foolish boast and frantic word,
Thy mercy on thy people, Lord!"

"Let no corrupt speech proceed out of your mouth, but such as is good for the building up as the need may be, that it may give grace to them that hear." "Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt, that ye may know how ye ought to answer each one." Too long have we dwelt in the shadows while without the sun is shining. Too long has our speech been marked by the language of Ashdod. It is in order to improve our vocabulary.

Fighting Bullets with Religion

A Story of the Adirondacks reported by Henry W. Adams from a recent sermon.

BY JOHN TIMOTHY STONE.

ONE of my first experiences as a Sunday-school missionary was during vacation, while a theological student at Auburn. I was sent as a pioneer missionary into the Adirondacks, and during those four months walked over twelve hundred miles, by trail. I traveled also by boat, rail, and stage, and came in touch with some most interesting types of men.

AN ALARMING SITUATION.

One day I went to a man, said to be unapproachable. "If you talk religion to him," I was told, "he will either knock you down, or shoot you." Well, I wanted to see him, and found him exceedingly interesting, not only in his own work, but in his own way of doing things. Before I had talked with him two minutes, I found he prided himself on the fact that he was peculiar. He was, perhaps, the strongest man I had ever met and was greatly aroused because I would not drink with him. I told him I knew he was the most peculiar man around there, and expected to do some desperate thing if he did not get what he wanted. Then I asked: "What would you think if asked to do something you never dreamed of." "Why, what do you mean? I do anything I don't want to do?" "Suppose you should do something different from anything you have ever done?" I answered. "Tell me what it is" he replied. "Start a Sunday-school here!" I said. The man just looked at me, and then said, "What do you think I am?" "You can do one thing," I answered, "You can keep order, and that is more than I can do. You seem to be strong and husky enough!" "Well, I am interested," was his reply, "You just stay to dinner, and tell me all about it."

STARTING A SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

I stayed to dinner, and can see that great tin dish of potatoes, and just as plainly, those fourteen or fifteen men (the roughest set of men I had ever seen) as they stuck their forks into them. "Quit that! Let your potatoes go! We are going to have a blessing!" said the big man.

Then he said, "Boys, we are going to start a Sunday-school up here. Every one of you is going!" And it was started, and those men came, and their children. I could not have gotten them to come. One man lit his pipe, as the sermon began, and my big friend shouted, "Put your pipe out—this is the house of God!"

Well, he was a strange specimen. He swore two or three times during the service, but he apologized for it—which was not a surprise to me. And when I told the story of a mother's love, as simply as I could tell it, trying not to be emotional, that great unique specimen just sat there and wept like a child!

After the service he turned to me, and said: "Parson, I can't preach. I can't do much of anything, but I will be superintendent, or whatever you like, of this Sunday-school; and what is more, the rest are going to be here!" A remarkable attendance was thus built up, and it was due to this man, whom they grew to love.

That rough man kept the school going till winter, earnestly and faithfully giving his life to the task.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

PRESIDENT CLARK'S quarterly report, read to the trustees of the United Society, December 12, speaks particularly of the organization of the "Christian Endeavor Peace Union."

Encouraging news, in spite of the war, was presented from Great Britain, Spain, Japan, Hungary, Norway, Denmark, Italy, Chile, South Africa, India and China. And steady gains have been made in the United States and Canada.

The plans for the new "Headquarters Building" in Boston have reached an encouraging stage. Christian Endeavor week is to be observed February 7-14, and the Fifth World's and Twenty-seventh International Christian Endeavor Convention will be held in the Coliseum building, Chicago, July 7-12 next.

RECIPROCATION.

THE Christmas and New Year season has brought to The Christian Century an expression of appreciative sentiment from its readers, in volume and depth far greater than any similar season has been known to bring forth. With many of these gracious words have come substantial gifts to further the manysided task at which the "Century" in coöperation with other agencies is at work. The feeling is expressed in this correspondence again and again that all hope of the Disciples ever attaining the goal they set for themselves a century ago depends upon the prevalence of such a conception of the reformation movement as The Christian Century sets forth.

No writer agrees in every point with the Editor, and it is not expected that he should, but the general direction in which our course lies meets hearty approval.

Here is a letter from the pastor of one of the strongest churches in California, a man known for his conservative loyalty to the Disciples during a ministry of many years. He says in part:

> Many articles in the "Century" I enjoy very much. I am somewhat puzzled, at times, to know how you reach some of your conclusions. I have not been able to satisfy myself that the Berkeley plan (so-called) is the best. However, there ought to be some way by which members of other congregations can affiliate with our people in the communities where we have churches. The Wilshire Boulevard church of Los Angeles is located in a very exclusive residence district, and many people there would like to work with the congregation, but do not care to be immersed. It presents a problem that our people ought to work out. The matter was up for discussion at the last meeting of the Southern California Ministers' Association. Dr. Wm. Bayard Craig, of Redlands, and others told how the associate membership plan worked in Denver. I cannot say that I am against that plan, provided we make it very plain that the Bible requires baptism in the New Testament way. The most unfortunate thing confronting our people now is the spirit of contention and suspicion which one finds throughout our churches. Regardless, Brother Morrison, of the different viewpoints we occupy regarding some of the great questions before us as a people, I esteem you and your co-laborers very highly as brethren, and know that you are actuated only by the highest motives and a desire to promote the interest of the kingdom of God. Our work goes forward very nicely here. Would be glad to see you, if you come this way during the year 1915. With very kind regards, and best wishes for the year 1915.

This word comes from an Illinois minister:

> I am fully in sympathy with your purpose and plans. The only point in which I differ is that I should not press the matter so hard. Give things a little more time to soak into the hearts of the people. I feel that we shall have to come to the point of view for which you are contending. I wish to express my high appreciation of your recent articles on the spiritual life. They are right along the line of what I have long thought, and have often preached. I did not, however, think of it so much as a spirituality particularly different from that of other churches. And yet I felt that in some things there would have to be a departure.

An Ohio pastor writes:

> I hope to be able to remember the "Century" with a gift ere long. I believe profoundly that the only hope for our people lies in the way pointed out so plainly, fearlessly, lovingly by the "Century," for it is in that way only that we can fulfill our God-given mission.

These are just tastes of the encouragement the Editor has received in these days in such abundant measure. He would delight to reply to each one personally but the task would be too great.

To all our correspondents we sincerely express our deep appreciation of the thoughtfulness that prompted them to write so kindly, and beg them to be assured, in the absence of a personal reply, that their good wishes are heartily reciprocated, their appreciations treasured gratefully and their gifts being used in accordance with their desires.

TO KEEP DOWN EDITORIAL PRIDE.

HOW futile words seem to be to tell what you want them to tell! At least how futile some people's words seem to be when read by some people! Here are two paragraphs, taken from two religious journals, which the Lord must have providentially intended our eyes to fall upon just at the psychological moment when the New Year greetings and appreciations were coming in.

They keep us from editorial pride.

The first is taken from the Herald of Gospel Liberty published by our dear friends of the Christian denomination:

> The Christian Century says the work the Disciples are called to do now is the service of constructing an order of the spiritual life, the inner life of the soul, richer and more catholic than the Church today possesses. We have an impression that Jesus constructed such an order of the spiritual life, and that it stands in force today, as it did the day he instituted it. We are not troubled over the order of the spiritual life the Disciple brethren may construct—it will be dead and buried and ten-elevenths of the people will never hear of it. We have not the remotest idea that our Disciple brethren can improve on the spiritual order given to the Church by Jesus, and that the Church possesses today. May she keep it and treasure it as a gem of divine luster.

The other is from the pen of Rev. J. B. Briney and is clipped, of course, from the Christian Standard, whose fund of pugnacious humor, we regret to observe, incidentally, is running low just now:

> In 1873 that accomplished writer and powerful preacher, Dr. L. L. Pinkerton, ran a series of articles in the Standard, in which he argued that church membership should not depend upon immersion. Dr. Pinkerton was a preacher in the Christian church, and took substantially the ground in regard to church membership that C. C. Morrison is advocating now, only he had too much scholarship and logical discrimination to deny that baptizo, as used in the New Testament, means "immerse." His contention was that a pious person who had received affusion for baptism ought to be received into the fellowship on that because it was satisfactory to him. He argued his point much more skillfully and logically than Mr. Morrison does, but he was met at every turn by the editor of the Standard, and his arguments were shown to be inconsequential and unsound. This whole question was threshed out about the time Mr. Morrison was born, or before, and the historical position of the Disciples thoroughly vindicated. Mr. Morrison is a back number, and not a leader.

These quotations are reproduced here in the spirit of doing penance for faults which our New Year's well-wishers seem not to be conscious of, and which we might be tempted by their words of encouragement to forget.

CONDITIONS IN SYRIA.

THE closing of all the foreign postoffices in the cities of Palestine and Syria renders communication with that part of the world uncertain and difficult.

A long delayed letter from a correspondent in Beirut gives some idea of the situation there. The U. S. S. "North Carolina" is in the harbor, and occasionally mail can be sent from the ship by the courtesy of its officers. Letters sent through the Turkish office are uncertain. The writer adds that such is the suspicion of all foreigners, even Americans, in the minds of the officials, that it is unwise to have anything published over the names of any of the writers, as a chance copy of any such communication, however carefully prepared, might involve the author in difficulties.

This correspondent writes among other things:

The terrors of war have not put us into any deeply gloomy state of mind yet. The Turkish postoffice refuses to have anything to do with U. S. A., as well as with Egypt and the other nations, but we still have the ship. After that goes, silence may ensue. Of course we do not get any mail, and as our stamps are giving out, we may not be able to send letters even by the warship.

The "holy war" is having no effect on the Moslems. All sorts of plans for the invasion of Egypt are in the air, and reports of Russian invasion and of the taking of the Dardanelles are rife. But we know nothing.

We cannot be sure that our letters go as directed, and we shall probably get no answers till things quiet down. Reports which are false on their face are the only topics of conversation outside of routine. To see the campus you wouldn't know there was a war. Everything goes as usual, the boys are not nervous, studies continue, duties are the same.

Even in the downtown district, except for a few shops closed and a few things not buyable, one sees little difference. Things are being confiscated, all the way from horses and autos to silk stockings and cans of milk. But that situation doesn't affect us unfavorably. The college has food on hand, a special firman recently renewed, and the good will of the city.

Yet one could make quite a catalogue of interesting events and views. Confiscation of goods on every hand, ships sunk to block the harbor, gas turned off all over town, holy war proclaimed, no money to be had, the wali always full after 5 p. m., Holliss (U. S. consul) running five consulates, English virtually prisoners, news almost entirely cut off, Jesuit school closed and the teachers living in West Hall, trains all stopped at 9 p. m. and carriages almost all gone to save the horses, postoffice service awful, everybody living on one-fourth of the usual income.

DR. MOTT'S SIGNIFICANT WORDS.

LAST week the cornerstone of the Young Men's Christian Association College was laid at the corner of Drexel Boulevard and Fifty-third street, in this city, four blocks distant from the University of Chicago.

In his address on that occasion John R. Mott, Associate General Secretary of the International Committee, said that the permanent establishment of the college in Chicago was a recognition on the part of the Association that this city has now become not only the leading educational center of America, but the home of the most extensive and closely coördinated body of institutions for religious education in the world.

Chicago possesses two great universities, one of which is the equal in equipment and standing of any institution in existence. Most of the leading religious bodies, and many of the smaller ones, have theological seminaries here, whose close and increasingly intimate coöperation is only a prediction of the most notable of united foundations for the study of religion, soon to be realized.

The opportunities for missionary training offered here, including specific courses in the history, ideals and methodology of missions, the languages, social customs and religions of the mission field, the medical and surgical training needed for the non-Christian world; and the educational and industrial preparation for vocational leadership in mission lands, all made significant by the largest body of returned and prospective missionaries ever assembled for educational purposes, give impressiveness to Dr. Mott's statement.

Still further, the number of institutions whose special field is preparation for social service, philanthropy and relief; for Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. leadership, and for Christian work of other sorts; and the fact that all these agencies are drawing closer to each other in the promotion of economy of time and expense, are impressive to a student of world Christianity like Dr. Mott.

THE SUPPRESSION OF VICE.

IT IS difficult for the average, clean-minded citizen to understand the ceaseless efforts and the variety of plans attempted by men and women of vicious character and mercenary motives to corrupt the mind of youth.

More than this, it is hard to keep the public alert as to such dangers. The report of the Chicago Vice Commission, the most carefully prepared document ever issued regarding the moral conditions of a city, aroused instant and widespread concern, and as a result more than thirty other communities made investigations, and published reports of a similar sort. And best of all, a Morals Court and a Morals Commission have been established in this city as the direct result of the Chicago Report.

Yet few people would be able to credit the fact that, after all the public interest awakened by the report, it required a year of ceaseless activity, in the face of the most persistent opposition, to secure the establishment of the court and the commission.

The public soon forgets. Only those who are aware of the insidious and constant efforts of the promoters of vice are prepared to take adequate steps for its repression.

The "Western Society for the Suppression of Vice" is one of the quiet organizations which is laboring to reduce the dangers to the young. Its special field is vicious literature and obscene pictures. In coöperation with the government it attempts to discover and suppress the traffic in those infamous prints and publications which find patronage to an astonishing extent in schools and other circles where they might be least expected.

The reports of Mr. D. F. Angier, the Chicago agent of the society and also a government postal inspector, show how vile are the documents and pictures circulated through the mails and in other ways, and how constant must be the efforts to suppress them effectively. Interest in the work of such organizations is one of the duties and privileges of decent citizens.

Ourselves at Our Best

BY PHILLIPS BROOKS.

THINK of the noblest moment that you ever passed, of the time when, lifted up to the heights of glory, or bowed down into the very depths of sorrow, every power that was in you was called forth to meet the exigency or to do the work. Think of the time when you stood upon the mountain top or plunged into the gulf. Remember that time—it may have been the death of your little child, it may have been your own sickness, it may have been your failure in business, it may have been the moment of your complete success in business, when you were sobered as the great shower of wealth poured down upon you, and you felt that now you really had some work for God to do in the world. Ah, look back to that moment and see if then it seemed so strange to you that God should come into the presence and person of his children, and take possession of their life. We grow so easily to forget our noblest and most splendid times. It seems to me there is no maxim for a noble life like this: Count always your highest moments your truest moments. Believe that in the time when you were the greatest and most spiritual man, then you were your truest self. Men do just the other thing. They say it was an exception, a derangement of my nature, an exultation, a frenzy, it was something that I must not expect again. How about the time when they plunged into baseness and made their soul like a dog's soul? They shudder at the thought of that because they think it would come again. Nay, nay, shudder if you will at the thought of that, but believe that the highest you have ever been you may be all the time, and vastly higher still if only the power of the Christ can occupy your will and your life all the time.

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Crowds Wait on Russell H. Conwell.

Rev. Russell H. Conwell, pastor of the Temple (Baptist) in Philadelphia, is known all over the country through his popular lectures. He is as popular as ever in the Temple and large audiences appear there every Sunday. Conversions occur every Sunday night.

Rev. Bouck White Speaks in Ford Hall.

Rev. Bouck White, the pastor of the Church of the Social Revolution, has been in jail for six months for attempting to speak in the Calvary Baptist church of New York where Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin is pastor. This is the church often attended by the Rockefellers. Dr. Woelfkin disclaims any responsibility for the presence of the police in his church or for the arrest. However, the severe sentence given the preacher made him a hero in New York and when he came out of jail he spoke in Ford Hall which was crowded to the limit and hundreds outside were not able to gain admission. His theme was "If Christ Were to Come on Christmas Day." He asserted that Christ was crucified by the capitalist class for advocating sabotage and that were he to come again he would be put to death again by the same element. Mr. White was trained at Harvard and graduated in theology at Union Theological Seminary. He is undertaking a reconciliation of Christianity and socialism, saying that both orthodoxy and the older materialistic socialism have failed.

Episcopalians Grow in 1914.

The Episcopalian statistics for 1914 are in print and they show steady growth in almost every particular. There was a decrease in lay readers but an increase in ministers and ministerial students. The communicants in the United States are now slightly over a million in number. The percentage of increase last year was 3 per cent as compared with 2 per cent for the preceding year. A little over a million dollars was received for various missionary enterprises, which was an increase of $28,000. These statistics are taken from "Living Church Annual and Churchman's Almanac for 1915," which appeared recently.

No Rents in Episcopal Church.

St. John's Church of Savannah, Ga., has abolished pew rents after having used this method of finance for over sixty years. The rector, Rev. Wm. T. Dakin, made this action the condition of his acceptance of the parish. In spite of the financial conditions of the South, the church has made a growth of 15 per cent in its financial receipts by using the "Every-member Canvass" and the duplex envelope. The congregations have greatly increased, also. Every church in this diocese now has free seats except two.

Bross Prize for Defence of Christianity.

Ten thousand dollars is awarded by the trustees of Lake Forest University every ten years on the Bross Foundation for the stimulation of the production of books that will defend the Christian religion, and especially the "divine origin and authority of the Christian Scriptures." The judges of the competition for 1915 will be President William Douglas McKenzie, of Hartford Theological Seminary; Professor Benjamin Lewis Hobson of McCormick Theological Seminary and Professor Rufus Matthew Jones, of Haverford College.

Gives Out Roses at Evening Service.

Dr. Christian F. Reisner, pastor of Grace Methodist Episcopal Church of New York, had his ushers give a rose to every person who attended the evening service on December 6. He is noted for his unique methods of church advertising and has written a book on "Church Publicity."

Charges Companies Control Churches.

In a recent number of the Survey, Rev. John Howard Melish writes with regard to religious conditions in the West in towns that are controlled by corporations. He quotes the late Bishop Spalding who describes a town as follows: "A. is a company town with a population, including men, women, and children, of 4,000. The company owns all the land, houses, hotels, stores, and halls. They want a church, they profess that they want it badly for the well-being of their workers. But they will only lease ground, and the terms of the lease involve the Church always standing on the side of the company, never on the side of the working men." The miners in the West point to such situations as these to show that the church is controlled by corporations and the result is to drive laboring men away from the church.

Largest Negro Episcopalian Church.

The largest colored Episcopalian church in the United States has been built up in recent years through the efforts of Rev. J. B. Massiah who is in charge of St. Thomas' Church of Chicago. During his eight years with this church it has grown from two hundred to nine hundred communicants and it now has a budget of $5,000. Rev. Massiah was recently honored by having his name presented as a possible member of the board of education in Chicago. Mayor Harrison has not yet announced whether he will appoint a colored representative on the board.

Rector Defies the Bishop.

An ecclesiastical trial of considerable interest is that which will be held on January 18 in Philadelphia. Rev. George Chalmers Richmond has been served with a summons to answer the charge of violation of his ordination vows. The immediate cause of this charge is his denunciation of the Bishop of the diocese. Rev. Richmond wished permission of the bishop to allow Mrs. Sara A. Conboy, a labor leader, to speak from his pulpit in St. John's Church, on the occasion of a labor convention held in the city. He had previously asked for and received permission for John B. Lennon, another labor leader, to speak. In spite of the bishop's refusal, Mrs. Conboy was advertised to speak. When the bishop interfered, the rector expressed himself very forcibly.

War Will Not Mean Jewish State.

Abraham M. Liebling, editor of the Jewish Daily Press, says that a report from London that an independent Jewish state would be set up in Palestine after the war was highly improbable. "The creation of an independent Jewish state in Palestine would never settle the Jewish question in Russia," he said. "Palestine is a poor country, and there are more than 6,000,000 Jews in Russia. If a few hundred thousand Jews should leave Russia for Palestine the percentage would be so small that it would be hardly noticeable. Should Palestine become an independent state it would have to be under the protection of some large European power. The Jews would prefer to remain under the protection of the Turkish government, which they have never complained against. Why should they care to have England or Russia give them the so-called reform? The Jews in this country are not losing much sleep over the reported emancipation. At present we are only interested in relieving the terrible poverty in Jerusalem, where thousands of Jews are starving."

Methodists at University of Illinois.

There are six hundred students and faculty members in the University of Illinois at Champaign. At the beginning of the academic year, two thousand letters were sent out to all Methodist students, and all students without preference. Two groups of personal workers have been organized of thirty or forty each, one of women and one of men. The first month of the academic year 154 students were brought into church membership. Dr. James C. Baker is the pastor. The pastor has a class of faculty members with an enrolment of between thirty and forty members who study "The Messages of Jesus to our Modern Life." All Illinois Methodists help support the work at the state university.

A Bible for Each Soldier.

Officers of the International Sunday School Association and the World's Sunday School Association here have made plans which they say will result in sending a Bible to each soldier in the warring armies of Europe. John Wanamaker of Philadelphia and others have guaranteed the distribution of the Bibles.

Congregationalists and Unitarians.

It is now just about a hundred years since the Congregational churches of New England began falling apart on account of the discussions concerning the Trinity. Before that, for two hundred years, these descendants of the Pilgrims had put up a united front in New England. After a hundred years of controversy, there are signs of approaching understanding. The Suffolk West Association of Congregational ministers invited the Boston Association of Unitarian Ministers to meet with them at their 226th annual meeting. About sixty ministers of the two bodies assembled on Dec. 2, at Harvard church, Brookline. They sat down together at the Lord's table. Rev. Edward Everett Hale, Unitarian, and Rev. William Allen Knight, Congregational, officiated. Perhaps it was by accident that both hymns that were sung were Unitarian. The meeting does not involve the official machinery of either denomination, but was purely a fellowship matter.

Jews not Connected with the Synagogues.

The city of St. Louis has 50,000 Jews and a prominent rabbi states that not over 6,000 of these are members of the various synagogues. New York has between one and two million Jews, more than ever lived in Palestine in its palmiest days, and of these not over a hundred thousand are members of the synagogue. The synagogues are often small and, with social restrictions as to membership like some churches, they are often more like clubs than religious societies.

Prominent Layman Passes Away.

Perhaps no layman in recent years has rendered the Universalist denomination a more conspicuous service than Mr. Eugene F. Endicott, who passed away at his home in Chelsea, Mass., on Dec. 9. He became the general agent of the publishing house of the denomination in recent years and through this service was able to put the propaganda of the church on a more secure basis. In recent years he has been treasurer of the general convention of the Universalists.

Philadelphia is Methodism's Greatest City.

The secretary of the Board of Church Extension and of Home Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Rev. Alpha G. Kynett, with offices on Arch St., Philadelphia, says that Philadelphia is the strongest Methodist city of the world. In the city limits there are 49,163 members and probationers, not including the members of the Italian, Syrian and Chinese Missions. Of this total, 3,487 are in colored churches. In Greater New York the Methodist Episcopal Church has 39,118 members and in Chicago 24,145.

Lutherans and Episcopalians Growing.

Referring to the comparative growth of churches in New York City from 1855 to 1905, the New York Christian Advocate says: "The outstanding fact in this comparison is the tremendous growth of the Lutheran Church. Its churches have increased from 7 to 123. Twenty-two per cent of the churches added to Greater New York since 1855 are Lutheran. Next to it the Protestant Episcopal body has added the most churches, but Lutheranism has added 116 against an increase of 93 in the Protestant Episcopal churches. The Baptist and Methodist have added precisely the same number—69. The Presbyterians came next with an addition of 56; the Congregationalists next with 26, and next the Reformed Dutch with 21. No other communion at work in 1855 has added 10 churches. The African Methodists have added 9, the Evangelical Association, 6; the Moravians, 5; the Unitarians, 4; the Universalists have precisely the same number as in 1855, and the Society of Friends has 6 less churches than 50 years ago."

Methodist Bishop at State University.

Bishop McConnell of the Methodist Church was the chief speaker at a series of meetings at the University of Illinois just before the holiday season. He was introduced by President James of the University, who was president of one Methodist university when Bishop McConnell was president of another. Student pastors of practically every denomination represented at the university were to be present at the meetings. These pastors come from many institutions of learning. The opening address of the series was "Doubt in Daily Life." Another address of the series was "Religious Certainty." The addresses were designed to strengthen faith in the student body. A banquet was held in the Disciples Church at which a professor spoke on "Faith and Test Tubes."

Arrangements Made to Consecrate Bishop.

Dean Walter T. Sumner, of the Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul, will be consecrated bishop of Oregon on Jan. 6, the services taking place at Chicago at 10:30 in the morning. The Rt. Rev. Dr. Tuttle of St. Louis is the presiding bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America and he has appointed the bishops to consecrate Dean Sumner. These are the Rt. Rev. Charles P. Anderson, bishop of Chicago; the Rt. Rev. Dr. Leonard, bishop of Ohio, and the Rt. Rev. Dr. White, bishop of Michigan City. The preacher for the day will be the Rt. Rev. Dr. Reese, bishop coadjutor of southern Ohio. After his consecration the new bishop will set out immediately for the state where his future work will be.

Candidates for Methodist Bishop.

During the past year two of the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church have died, and two will be retired for age in 1916. Four vacancies must be filled by the general conference which will be held at Syracuse, N. Y., in 1916. It is the present rule of this denomination to retire bishops for age at the general conference nearest the time when they are 74 years of age. Those to be retired for age in 1916 are the Rev. Dr. John W. Hamilton of Boston, and Rev. Earl Cranston of Washington. Three Pittsburgh men are being put forward by the Methodists of that city as candidates for the episcopacy. They are the Rev. Dr. John H. Willey, pastor of Christ Church, the Rev. Dr. J. J. Wallace, editor of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate and the Rev. Dr. J. M. Thoburn, Jr., superintendent of the Allegheny district of the Pittsburgh conference. It is pointed out that only one bishop has ever been appointed who was reared in Pittsburgh.

Dean Shailer Mathews Will Visit Japan.

Dr. Shailer Mathews, dean of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago, and president of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, will sail for Japan this week. He will go in company of Rev. Samuel L. Gulick of Tokio, who has been touring America in an attempt to secure better international relationships between Japan and the United States. Dr. Mathews will go in the interests of international peace and will bear the greetings of 17,000,000 Protestant Christians of the United States to the Christians of Japan.

Universalists and Unitarians in Episcopal Church.

The St. John's Episcopal Church of Philadelphia had a great centennial celebration on Nov. 8. The present rector of the church, the Rev. George Chalmers Richmond, arranged a series of services in which preachers of neighboring communions spoke in his church. On one evening two prominent Methodist and Presbyterian ministers spoke. On another evening prominent representatives of the Unitarians and Universalists made addresses. The Unitarian representative was the Rev. Dr. Charles E. St. John, pastor of the First Unitarian Church, and the Universalist minister was the Rev. Dr. John Clarence See, pastor of the Universalist Church of the Restoration. The plan of having these speakers from other communions had been first submitted to Bishop Rhinelander, in whose diocese the St. John's Church is, and the bishop approved the idea of the fellowship meetings.

Annual Meeting of Moody Bible Institute.

The Twenty-eighth Annual Meeting of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago held last month shows that 2,486 students received training during the year in its Educational and Correspondence departments. About 830 of these were in residence, coming from 38 states and 30 countries, and representing 30 denominations. In its Practical Work Course, designed to equip students for actual service in the field, 518 open air meetings were held during the summer, when over 130,000 people were reached, 10,000 of whom were dealt with personally, and 1,000 professed conversion to Christ. Mr. Henry P. Crowell was re-elected president, and Mr. E. K. Warren was elected vice-president to succeed Mr. Henry S. Osborne deceased. The president, vice-president and dean, Dr. James M. Gray, were elected as the Executive Committee charged with the operation of the Institute during the current year.

Memorial Service for Jacob Riis.

Jacob Riis, known all over America as a social leader and a man of deep human sympathies, was remembered in a memorial service held in Grace Episcopal Church in New York on Dec. 6. Jacob Riis was a member of the Episcopal Church. Rev. Dr. Charles L. Slattery, rector of the church, said the service, and Dev. Dr. Endicott Peabody, headmaster of Groton School, preached the sermon. The preacher was a personal friend of Jacob Riis and spoke feelingly of his service to the city of New York and to the nation.

Baptists and Congregationalists Federate.

Sterling, Mass., is one of the one hundred over-churched villages in the state which received a letter last spring from the State Federation of Churches suggesting that competition be replaced by co-operation. The federation of the Baptist, Congregational and Unitarian churches is now an accomplished fact with the pastor of the first two churches remaining with the federated church.

Evangelism in Illinois Prison City.

Joliet sinners will be given an opportunity to reform on February 1, when Dr. E. Lee Jarvis, former pastor of the John Wanamaker Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia will begin a city revival campaign there in a tabernacle to be built by the Joliet Ministerial Association. The tabernacle will seat 6,000 persons.

Bad Business for a Bishop.

It is reported that Bishop Henry Cranjon, of the Roman Catholic diocese of Arizona and New Mexico, has engaged attorneys to contest the validity of the state prohibition law of Arizona adopted at the November election. It is said that the contest is based on the contention that the law in question would prevent the use of wine in sacramental ceremonies.

Newspaper Man Addresses Ministers.

Rev. Wm. B. Norton, Ph. D., formerly a prominent figure in the Methodist ministry, is now the religious editor of the Chicago Tribune. He spoke on Dec. 7 before the Congregational ministers of Chicago on "The Relation of the City Newspaper to the Church in the City."

Here and There

"Please Pardon a Personal Reference."

There is no reason why we should unless the reference is unpardonable, and then we are powerless; the damage has been done. If one of us should rise up in meeting to say that he would not pardon any personal reference, he might be arrested on a charge of disturbing religious worship. This is one of those over-polite formulas, in the same class with that used by the orator who at the end of a brilliant climax shouts, "I pause for a reply." Have you ever wondered, gentle reader, what would happen to the man who so far forgot the psychology of the situation as to attempt a reply? The chances are that the victim would never take advantage of an orator's pause the second time. So with the "personal reference" formula. Like the infernal machine, we have it with us, and the wise will handle one with as much care as the other. The man who gave either to the world should be forgiven but not forgotten, lest some ardent youth emulate the example. If a man has anything to tell about himself let him tell it. No formula is necessary, if what he has to say is worth saying. No formulas can atone for the offense if what he says is piffle.

Volumes of Sermons.

On the whole books of sermons are a great disappointment. Most of them might have been preached by the Rev. Simeon Dundreary. Occasionally a good friend recommends a volume of the best ever, and I sit down to read with delightful anticipations, though from much experience of the unprofitableness of sermon reading. I summon to mind the lines of the well known hymn, "Oh refresh us, traveling through this wilderness." After that the sands do not parch, and the sun does not smite. I am forced to the conclusion, after years of patient effort, that the printed sermon is the grave in which the best thought of many a preacher's life lies buried. It may be my misfortune that I cannot roll away the stone, but there is little response to my appeals. Undoubtedly, to those who heard, these sermons which are now embalmed in the dust of the upper shelves, were admirable, and their preservation deemed a virtue. They would surely bless posterity. But the tones that thrilled, the eye that held the hearer, the gesture that implied more than it expressed, the force as well as the grace of the speaker could not be transferred to the page, and that loss is irreparable. The few like Brooks and Beecher, who have made themselves palpitating figures on their pages, are exceptions to the tomes of dull monotony which in the preacher's life-time may have been the full fruit and flower of his warm heart.

"Outlines of Sermons."

Those who have the ability to clothe and use them should not be disturbed. Theirs is no ordinary gift. They were meant to be carpenters, and they found an unexpected use for their craft. Imagine the joy, if one is able to do such a thing, of covering a skeleton with flesh! Imagine a preacher spending his days in the valley of dry bones, and making the ghastly things live! Such is he who can use the "outlines" with which the market is overstocked. We all make obeisance to his genius.

The Lost Art of Congregational Singing.

The art may still survive in some parts of the country, but in other sections it has gone, and apparently with no regret. The choir monopolizes the song service, and sings hymns with which the people are not familiar. The hymnal today is almost a needless expense. Paper-covered, cheap books with cheap music would do as well in many places as the hymnal. It is neglected and unopened. There is no response when the pastor asks everybody to sing. When you ask individuals to help with the singing they say, "I can't sing." The disposition to try has atrophied. The worship of God in song is merely dragged in, because such is the custom. Nothing is more distressing than to look out over a congregation when the hymn is being sung, and to note the blank faces and the sealed lips. Has the joy and the hope of the Christian died out of the heart? or what is the matter? The books are the best that money can buy, but they are helpless to waken the melodies of the heart. No people ever create enthusiasm in the worship of the Lord's house unless they sing. No matter how good the sermon may be it is always better in the atmosphere of song. The singing gives the sermon a mighty impulse. A congregation that sings heartily as unto the Lord is one whose worth may be taken for granted. To such a congregation singing is not merely the prerogative of the women. Singing belongs to men; it is their natural prerogative, and not simply women's. The gift ought to be stirred up. The Methodists are wise in putting "a hymnal in every home." Its treasures of devotion are worth more than the cost of the book ten times over. That is a good example to follow. The people should know their hymn book and reverence it, as they know and reverence their Bible. The preacher must know the hymns himself, if the people are to be led. Singing by all the people should be encouraged from the pulpit. A good hymn well read now and then is equal to many a sermon. When people are made to feel that they are expected to have a part in the service, something may be done. Let us have a Sunday now and then to teach the people the blessedness of song, and "let all the people sing!"

Cultivating the Unity of the Spirit.

Is not this one of the greatest tasks of any people? There are so many complications in this world of ours that one never knows what to expect tomorrow. I am not of those who believe that unity is to be attained within or without by pursuing policies that would involve us in a dead calm. It is idle to ask men to drop all discussions in the hope of "getting together." In a living world it is the difference of opinion that promotes liberty of expression which is the life of any people. Among barbarians there are no discussions—just clubs. It is by the exchange of ideas that we reach just conclusions. All discussions are good, if the spirit back of them is good. So silence is not a possible ground of unity. Neither is belligerency, nor mistrust. Such suggestions we may as well dismiss. The unity of the spirit can be cultivated by a just regard for the rights of each other, by respecting each other's convictions, by facing all questions that arise in the spirit of friends whose interests are one, by even preserving the fraternal spirit when we cannot agree. These are very simple and commonplace ways in which a high and undebatable ground can be reached. Maybe some better way to the desired unity can be proposed, but we may be certain that, whatever may be proposed, the element of brotherliness must enter in. Let us always remember that "there are no final words between friends."

Phariseeism to Date.

The Disciples have an outbreak of this malady at regular intervals, and a spokesman is found who fears no foe, and who will voice the distress of the faithful who sleep under the shadow of apostasies, and the fears of the fearful who live with one ear cocked to hear something drop. They have adopted the creed of Job, "The thing that I feared has come upon me." To such the worst is sure to happen. The class is not numerous but they have the genius of the bellumists who would have the nation build a twelve million dollar battleship to destroy a spook. They make as much noise as the two frogs who led the rustic to believe that he could furnish frogs to the restaurants in carload lots. They stubbornly contend for Christian union and are determined to have it if they dislocate Christendom.

These Pharisees are always smug and complacent in their attitude. With what assurance they utter the prayer, "Lord, we thank Thee that we are not as other men are." Consequently, they might unite for service with the angels, if the angels made the proper advance, but no union is possible with fallible fellow-Christians who are trying to do the will of God from the heart. The great majority of us ought to rejoice that we are allowed a place in the ranks of these brethren who have already reached such heights of holy attainment that they have not made such vast progress in our ascent. We ought to be grateful for the privilege of being recognized as brethren by those who can never be dislodged from their place in the ranks of the unshaken, the unterrified and the unseduced! The rest of us may be misled by the wiles of the serpent—they, never! Sooner may we expect the heavens to fall than for them to waver by a hair's breadth from the path in which our fathers walked. These fathers made mistakes, it is true, but their sons look with impatience upon mistakes in this enlightened age of the world. Were it possible for these sons to fall into error then might we make our couch to swim in tears, then would Judah be desolate, and Zion a hissing and a byword among the nations. No union for them, except with the elect—who are already in heaven.

Moral: When we assume the holier-than-thou-attitude, the people who are concerned with the progres of righteousness will pass by on the other side.

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

The Commission on Latin America, of the Disciples of Christ

WITH the exception of a small mission in Cuba, supported by the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, the only work being done in Latin America by the Disciples of Christ, is under the auspices of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. A growing sense of the importance of this work impelled the board to send S. G. Inman last winter on a tour of investigation of our missions in the West Indies and South America, and, as far as possible, of those of other churches also. Mr. Inman has been our missionary to Mexico for ten years, and is easily the leading expert in our brotherhood on the Latin peoples.

He sailed from New York in February, 1914, and visited our stations in Jamaica and Porto Rico, then crossed the Isthmus of Panama, and went by steamer down the west coast of South America, stopping at important points in Ecuador, Peru, and Chile, to study the mission work of other churches. At Santiago, he took the transcontinental train for Buenos Aires, Argentina, where the one mission of the Disciples of Christ in the Neglected Continent is located, and spent some time there, inspecting our work, and the conditions in that city—the fourth largest in the Western Hemisphere, and the greatest south of the equator. His return voyage was up the eastern coast of the continent, with brief visits to places in Uruguay and Brazil.

He reached home in midsummer, and in his report to the Executive Committee of the Woman's Board, he laid upon it the responsibility for larger things in South America so impressively, that a Commission on Latin America was appointed, consisting of Mrs. Anna R. Atwater, A. E. Cory, T. C. Howe, C. T. Paul, with S. G. Inman as chairman, and Ida W. Harrison as Recording Secretary. Some of the objects of the Commission are as follows:

1. A scientific study of the currents of thought, and the economic development of Latin American lands.
2. Definite appeals to the church at home in behalf of those countries, both by a series of leaflets, written by members of the Commission, and by timely articles in our church papers.
3. The preparation of reading courses on Latin America, for workers on the field, as well as those interested at home.
4. A diligent search for specially fitted workers for service in those countries.
5. A closer co-operation with other Mission Boards, Young Men's Christian Associations, and Bible Societies, already working in Latin American fields.

The Commission aims to do its work along broad lines of sympathy with the Latin peoples, seeking to learn their viewpoint, and to meet and help them as friends and brethren.

AN INTERDENOMINATIONAL MOVEMENT.

While this action was taken at the time of Mr. Inman's report of his journey, yet there were other forces impelling us to this step. Many things, too numerous to mention in this brief statement have opened a new era of friendship and kinship between the twenty-one independent republics in the western hemisphere. There is a great awakening in the whole church as to the need and the opportunity for missionary work in these countries, and this found expression in a conference on Missions in Latin America, held in New York City in March, 1913, in which representatives of all boards working there were present. One of the outstanding results of that meeting was a conviction of the necessity for co-operation among mission forces, and this was formally declared in the closing paragraph of the statement adopted by the conference:

"In whatever work is undertaken by the Christian people of this land to discharge more adequately their responsibility for their brothers in the Latin American world, we urge that, wherever practicable, the largest measure of co-operation be employed. May we not endeavor to avoid the mistakes of perpetuating among Latin peoples—familiar with the outward and visible unity of the Roman communion—the inherited divisions of the past, with their resulting weakness? As we endeavor to enthrone our Lord as the Eternal Saviour and King of Latin America, as of all other lands, let us be constrained by the power and pathos of his prayer, 'That they all may be one, that the world may believe.'"

In harmony with this resolution a permanent committee on co-operation in Latin America was appointed, with Dr. Robert E. Speer as chairman. One of the achievements of this committee was a conference of missions and mission boards in Mexico, held in Cincinnati in July, 1914, where advanced steps were taken for a fuller measure of co-operation than has ever obtained before among the Protestant forces in that troubled land.

THE PANAMA CONFERENCE.

The committee is now planning for a conference on Missions in Latin America, to be held at Panama, on Feb. 10-20, 1916. Twenty-four American boards are now co-operating for this great gathering, in behalf of work in the West Indies, Mexico, Central and South America. Mr. Inman was made an agent of this committee on his long journey, and was authorized to present its plans and ideals to mission points in South America. On his return he submitted a report, with a number of recommendations, which met with such approval from the committee, that its chairman, Dr. Speer, appeared personally before the National Board of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions during the Atlanta Convention, and asked it to contribute the services of Mr. Inman for the year and a half before the Panama conference. Our board generously and gladly granted this request, and Mr. Inman is now installed in New York City, as executive secretary of this great interdenominational enterprise.

AN APPEAL TO OUR WHOLE BROTHERHOOD.

This statement is made in accordance with the instructions of the Commission on Latin America of our own church. It appeals not only to the constituency of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, but to the whole brotherhood for an awakened interest, and a new sense of responsibility toward this great and needy field that we have ignored so long.

President Woodrow Wilson said in a speech before a Pan-American meeting about a year ago, "That while the Panama Canal cut two continents asunder physically, it united them spiritually."

It is this spiritual union that we seek. And we trust that we may have sympathetic co-operation, not only with the commission of our own church in whose name this statement is issued, but with the greater work of the Interdenominational Committee in its earnest efforts for the moral and spiritual uplift of our brethren in Latin American lands.

Recording Secretary of the Commission on Latin America, of the Disciples of Christ.

LOVE.

BY CHRISTINA ROSSETTI.

Love, to be love, must walk thy way
And work thy will;
Or if thou say, "Lie still,"
Lie still and pray.

Love will not mar her peaceful face
With care undue—
Faithless and hopeless too
And out of place.

Love here hath vast beatitude;
What shall be hers
Where there is no more curse,
But all is good?

IS CHRISTENDOM CHRISTIAN?

One nation shall ask another nation more concerning its manhood than concerning its markets. That is not idealistic. "Behold, the dreamer cometh," does not at all detract either from the joy of the dreaming or from the reality of the fulfilment of the dream. Always the dream has preceded the reality. Art is but a dream of truth and beauty thrown upon the canvas or embodied in stone or immortalized in literature. Invention is but a dream of utility whose fulfilment we hear in the click of the telegraph and the clatter of the printing press. Music is but a dream of harmony told in symphony and oratorio.

PEACE ESTABLISHED IN CHARACTER.

All our institutions are but dreams of men whom we thought of as only dreamers when they told their dreams. St. Peter's Cathedral, with its mighty dome and its marvelous architecture, was dreamed before the first stone was laid. We dream of a good time coming when in the language of the poet already quoted, the whole world shall give back the song which now the angels sing. When that time of peace shall come it will be a peace founded upon principle, it will be a peace thoroughly established in character and in life. It will be a peace that cannot be shaken by any of the armaments of the world, it will be the only peace for which Jesus Christ stands, or for which His religion stands.

An ancient Egyptian papyrus recently deciphered at London contained a record of the complaint of a wife against her husband, because he refused to let her carry the front-door key of their house.

Golden Text.—Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith Jehovah of hosts. Zech. 4:6.

Ameriean Standard Bible.

Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons. (Used by permission.)

(1) Then Jerubbaal, who is Gideon, and all the people that were with him, rose up early, and encamped beside the spring of Harod: and the eamp of Midian was on the north side of them, by the hill of Moreh, in the valley.

(2) And Jehovah said unto Gideon, The people that are with thee are too many for me to give the Midianites into their hand, lest Israel vaunt themselves against me, saying, Mine own hand hath saved me. (3) Now therefore proelaim in the ears of the people, saying, Whosoever is fearful 'and trembling, let him return and depart from mount Gilead. And there returned of the people twenty and two thousand; and there remained ten thousand.

(4) And Jehovah said unto Gideon, The people are yet too many; bring them down unto the water, and I will try them for thee there: and it shall be, that of whom I say unto thee, This shall go with thee, the same shall go with thee; and of whomsoever I say unto thee, This shall not go with thee, the same shall not go. (5) So he brought down the people unto the water: and Jehovah said unto Gideon, Every one that lappeth of the water with his tongue, as a dog lappeth, him shalt thou set by himself; likewise every one that boweth down upon his knees to drink. (6) And the number of them that lapped, putting their hand to their mouth, was three hundred men: but all the rest of the people bowed down upon their knees to drink water. (7) And Jehovah said unto Gideon, By the three hundred men that lapped will I save you, and deliver the Midianites into thy hand; and let all the people go every man unto his place. (8) So the people took vietuals in their hand, and their trumpets; and he sent all the men of Israel every man unto his tent, but retained the three hundred men; and the eamp of Midian was beneath him in the valley.

(16) And he divided the three hundred men into three eompanies, and he put into the hands of all of them trumpets, and empty pitehers, with torehes within the pitehers. (17) And he said unto them, Look on me, and do likewise: and, behold, when I come to the outermost part of the eamp, it shall be that, as I do, so shall ye do. (18) When I blow the trumpet, I and all that are with me, then blow ye the trumpets also on every side of all the eamp, and say, For Jehovah and for Gideon.

(19) So Gideon, and the hundred men that were with him, eame unto the outermost part of the eamp in the beginning of the middle wateh, when they had but newly set the wateh: and they blew the trumpets, and brake in pieees the pitehers that were in their hands. (20) And the three eompanies blew the trumpets, and brake the pitehers, and held the torehes in their left hands, and the trumpets in their right hands wherewith to blow; and they eried, The sword of Jehovah and of Gideon. (21) And they stood every man in his place round about the eamp; and all the host ran; and they shouted, and put them to flight. (22) And they blew the three hundred trumpets, and Jehovah set every man's sword against his fellow, and against all the host; and the host fled as far as Beth-shittah toward Zererah, as far as the border of Abel-meholah, by Tabbath. (23) And the men of Israel were gathered together out of Naphtali, and out of Asher, and out of all Manasseh, and pursued after Midian.

1. Jerubbaal. Let Baal contend. A. R. V. m. See Judges 6:28-32.—Harod. i. e. tremblings. By the hill of Moreh. Or, "From the hill of Moreh" onwards "in the valley" R. V. m.

2. The people are too many. The small army would tend to magnify God's part in the victory over the Midianites. Israel vaunt themselves. Boast, magnify themselves. Mine own hand hath saved me. The author would have us realize that to God belongs the victory.

3. Whosoever is fearful and trembling. Jehovah cannot use men who are discouraged. He will not give the victory to men who are running the other way. Depart from Mount Gilead. These words present great difficulty. The meaning of the verb is unknown, and Mount Gilead is east of the Jordan. On the whole it is better to read Gilboa in the place of Gilead.

4. The people are yet too many. The numbers are still too great; and Jehovah prescribes another test. I will try them for thee there. Jehovah will test them. The figure is taken from the refining of precious metals.

5. The test was one of attitude, which in physical and moral warfare has been more valuable than strength or skill. Jehovah must have soldiers who appreciate the importance of their task, and who are willing to present their life a living sacrifice for His service.

6. The number of those who lapped. Those who drank by using their hand for a cup. The rest of the people. Those who kneeled to drink from the body of water.

7. By the three hundred men—I will save you. The three hundred picked men. The men who had consecrated their all to the service of Jehovah. Every man to his own place. Which is to say that all of the rest of the people went to their homes.

8. Camp of Midian was beneath him in the valley. This corresponds to v. 1, and furnishes an introduction to the surprise of the Midianite Camp in Vs. 16-22.

16. Three companies. The purpose of this division was to make a simultaneous attack on three sides of the enemies' camp. Put in their hands trumpets, pitchers, and torches. The jars were for the purpose of concealing the light until all were in readiness, then they were broken with a startling crash, to confuse the enemy.

17. Look on me and do likewise. Gideon's instruction to his men was to wait until he gave the signal to make the unique charge.

18. Then blow the trumpet. The command was first given by Gideon to his own command and it gave the order to the other two companies. They were to blow their trumpets and shout "for Jehovah and Gideon."

The Inner Circle

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

In these days of padded church rolls, of most remarkable reports of evangelistic campaigns, of mob Sunday-schools, and of general inflation it is good to read the story of how God does business.

Rev. John R. Ewers.

GO HOME.

God did not want Gideon to be liable to the "We did it" charge. He wanted the glory to go where it belonged. Not the "princely pastor;" not the "gang of rooters;" nothing human at all, but rather the quiet spirit of the divine Gideon, with his chosen band of 300, is a mighty rebuke to the number-juggler with his "Whoop 'em up" stunts. So Gideon weeded out his army. The timid, the half-converted were told to "depart early." It is better to "depart early"—it saves much labor for the church clerk! It is a long, painful process to allow the camp followers to straggle home when they get ready. "Now if anyone feels timid about tackling the enemy," said Gideon, "it would be better to retire now, for to retire when the enemy sees you do it is not considered good form in military circles." Two out of three "departed early." The remarkable thing was that so many remained!

STILL TOO MANY.

Evidently Gideon was not working for a mob. He imposed a clever test. Leading his army to the river he commanded them all to drink. Some flung aside shield and spear, and, stretching out upon the river's edge, proceeded to get one good drink. Others, retaining their weapons and keeping watchful eyes upon the country round about, dipped up the water and lapped it out of their hands. There were only 300 of these watchful, high-tensioned fellows but Gideon was willing to commit his cause to them. What! Only 300? Yes, 300 and God, you know, are better than 3,000 without God. That's the point: you must not send God home and try to do it yourselves. The teacher cannot get along without God any better than the evangelist. Between you and me, the other fellows were the best trumpeters! When it came to horn-tooting they were the boys.

CURIOUS WEAPONS.

Pitchers, torches and horns. Anything would do for it was God who was going to win this battle. The lesson clearly states that the idea was to show that God was the victor and not men. "If God is for us who can be against us?" Wesley and his Holy Club at Oxford, derided by the cultured worldlings—but God was with Gideon. Williams College students under a haystack during a rainstorm, praying for missions—God was with Gideon. Spener in the University of Halle, with all Germany against him, but that little study full of praying Christians kindled new spiritual life in Germany. Thomas Campbell and the Washington Association against the world—but God was with Gideon. "Fear not, little flock, it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom." "One man with God is a majority." Nothing puts iron into a man's blood like remembering that he is doing God's work and God will not let his work fail. "God is for me." "Not by might, nor by power but by my Spirit, says the Lord of hosts."

ENCOURAGEMENT.

This story brings a great message of encouragement to many little groups. You cannot judge a thing by size. We all do our utmost to build up our churches in solid fashion but let us pray God that we may never come to rely upon numbers, wealth, culture, social prestige or intellectual brilliance. The spirit of God alone can make a church great.

THREE HUNDRED HEROES.

Six hundred at Balaklava, 300 in Jezreel, how many in your class? In the New York Times a business man writes of his admiration for the brave men of Europe and asks himself whether he would have the nerve to be a brave soldier. Each man needs to keenly search himself in these days and determine whether he is made of hero-stuff. Would he stand fire? Would he fight? We need not search long nor far. There are moral equivalents for war. Go alone into your room. Put yourself through this catechism: (1) Have I side-stepped the difficult task? (2) Have I been afraid to stand for a reform on account of my business? (3) Have I put my money generously into unselfish enterprises? (4) Have I allowed other men in the church to do my work? (5) Have I, when some difficult and dangerous proposition came up, softly slipped away in order that I might not be in any danger of sacrifice or suffering? I tell you such questions search a man's soul. Stand up to it. Be a man. Don't be one of the timid sisters who went home!

THE MEANING OF BAPTISM

By CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON
Editor of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

THE CHURCHMAN (EPISCOPAL).

Under the title "The Meaning of Baptism" Mr. C. C. Morrison, the editor of The Christian Century, has given an interesting summary of the topic, especially as it is related to the history of modern sectarianism. In so doing he brings out more than one little known fact. The Disciples, to whose fellowship Mr. Morrison belongs, practice rebaptizing for those who have not been immersed, not, it is explained, because they do not recognize them as Christians, but because immersion is held to as the only Catholic mode of baptism. Mr. Morrison is not in sympathy with this position. He shows that baptism by immersion has figured little in the divisions of the Church and will doubtless likewise figure little in its unity. The Baptists did not become a separate people because of their practice of baptism by immersion; neither did the Disciples. The Baptists opposed infant baptism and for a long period practiced baptism of adults by sprinkling. Their plea was a regenerate church membership. A writer in The Christian Union Quarterly says that in the origin of the Disciples baptism by immersion did not figure at all, and when Thomas Campbell was brought face to face with it he was greatly disturbed. Their plea was the union of the divided House of Christ. There are one hundred and eighty-six distinct communions in America. More than four-fifths of these practice baptism by sprinkling and pouring and in consequence of their common baptism they are no closer together than Baptists and Methodists; neither are Baptists and Disciples any closer together because of their common baptism by immersion than Disciples and Presbyterians. If baptism by immersion be such a hindrance to the union of the Church, what explanation can we give for the four-fifths of the American communions not getting together on their common baptism by sprinkling and pouring, or the remaining one-fifth not getting together on its common baptism by immersion? If the entire one hundred and eighty-six communions practiced baptism by immersion it would not unite the Church in America. It would remove one item from controversy, but we would have a long way to go then. The need of these times is a baptism so thoroughly Christian that those who have been baptized will cease bearing false witness against one another and cease hating each other.

THE STANDARD (BAPTIST) CHICAGO.

The author of this echo of ancient controversy confesses his reluctance to arouse again the heated declamations of the past which have been in process of quieting under the influence of the insistent questions of the living present, but his excuse is a new thesis and the abiding interest of certain denominations in the baptism question. The gist of the books is the unfolding of the principle that insistence on a mode of physical baptism is but a form of legalism against which Christ always declaimed; that baptism is not a personal act of legalistic obedience to a specific command, but a social act of initiation into a social institution. As such the church may determine the mode, and since all great communions are agreed that immersion is not objectionable and some consider it indispensable, that form of baptism is preferable. The argument throughout is good and there are conclusions that are worthy of careful consideration. The final summary justifies the position of the Disciples in their general platform, except that it socializes instead of individualizes the act of baptism.

CENTRAL CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE (METHODIST)

THE MODE OF BAPTISM.

It cannot be stated too strongly that it is childish to try to bring together all Christian bodies, which the Disciples assert to be their maximum aim, so long as they flourish their pitchforks and fork into the outer darkness all Christians who will not stultify their intelligence and submit to a second baptism in which they do not believe.

The Rev. Charles Clayton Morrison, editor of The Christian Century, a fine type of scholar and gentleman, who has brought a crown of thorns upon his temples (albeit not on his intellect) by speaking quite plainly to his people on this matter, has shown that baptism by immersion has cut but little figure in promoting the divisions of the Church. Originally the Disciples did not baptize by immersion. Neither did the Baptists. The Baptists for a long time have practiced baptism by immersion.

A writer in the Christian Union Quarterly, the Disciple organ, ably edited by Dr. Peter Ainslie—says that in their origin the Disciples made nothing of baptism by immersion. Then why should it now? Is there a newer revelation? In truth, there is not.

BAPTIST COMMONWEALTH.

The purpose of this book is to aid the cause of what is coming to be known as "open membership," that is the acceptance of any "baptism" preferred by the applicant for membership. The author has chiefly in view his own denomination, the Disciples, but includes Baptists and all other immersionists in his discussion. His method, however, is more radical than that usually pursued by Baptists who contend for the same position. He maintains that baptism in the New Testament does not mean any definite act, but does mean induction into a church by any ceremony that may be acceptable. This assumption is the spinal column of his whole discussion, which takes a wide range and runs into many situations where we are not able to accompany him. He bases this contention on the assumption that in the Greek which the Jews of Christ's time understood, the Greek word Baptisma had lost that exclusive meaning of immersion which it is universally understood to have in classic Greek, and had come to mean solely induction into a social fellowship, first as proselyte baptism among the Jews, and second, as baptism into the church membership among Christians. He says that a hundred (or is it a thousand?) uses of the word in classic Greek are of no value in interpreting the New Testament. My inquiries among those presumably well informed has failed to find one agreeing with the author.

THE EPWORTH HERALD (METHODIST).

The interest in such doctrines as baptism is seen in the publication of such a book as Philip Mauro's. It is written from the anabaptist point of view. The newer spirit, with a strict adherence to immersion, too, as his own point of view, is that found in The Meaning of Baptism, by Charles Clayton Morrison, of The Christian Century.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR JANUARY 20.

Going Forward. Ex. 14:1-20; Phil. 3:7-21.

"There are two lines, if not more," says a distinguished writer, "in which we may look forward with hope to progress in the future. In the first place, increased knowledge of nature, of the properties of matter and of the phenomena which surround us, may afford our children advantages far greater even than those which we ourselves enjoy. Secondly, the extension and improvement of education, the increasing influence of science and art, of poetry and music, of literature and religion—of all the powers which are tending to good, will, we may reasonably hope, raise man and make him more master of himself, more able to appreciate and enjoy his advantages, and to realize the truth of the Italian proverb, that wherever light is, there is joy."

THE SPIRIT OF PROGRESS.

We take it for granted that all sensible men believe in progress. They do not. There are vast populations that detest it. A letter from an oriental official to a western inquirer is often quoted to illustrate the attitude of the orthodox Mohammedan toward scientific inquiry. "The thing you ask of me is both difficult and useless. Although I have passed all my days in this place, I have neither counted the houses nor inquired into the number of the inhabitants; and as to what one person loads on his mules and the other stows in the bottom of his ship, that is no business of mine. Listen, O my son! There is no wisdom equal to belief in God."

SPURIOUS PROGRESS.

The notion that we must be moving on so possesses some of us that we are always busy making changes in our methods of work and introducing new machinery without much thought as to whether the new methods and machinery are better than the old. What we demand is change. We pull down the old barn and put up a new one that is neither better nor larger than the old. We run around a circle and imagine that we are going somewhere. We establish new societies and reorganize old ones and then congratulate ourselves on the progress we have made, although we are unable to point to a deeper and wider knowledge of life or to a greater passion for righteousness as evidence that we have gained something worth while. We have a belief that because the world is changing it is growing better. This is not a bad sort of belief but it needs watching. Degeneration may be taking place while we are standing aside to let the world march on to perfection.

OBSTACLES TO PROGRESS.

The situation and conduct of the Israelites at the Red Sea are not strange to men who try to leave slavery of any kind for the land of freedom. The way of Israel seemed to be blocked. Retreat was impossible; to go forward was impossible. There was loud wailing. There was regret that an attempt had been made to gain freedom. The leader was blamed because he had awakened patriotic feeling and had induced the people to leave the house of bondage. Of course, we do not come to the sea and have the choice between drowning and being cut to pieces by the enemy, but we have experiences that are essentially similar. We cry out against the leader who has dared to bring us into a place of difficulty and danger. We long for a quiet place to die and for a conventional burial ground. Then it is that we need to hear the voice of God, speaking through whatever agency he may select, saying, "Go forward." The way out of obstacles is forward to the truth and the character that are marks of free men.

Disciples Table Talk

A CO-OPERATIVE SERVICE.

It is now generally acknowledged that The Christian Century's news service is pre-eminent among the journals of the Disciples of Christ. For comprehensiveness of outlook, many-sidedness of interest, originality of interpretation—in a word, real newsiness, this service is unique. It has taken much effort to bring it to the high degree of competence which is the delight of all our readers. Again and again we are asked how it is done. "Where do you get all that juicy news from?" inquires a layman who says he has long since wearied of the dull, visionless reports inflated with self-praise with which the conventional paper fills its columns.

Our answer is that our readers give it to us. They have learned what we want, what our readers want, and they send us live "stories" of occurrences and observations in their local or neighboring churches, knowing that what they send is to be treated not as an article to be run in the exact form in which they have written it, but as data to be edited in the office or rejected altogether if the news editor regards it as either uninteresting or not significant.

This co-operation of our readers, and especially the pastors of our churches, is one of the things for which we are sincerely grateful. Among those who lend a helping hand in this fine service are scores of the busiest and ablest pastors of our largest churches. They are modest men, but they rightly reason that instead of its being immodest or forward for them to inform their church newspaper of what seems to them good news, it is their duty to do so, even though the news does involve their own names. Our correspondents have the good sense not to accompany their news "story" with an apology. During the coming year it is our desire to greatly expand this news-gathering co-operation between this department and our readers. We desire that every local parish paper published in our brotherhood, and every church calendar or bulletin be mailed regularly and promptly to this office.

We ask all our readers to be on the lookout in their own churches and districts for events or utterances that would add to the interest and completeness of the department of Disciples Table Talk. Especially do we wish news that brings good tidings of social service activities in the church; forward steps in religious education; novel and helpful things in church methods; union movements promoted or engaged in by our churches; significant or timely utterances of our ministers; and any event or movement indicating that the churches are taking Christ's religion more seriously.

To be still more concrete, here are some illustrations of what The Christian Century considers "news:" Seventh Street Church, Richmond, Va., is making an effort to get each of its organizations, Sunday-school classes, etc., behind some definite social task; some of the classes, for instance, are doing Christian work in the slums. In a recent number we reported that H. H. Peters, of Paris, Ill., had taken a hand in the problem of the city's water-supply, and that he is getting results. That is news. During the recent meeting at Bloomington, Ill., Dr. Combs delivered an eloquent plea for religious tolerance. That was good tidings, and the "Century" published his statement last week. The church at Norfolk, Va., has recently expended $50,000 on a building intended primarily for the work of religious education. That is heartening and helpful news. There has just come to this office the story of an evangelistic meeting in a Disciples church that was planned on such broadly Christian lines that the other churches of the town asked to co-operate and at the close the Presbyterian, Methodist and Disciple ministers united in a baptismal service using the Disciples' baptistery. That is news, good news, showing that Disciples, and other people too, can practice Christian unity when they have a mind to.

We ask our readers to advise us of such news, either at length or in brief as they may judge the matter deserves.

This is one way in which each reader can pay his debt to all the other readers who are rendering a similar service to him.

Federated Evangelism.

J. L. Thompson went to Redwood Falls, Minn., to hold evangelistic meetings in the Disciples' church there but, finding the neighboring churches cordial, extended an invitation to them to join in the enterprise. The Presbyterian church did so by formal vote, and in the meeting that followed 233 people made the confession of faith, 80 of them choosing to affiliate with the Presbyterian church, and 5 with the Methodists. The baptistry of the Disciples' church was used each evening by ministers of all the denominations and the converts were inducted into the church. The spirit following the meetings was the very best.

R. A. Long Speaks to "Down and Outs."

R. A. Long, millionaire lumberman of Kansas City, and prominent member of the Independence Blvd. church, spoke to the "down and outs" that were being fed at the Helping Hand Institute on Dec. 25. Eight hundred men were being served with a Christmas dinner. The dinner was given by the brotherhood of the local church. Mr. Long announced that he would resume construction on several buildings on his 1,600 acre farm near Lees Summit, stopped by the war, which would give work to many of those who applied. This announcement, coupled with Mr. Long's expressed wish that other Kansas City business men would resume their halted work, brought cheers from the crowd. Mr. Long said: "This world is a wonderful place. Our stations in life are different. Each man to his talents, and only a few of us possess the talent of money making. But I tell you that talent is useless, perhaps, unless it is used to help and aid our fellowmen. I believe God is right here, in your hearts and mine, and I believe we will best serve him by serving others." "In times of greatest stress, when business hangs heaviest on me," he went on, "I often turn to the Twenty-third Psalm to try to come closer to God. If you are not clothed with a Bible, get one, carry it with you, and when the discouraged months come upon you, read from it."

Minister Reads "The Signs of the Times."

Roy B. Bowers, minister at Ocala, Fla., announces a series of sermons under the general caption of "The Signs of the Times." He proposes in this series to interpret modern tendencies. The sermon topics are as follows: "The Increase of Divorce and the Laxity of the Marriage Relation," "The Modern Woman Movement," "Woman Suffrage," "Women as Job Hunters," "The Appalling Decrease in the Ministry," "The Increase of Doubt and Scepticism," "Industrial Revolutions," "Trust Busting," "The Social Service Movement," "The Trend of Modern Educational Ideals."

Church Leaders Have a Social.

A social for the leaders of the local church is the latest idea at Central church, Rockford, Ill. On the evening of Jan. 6, about forty people who represent the organizational machinery of the congregation gathered for a social evening in the church edifice and planned for the new year. The function was called a mid-winter picnic.

Dr. R. H. Crossfield Convocation Speaker.

Valparaiso University, Valparaiso, Ind., secured Dr. R. H. Crossfield of Transylvania University to speak at the quarterly convocation of that institution recently and also at the annual meeting of the corporation which conducts it. Dr. Crossfield reports the number of ministerial students of the Disciples to be increasing. There are 1107 such students in 27 institutions which are co-operating with the Board of Education. A larger percentage of the students are coming from towns of considerable size and cities. They are coming better prepared for the high schools and with plans to stay longer than formerly.

Asked to Reconsider Resignation.

J. T. Houser of Davenport, Ia., recently resigned to enter the evangelistic field. The church on Dec. 27 voted almost unanimously by a rising vote to ask him to reconsider his resignation and there is a petition in circulation which already has nearly six hundred names, which appeals to the pastor to remain. He had planned to enter evangelistic work but meanwhile had received calls to some good churches, among them Johnson City, Tenn., and a suburban church at Berkeley, Cal. He has not announced his decision yet but will do so at an early date.

Church Helps Salvation Army.

First church, of Augusta, Ga., where Howard T. Cree is pastor, helped the Salvation Army at Christmas time. A Christmas tree was given to the local army organization and the children of the Sunday-school gave many substantial gifts to be distributed by the Salvation Army. It is understood that this practice is to be continued from year to year.

Missionary Speaks to Young Men.

Guy S. Inman, C. W. B. M. missionary in Mexico, and just now executive secretary of the Latin American Conference to be held in Panama in 1916, spoke before the Young Men's Society, a Bible class of Central church, New York, on Dec. 27. He presented the needs of the field where he is accustomed to labor and the privileges of missionary work. This class is usually taught by P. F. Jerome, a business man of the city.

Farewell Meeting at Cedar Rapids, Ia.

The Ministerial Association of Cedar Rapids, Ia., held a union service in the church of which Walter M. White is pastor on a recent Sunday evening to express the esteem of the group of churches in that city for Dr. E. R. Burkhalter, who is the retiring minister of the First Presbyterian church of Cedar Rapids. Walter M. White presented the resolutions that had been passed by the association.

Pastor Preaches in a Theater.

The Y. M. C. A. of Augusta, Ga., holds Sunday afternoon meetings in a theater called "Dreamland." They invited Howard T. Cree, pastor of First church, to speak there the Sunday afternoon after Christmas. There was a special musical program and a large audience to hear the well-known and popular speaker of Augusta.

Reception to a Missionary.

The third division of the C. W. B. M. auxiliary at Fairfield, Ia., held a reception recently at the home of a member for W. C. McDougal of India who is a missionary on furlough, and in the service of the C. W. B. M. Mr. McDougal gave an interesting talk on India which was much appreciated by the 75 ladies who were present. A two course luncheon in which lavender and white was the color scheme, was served.

Dinner Served after the Sermon.

The Brotherhood in Indiana Ave. church, South Bend, Ind., attended the morning service in a body on Dec. 20 and listened to a sermon entitled "Gist." After the service, a dinner was served in the church and speeches were made by some of the prominent laymen.

White Decorations for Christmas.

First church, of Seattle, decorated its edifice in white for the Christmas season this year. An immaculate white cross adorned the platform. At the Christmas exercise, a report was read by investigators as to the condition of the poor of the city and a most liberal offering was placed at the foot of the cross by the assembled congregation. A feature of the program was singing by a boys' chorus.

Auxiliary Receives a Bequest.

The Auxiliary of the C. W. B. M. at the University Place church, Champaign, Ill., received a bequest of a hundred dollars from one of its members recently. Mrs. Emily U. Branch passed away leaving an estate of eleven thousand dollars. She remembered her favorite organization in this way and left the remainder of her estate to her husband and sons.

A. L. Ward is Happily Surprised.

A. L. Ward, of Lebanon, Ind., came home from a holiday trip at Indianapolis on a recent evening to find his house filled with the members of his congregation. A member of the official board presented the pastor and his wife each a handsome leather rocking chair. Light refreshments were served and a very pleasant evening was spent.

Sunday-school Class Cheers Poor Children.

The Mary and Martha class of Central church, Jacksonville, Ill., decided to do something for the poor on Christmas. They gathered up twenty poor children for a party at the church and gave them a Christmas tree and Christmas presents. There were refreshments and games. The young ladies were much interested in this extension of the Yuletide cheer.

Happy Though Married.

To be happy though married is proposed as one of our modern problems by some persons, but Dr. B. B. Tyler, formerly pastor of the South Broadway church of Denver is possessor of the happy secret and he ought to know for he has had 52 years of married life. He was interviewed on his wedding anniversary and said: "Mrs. Tyler and I have only been separated two months since our marriage. We've traveled together, crossed the Atlantic eight times, seen the same sights and heard the same sounds, and now, in later life, we are even happier in having the same reminiscences." For young swains Dr. Tyler gave the following advice from his store: "Don't get married until you are crazy in love and you haven't any sense left. That's just the condition I was in when I married Sally Burton on Christmas day fifty-two years ago, and I haven't gotten over it yet."

English Minister Succeeds in America.

J. H. Versey was called to the Cadillac, Mich., church a year ago from England and he has had a very prosperous year in the land of Uncle Sam. The building was remodeled at a cost of $3,500 and besides this the congregation raised the money and paid off a thousand dollar mortgage. Fifteen hundred dollars of this money was raised outside of the membership which shows the standing of the church in the community. The next point of attack is to secure an adequate heating plant.

Another Location Offered for Assembly.

The task of finding a location for the proposed National Central Assembly, to be located in Michigan and to be conducted for Disciples, is a difficult one. The latest news is an offer from the Christian Outing Grounds at Long Lake to allow the use of this location for the proposed assembly. The committee has not yet announced a decision.

An Aged Disciple Goes to His Reward.

James Hutchinson was 99 years old last May. He was vigorous and took care of himself all his life. During the summer he fell ill with the heat and some time ago passed away. He was a charter member of the church at Chillicothe, Mo., and was the last of the charter members to pass away. He has lived in Chillicothe for 75 years and was universally beloved. The community long since conferred upon him the affectionate title of "Uncle." In 1910 he gave a house and lot to the National Benevolent Association and the Bible College of Missouri jointly. He was always liberal, though a man of modest circumstances.

Students Turn to the Church.

The students at the state university at Columbia, Mo., have been turning to the service of the church. A young man has recently given up the work of teaching for the ministry and two have joined the Volunteer Band this year. These good results have come from the work of the Bible College which operates in connection with the university, of which G. D. Edwards is the dean.

The Educational Day Manual.

The Board of Education has issued a manual for the use of those to prepare to observe educational day on Jan. 17. This interesting booklet contains an address by Prof. E. E. Snoddy of Translyvania University; sermon outlines by G. D. Edwards of the Bible College of Missouri, Prof. Charles E. Underwood of Butler college, and President R. H. Crossfield of the Board of Education; a brief statement of what six other religious bodies do for Christian education and practical suggestions for the observance of the day. The document is full of meat and the material will doubtless be given a wide circulation.

Disciple Boys Defeat Presbyterians.

Central church of Wichita, Kans., has a basket ball team in connection with its Sunday-school. They played recently with the team representing the First United Presbyterian church of that city and defeated them with a score of 41 to 6. The local paper says the Disciple boys "romped all over the floor with their opponents."

A New Book Coming.

Peter Clark Macfarlane, the author of "Those Who Have Come Back," writes from San Francisco, "The first draught of my new novel is complete. It will require six months' work yet. It has a sort of unofficial clergyman for a hero, and treats some problems of considerable interest to the world if not the church."

Thousands Attend Christmas Exercise

The Christmas tree provided by the Auburn, N. Y., church of which E. W. Allen is pastor, was attended by over three thousand children. The church has been renting a theater for Sunday evening services this fall in order to reach the non-church-going population of the city. A thousand people has been the average evening congregation. The largest theater in the city was engaged for the Christmas exercises and tickets were handed out on the street by the church members to every child that looked like he might be forgotten at the Christmas time. The tickets were provided for children between the ages of six to sixteen. The afternoon exercise for the children was religious all the way through. The Christmas story from Luke was told. The music by the orchestra of twenty pieces was sacred music, and all the vocal selections were in keeping with the occasion.

When the curtain arose and the big orchestra burst forth in melody, there was unchecked and deafening applause and shouts and stamping of little feet. And there was cause, for the spacious stage of the theatre was a fairyland. In the centre, towering up into the flies, stood a proud evergreen, brilliant as a magnet, holding a thousand falling stars of green, red, blue and white. And at the side covering half of the expanse of the stage was a huge billboard picturing the birth of the Savior and above it hung a great white electric star. In the background was a forest scene.

The programme was in perfect keeping with the occasion. Following the overture the hundreds of children opened forth into the old carol, While Shepherds Watched Their Flocks by Night, a piece sung in all the schools of the city. And there were fervor and glad notes of joy in the volume of praise which almost shook the building.

In the evening another meeting was held in the same theater for the grown-ups. The same program with the exception of the music was given at the evening meeting and a second audience of three thousand came in.

"I have been thinking for weeks," Mr. Allen said, "that the people ought to give some special expression of confidence in the nation's ruler. And after prayer and much meditation I have come to the conclusion that no better time than now could be found to present to you such a letter for your endorsement.

"One hundred years ago last Thursday night the Treaty of Ghent was signed between the United States and England. And now on that vast boundary line between us and Canada there is not a single fortress. All between us is peace. For years we have been prepared for peace and peace has resulted. At this time in commemorating the birth of the Prince of Peace and at the same time remembering the Treaty of Ghent I believe it is altogether fitting and proper that we should endorse the policy of President Wilson who has done so much toward preserving concord in our land."

When the entire audience rose in mute endorsement, he continued: "I think that this kind of expression from every community in the United States would do more for the peace movement than a million dollars voted for the cause."

The meeting was then asked to endorse a letter to President Wilson the text of which is as follows:

"To the President of the United States:

"Dear Sir:

"Fifteen hundred Christian citizens in a meeting at the Auburn Auditorium tonight voted to send you an expression of our great appreciation of your administration's wise and peaceful policy.

"We commend you for your tactful expressions in regard to maintaining a strict but friendly neutrality with all warring nations.

"We trust that your leadership, executive and legislative, may be a continued success in keeping our nation upon a peace footing, since the one hundred years of the Treaty of Ghent have demonstrated the sound judgment, 'in times of peace prepare for peace.'

"We pray that you may soon have the coveted opportunity of using the great powers of your high office to bring about an amicable mediation among the nations now at war.

"We pledge ourselves, at this season of commemorating the advent of the Prince of Peace, to support you in promoting His Spirit of love and kindness to all mankind, which we are persuaded is your exalted purpose. We petition the God of love and King of Kings to grant you needed strength and wisdom in your arduous labors in behalf of the people of these United States and the families of all mankind."

The effect of these celebrations has been to bring to Auburn and the whole country about a deeper sense of the significance of the Birthday of the Prince of Peace.

Class Debates Over Missions.

The Loyal Sons Class of First church, Davenport, Ia., had a debate on the evening of December 16 on the subject "Resolved, that foreign mission work is of more importance than home mission work." There were two speakers on each side and among the judges was J. T. Houser, pastor of the church. The points made by the speakers were impressive and the debate was, by a narrow margin, awarded to the affirmative.

Young People See "Mother Goose."

The C. E. Society of Dodge City, Kans., planned an unusual evening for its members recently by giving a Mother Goose fair. The visitors that evening were introduced to Jack Horner, the old woman who lived in a shoe, and others who had been imported from the land of legend. The evening was a mirthful one full of good fellowship.

A Reading in Place of Sermon.

James C. Burkhardt is pastor at Muskogee, Okla., and he recently varied from his usual Sunday evening service by giving a reading in place of the sermon. The selection was from the pen of Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, a prominent New York pastor, and was entitled, "Christmas Makers." This was given on the Sunday before Christmas. The innovation was appreciated by the congregation.

Christmas Message Printed and Circulated.

F. F. Walters of Wichita Falls, Texas, preached an able sermon on December 20, and on request the sermon was printed in tract form and circulated through the community as a Christmas greeting. The subject of the sermon was "Christ's Gift to Mankind."

Beatrice, Neb., Church Grows.

The annual meeting of Beatrice, Neb., church was held on December 14 and the various departments of the church made their annual reports. The report of the pastor, C. F. Stevens, showed an active ministry. He made 1040 calls, had 19 weddings, conducted 18 funerals and received into the church 85 people. The church now has a resident membership of 1050, which is the largest in the state. The congregation raised and expended $11,673.92 during the year for all purposes. Of this, $3,448.37 was contributed to missions. It is stated that not all missionary contributions went through the hands of the treasurer, as some individuals send their offerings direct, allowing the national societies to credit the church with the amount.

Evangelist Lectures for Charity.

Herbert Yeuell recently assisted the associated charities of Elwood, Ind., in raising a neat sum of money for the poor of the city. The Red Men donated their Wigwam and the illustrated lecture was given in their hall. Graystone Lewis, the singer who travels with Evangelist Yeuell, also helped in the charity entertainment.

Will Publish Volume of Sermons

W. A. Schultz who has been evangelizing in Texas for twenty years is arranging for the publication of a volume of his evangelistic sermons. He recently visited C. C. Klingman in San Angelo to have his manuscripts examined by his friend.

Death Interrupts Social Gathering.

In the midst of a festive evening at Marshalltown, Ia., church, at which occasion the members of the church were honoring the wife of the new pastor, Mrs. George L. Thore, gloom suddenly fell upon the company for death had invaded their ranks. Mrs. Dan Graham, an old member, and much esteemed, dropped dead with heart disease. She was seventy years of age.

Will Go to India.

Mr. and Mrs. C. V. Dunn, who have been living recently at New Philadelphia, O., but who are moving to Salina, Kans., to take charge of the church work there, have volunteered for the mission field and are waiting to be sent out by one of the national boards. Mrs. Dunn has taken a six year course in Bethany and two years at Yale in preparing for this service.

Church Remembers a Widow.

Religion pure and undefiled is to visit the widows and orphans in their affliction, and this consideration has led the Ladies' Aid Society at Kokomo, Ind., to arrange a food sale recently for the benefit of a very deserving widow of the congregation. The food sale was conducted in a local newspaper office. The community gave very liberal patronage to this significant enterprise.

Pastor Discusses Disciples Journalism

Before a session of the Chicago Disciples' Ministers' meeting, Austin Hunter, pastor of Jackson Boulevard church, recently read a fine spirited appreciation of the function of church journalism. His paper was non-partisan and constructive. A single section devoted to the dangers inherent in such journalism dealt with certain concrete conditions which will be of general interest. Mr. Hunter said in part:

First of all there is danger that our movement shall be exploited for private profit. This is an intensely commercial age in which we live. Men are interested in accumulating wealth: the spirit of mammon

Rev. Austin Hunter, of Jackson Boulevard Church, Chicago, who declares that the desire for private profit is chief among the dangers in religious journalism.

controls much in all our affairs. Our publishers are human and it would not be surprising if in some instances the temptation for private profit would be a controlling factor with them. They are answerable to no one except the brotherhood at large and almost the only channels through which this brotherhood can voice its complaints are the papers themselves which are published by those against whom they might complain. So the publisher has the situation quite largely in his own hands. A most superficial study of our papers will reveal the mammon spirit too often prevalent. A religious viewpoint is advocated, not always because the editor would die for his position, but because it will increase circulation and enlarge Sunday-school supply orders. Special write-ups of churches are made with the understanding that a special canvass for subscriptions shall also be made. The competition for the patronage of the brotherhood is sharp and favors are shown and criticisms directed ostensibly for the purpose of securing as large a measure of this patronage as possible. Campaigns and rallies are promulgated among the churches always with a corresponding campaign for subscriptions for the paper fathering the campaign. A brotherhood paper demands patronage on the grounds that a part of its profits are turned over to our missionary agencies, and a private publishing house likewise demands the patronage on the grounds that their private contributions exceed the public contributions of the brotherhood house, and that they support a larger circle of missionary agencies. In the meantime it is difficult to convince the unsophisticated that the motives of either are unselfish. Fake advertisements are frequently admitted because they are profitable. A reputable doctor some time ago pointed out quite a list of unethical ads. Until the protests became too strong promoters preyed upon the brotherhood through the columns of our church papers. (The only time I have ever been financially fleeced has been through the purchase of stocks editorially endorsed in our papers.)

I do not mean by this to charge our papers with a wholly mercenary spirit, but merely to call attention to this as a clearly manifested danger.

A second danger is to be found in sowing the seeds of suspicion and discord. In common with all religious bodies we have different schools of thought. As Carey Morgan said we have some who travel too fast and certainly some who travel too slow. In these days of religious transition there is need of patience and forbearance. The general sincerity of our brethren, ultra conservative and ultra liberal, may be safely assumed. Yet there is much suspicion in the air. It is not chargeable to any one school of thought; sinners are to be found in both camps. The extreme conservatives think the liberals are surrendering the plea, while the ultra liberals are confident that the conservatives have long since surrendered it. Our papers create and keep alive the spirit of suspicion. A list of the sweet epithets used on both sides would cover many pages and bring the blush of shame to every one seeking that charity which "thinketh no evil." For one I have often wished our papers would reach us the first of the week instead of the last that I might have a sweeter temper for the Sunday services. There is entirely too much partisanship in our journalism. The most unfortunate feature of it all is that it has extended to our missionary societies. Their work has been severely handicapped by the suspicions created by our papers. These papers should "endeavor to keep the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace," they should all "strive with one spirit for the faith of the gospel." "Let there be no divisions among you" should be heeded by editors as well as others, and "mark those who create divisions among you" should be applied to editors as well as to trouble makers in the local churches. As a people we have stood for the greatest tolerance and liberality consistent with loyalty to the gospel. We should allow no one, not even an editor, to spy out our liberty and we should not allow them to spy out the liberty of any other child of God.

A third danger of our journalism is to be found in the undue power given the publishers. We have heard much in recent years of a "paper pope." The charge is not without some foundation, only there is a plurality of popes. Our papers can make or unmake men so far as their standing among the churches is concerned. A publisher possesses power out of all proportion to other men of equal and superior ability in the brotherhood. The controversies over the management of conventions is often the outbreakings of the envious cravings for leadership among our publishing interests. Almost the entire controversy over the General Convention proposition is a matter of our publishing houses. There is fear that there may be a power that in some fashion might control or regulate our publishing concerns. Its advocacy on the one side and its opposition on the other seems largely to center in those interests.

A few years ago Chas. Sheldon edited for one week the leading daily of Topeka in a way that he thought Christ would have a daily paper edited. I wish that our church papers could be edited with a similar spirit, that they might come to our homes as angels of light filling us with joy and love, stimulating us to the larger activities of the kingdom of God.

A COLLEGE EDUCATION

Required of All Missionaries, Therefore Support Our Colleges on

EDUCATION DAY, JANUARY 17, 1915

Send offerings to CHARLES E. UNDERWOOD, Treas., 70 Layman Ave., Indianapolis, Ind.

Dedication at Taylorville, Ill.

The church at Taylorville, Ill., dedicated their remodeled building on December 20. The day was cold and stormy but the audiences of the day were fine. The improvements on the building had cost $12,000 of which amount, $6,400 had been secured and $5,600 was still needed. The pledges and offerings of the day aggregated over $6,300. The auditorium of the building has been changed and decorated until it is new. A Bible-school annex has been built with 14 class rooms, and a well-equipped kitchen and dining-room. Geo. H. Brown has been the pastor during these achievements. He goes soon to North Tonawanda, N. Y. John R. Golden, state secretary, assisted in the dedication.

Minister Also an Editor.

G. Lolin Eaton, pastor at Center Point, Ia., is editor of the local paper and owner of the plant that publishes it. He has a job printing plant and a simplex typesetting machine. It is the only paper in town and is run as a community paper.

Pastor has Evangelistic Success.

R. Tibbs Maxey has brought 117 into the fellowship of Kearn Park church in Portland, Ore., in 18 months. He had a prominent part in the campaign this fall which made Oregon dry.

Pastor Has Evangelistic Success.

T. S. Tinsley of Midway, Ky., has been having abundant evangelistic success this year. He recently baptized fifteen during some special decision week services. In this series of meetings, he preached on the last words of Jesus on the Cross, using each saying as a text. He has inducted 300 people into the church during the past year in his own field, and in others where he has preached. Two new buildings are in process of erection, owing to his efforts. These are at Philomatte, Tenn, and at White Sulphpur, Ky.

Pastor Writes Songs Against the Saloon.

Chas. M. Fillmore, pastor of Hillside Avenue Church of Indianapolis, writes songs in the midst of his pastoral work. He has recently issued two new ones, entitled. "Tell Mother I'll Vote Dry" and "Our Slogan."

Rural Pastor for Eight Years.

The frequent changes of rural pastorates is often noted and the work of a man who can stay on one circuit for eight years and develop it on modern lines is worthy of note. King Stark preaches for the church in Harrisonville, Mo., and for adjoining churches. He recently dedicated a new building at Bethany in the open country of Cass County, on December 13. The country was in the grip of a blizzard, but this did not prevent the day being a great success. The church needed nine hundred dollars to pay for the building and $1,057.50 was raised. The building is very modern and is said to be one of the best for its purpose to be found in the state.

Issues Bulletin on Disciples' Colleges.

Transylvania University has recently issued its quarterly bulletin and in this number is a statement on the subject "Why the Christian College?" It states that the Disciples of America have 32 educational institutions with a total endowment of $3,620,409 and with buildings and equipment worth $5,516,214. There are in these institutions 614 instructors and 8,399 students. Many of the colleges have more than a local constituency. Transylvania has students from 25 states and from five foreign countries. Ninety per cent of the college trained ministers of Kentucky are from this school.

Dr. H. L. Willett Speaks at Drake.

Cap and Gown Day was observed recently at Drake University. The Senior Class, who conduct this function, called Dr. H. L. Willett, of Chicago, to make the address. His subject was: "The Bible in Modern Life." Dean Haggard says of the address: "I wish to say that Isaac Errett himself could not have made an address upon the Bible in his best days more acceptable to the majority of our people of the University Place, both in and out of the university."

Cheer Minister on Christmas Journey.

M. E. Genge, who is pastor at Ottumwa, Ia., went to his home in Wallace Bridge, Nova Scotia, to spend his Christmas vacation. On the Wednesday evening before leaving on this journey, he returned from prayer-meeting to find his home filled with parishioners who wished to leave Christmas remembrances before his journey. About ninety people were present. A purse of money and many beautiful remembrances were presented to the pastor and Dr. E. A. Sheafe made a short address in appreciation of the work of the minister. Mr. Genge will return early in January to resume his pastoral work.

Ministers of Western New York Meet.

The ministers in Western New York have organized a ministerial association which meets in Buffalo most of the time, the first Monday of each month. Twenty churches are represented in this group and five supply ministers, besides the regular ones, participate. D. C. Tremaine of Williamsville is the speaker at the meeting in January. The meetings are held in the Y. M. C. A. at 10:30 in the morning and after the meeting, the ministers go out to lunch together.

Missionary Secretaries Speak at Norwood, O.

C. R. Stauffer, pastor of the Norwood, Ohio, church, near Cincinnati, spent the holidays at Delavan, Ill., with his family visiting in his wife's old home. During his absence various missionary secretaries filled the pulpit. A. E. Cory spoke on the morning of December 27 and Secretary F. M. Rains on the evening of that day. Stephen J. Corey was present and spoke at the annual meeting of the congregation held on the evening of January 4. The annual meeting took on all the features of a welcome home to this secretary who is a member of the Norwood church.

University Man Called to Brazil, Ind.

F. J. Stinson, who has been called from Harrisburgh, Penn., to Brazil, Ind., has spent a number of years in his preparation for the ministry. He is a graduate of Princeton University. He had some experiences in a college in Canada and not long since completed some graduate studies in Heidelburg, Germany. He assumed the pastorate at Brazil on December 20.

Pastor Stricken with Appendicitis.

R. D. Brown, pastor at Leroy, Ill., was stricken with appendicitis during the first week of the evangelistic meetings recently held in his church and was taken to the Brokaw Hospital in Bloomington for an operation. It is reported that he is recovering nicely from the operation. He has been pastor at Leroy five years and the hundred accessions to the church during the recent revival came as a result, in large measure, of his preparatory work. His church has grown to be one of the largest in his county.

Bible Chair Building Goes Up in Smoke.

Only last August, a building was purchased in Bloomington, Ind., for nine thousand dollars to house the Bible Chair work that was being conducted by J. C. Todd in the University of Indiana. The morning after Christmas, the new building was entirely destroyed by fire. Mr. Todd and his family were not injured but all their personal effects were lost. Temporary quarters for the classes of the foundation will be secured and the Bible Chair work will not suffer interruption. A movement is already on foot to secure funds for a new building.

Preaches on Work for Unemployed.

S. T. Willis of First church of St. Paul preached on December 20 on "The Working Man and His Religion." He said: "With a great many men here, it is not a question of finding employment from which to save a little for a rainy day; it is a matter of bread—just enough to live on. There is something radically wrong with economic conditions in this country when thousands of men and women are without bread, and this after one of the best average years in the history of the country. It is reported that there are 1,500 or 2,000 men in St. Paul without work. Some of these are professional 'floaters' and do not want work; they prefer to beg or live on their wits. It is a good thing to apply to those the Scripture rule, 'If a man will not work, neither should he eat.'"

Indianapolis and Neighborhood

One of the best papers read this year before the preachers' meeting of Indianapolis was given by Prof. Morro last Monday. It was a review of C. C. Morrison's book, "The Meaning of Baptism." While differing radically from many of the positions taken by Mr. Morrison, Prof. Morro believes that the final word has not yet been spoken on the question and that Mr. Morrison's book may lead someone to put out a treatise free from polemics and wholly constructive. It was the sentiment of the meeting that Prof. Morro was the man to do it. [Prof. Morro's excellent review will appear at the earliest possible date in The Christian Century.—Editor C. C.]

All the Indianapolis churches are in an unusually prosperous condition this winter. Most of them will have a month's campaign during January in connection with the city-wide services led by the Federation of Churches.

The death of Mrs. A. L. Orcutt, wife of the president of the Board of Ministerial Relief, has awakened the sympathy of Mr. Orcutt's ministerial colleagues in Indianapolis.

Butler College and The College of Missions report the present term the best in their history.

The Chamber of Commerce conducted a Safety First campaign last week. Many of the Indianapolis preachers joined in it with special sermons.

Instead of a "protracted meeting" in January, the Hillside Church of which C. M. Fillmore is pastor, will have a Decision Week, January 10 to 17. C. M. F.

Tallula, Ill., Issues Annual Report.

The annual reports for the various departments of the church life at Tallula, Ill., are out and they make a creditable showing. F. M. Lindenmeyer is the pastor and he reports 37 accessions during the year, making a net membership for the church of 177. He conducted 14 funerals and solemnized 4 marriages. Every department of the church work reported all bills paid and money on hand for the new year. The church itself raised $1,996.54 during 1914.

Pastor Recovers from Accident.

W. B. Crewdson was in a very serious automobile accident recently but he is reported as having made a very good recovery. He occupied his pulpit again on Dec. 20 for the first time.

Illuminate Art Windows.

Mr. and Mrs. N. Sam Archer of Paris, Ill., placed beautiful memorial windows in the church in memory of their son, Raymond Spencer Archer. They have had a strong illuminating device placed outside the church and at the Sunday evening service, Dec. 20, the auditorium was darkened for a few minutes during which the window which has the picture "The Good Shepherd" and another with the picture "Jesus Knocking at the Door" were strongly lighted and the Gloria was sung in unison by the choir and the congregation. The result was very impressive.

Chas. M. Fillmore Visited by Burglar.

Some burglars, who evidently are not interested in foreign missions, called on a recent evening at the home of Chas. M. Fillmore, pastor of Hillside church, Indianapolis, and took the missionary bank while the pastor was at the Christmas exercises at the church. The bank contained some money for a leper mission, but it is not known how much it contained. Besides the mission bank, they took two dollars in other money, a watch and some jewelry.

Frederick W. Burnham Dedicates Edifice.

Frederick W. Burnham, the new secretary of the A. C. M. S., is returning to one of his former charges, Charleston, Ill, to assist in dedicating the remodeled building. The pastor of the church is John McD. Horne. At the present time the church is having evangelistic meetings led by J. M. Rudy, evangelist. He will preach morning and evening on the dedication day and Mr. Burnham in the afternoon.

"Any Girl" is Play Given by Church Girls.

The Camp Fire Girls of Jefferson St. church of Buffalo are called the Hopis. They gave a play, "Any Girl" in a hall recently.

Dr. Idleman Given an Assistant.

Central church of Des Moines realizes that the already over-burdened minister, Dr. Finis S. Idleman, would not be able to take on the additional duties of caring for the 140 new converts received from the Billy Sunday revival unless he was relieved somewhere. They have called as pastoral helper Mrs. Dessa Carlton who is not only to help in making pastoral calls, but who will also take over much of the burden of financial solicitation in the church. She has spent a year in the Moody Institute of Chicago in preparation for this kind of work. This church is planning to take care of a budget of ten thousand dollars in 1915.

Church Helps its Missionary in Illness.

Dr. Ada McNeil Gordon is the living link missionary of Central church of Des Moines. She is ill at the present time at the Battle Creek sanitarium. The ladies who support her took up a special Christmas offering of a hundred dollars for her assistance during her illness. This auxiliary took in nineteen new members the last quarter.

Old Ministers Not Forgotten.

These days great religious bodies are raising millions for ministerial pensions. Disciples are pleased that the Board of Ministerial Relief of Indianapolis is able to report that the first week after the annual offering recently, there was a fifty per cent increase over the offerings of the corresponding week last year.

Chinese Grateful to Teachers.

Central church of Youngstown, O., has a number of Chinese who come to the church on Sunday afternoons for instruction in English and the Bible. They are so grateful for the help they receive that this year they presented their teachers with expensive gifts imported from China. This evidence of esteem has made all the members of the church see the value of the work that is being done.

Minister Candidate for Governor.

A. N. Lindsay, who is pastor at Clinton, Mo., is candidate for governor on the democratic ticket. He is said to be well versed in the arts of politics in Missouri and many of his friends are predicting a favorable result from his candidacy. Geo. L. Snively is holding a short meeting in his church at the present time.

A Country Edifice Remodeled.

The country church is not disappearing everywhere but in many communities, imbued with the modern spirit, it is growing more aggressive. This is true at Huntsville, Pa., where an old time building has been made over at an expense of $1,700. The remodeled building was dedicated on Dec. 20, which proved to be a very stormy day. The thousand dollars that was needed was given by the congregation under the leadership of C. H. Frick of Wilkes-Barre, Pa. Eugene Belles is the pastor. Visiting ministers who came to assist included C. N. Dewey of Westmoor church, Wilkes-Barre.

Church Overcrowds a Building.

The mission church at Sandusky, O., has been conducting its work in a small rented chapel. The zeal and energy of the group have brought audiences which pack the building to an uncomfortable degree. The congregation is not yet strong enough to build the kind of building they will need ultimately in their city so they are under the necessity of building a temporary home on the lot which will be their permanent abiding place. R. C. Lemon is the pastor and he recently had the counsel of the state secretary, I. J. Cahill, for the church is under the care of the state society.

Flood Churches Rebuild.

In certain sections of Ohio, churches lost their buildings in the spring floods of 1913. The church edifice at Zanesville was submerged to the peak of the roof. The McConnellsville church lost its building entirely. At the former point, the pastor, Hugh Wayt has led the church in a very successful building enterprise and they now have a new structure on high ground which has cost $25,000. The entire city admires the heroism of the church and its minister. At McConnellsville, the church had to pay off an indebtedness on the building that had been destroyed. This they have succeeded in doing and they now have a beautiful and modern building on high ground, which is valued at twelve thousand dollars. George E. Groves is the pastor of this church.

IN AND AROUND CHICAGO.

Edgewater church has engaged A. W. Mallott, a wholesale grocer, to preach for them each Sunday morning in January. In the evening, Wm. Thurman, a layman of Sheffield avenue church, will preach. The church has held a Christmas tree exercise and has done some little charity work in the relief of the poor. The meetings are now held at 1124 Wilson avenue.

The Watch Night services at Irving Park church were very largely attended. They had a turkey dinner and each society of the church made prediction of their successes in 1915. There were music and readings and at the midnight hour there was a prayer-meeting.

Chicago Heights church is to have a venison dinner on January 23. They are providing plates for four hundred and the admission is fifty cents. The new officers of the Sunday-school and the church will be installed and ordained on January 10. The boys of the church defeated a team at Crete in basket ball with a score of 34 to 19.

Evanston church watched the old year out and the pastor gave a stereopticon lecture on the war stricken countries. The victrola rendered the music of the Christmas time and some other selections. The reports of the various organizations for the past year were read. The pastor, O. F. Jordan, reported that the net gain in the membership of the church for the past year had been 20 per cent. The salary and current expense fund came through the year with all bills paid and money in the treasury. The Sunday-school made a good gain in attendance and the organization of the school is much improved. W. C. McDougal of India will speak at this church on January 10, and the day will be observed as C. W. B. M. day.

Sheffield C. W. B. M. invited the Evanston ladies to visit them for their meeting on January 5. The program was divided and each society took a part.

The Evanston papers reported O. F. Jordan's New Year sermon at Evanston in full and an excerpt appeared in a Chicago paper.

Pastor Leaves with a Good Record.

Walter P. Jennings is leaving Amarillo, Tex., to take up work at McKinney, Tex., on Jan. 1. He has spent six years in the field he has just left. During this pastorate a thirty thousand dollar building was erected ond more than seventy-five per cent of the cost has been paid. Only two series of evangelistic meetings have been held, and these brought into the church 90 members. The accessions at the regular services have been 300. The present membership is 460. The Amarillo church offered Mr. Jennings a six hundred dollar raise of salary if he would remain but this offer was not considered.

Bible Questions Answered by the Best Progressive Scholarship

Printed on India Paper. By printing on the best Bible paper the four large octavo volumes of the original edition are condensed into one. It is a library in one handy volume for the student's desk.

Correlation of Parts. By common consent the book as a work of reference is strikingly accurate and for convenience of use unsurpassed. The real value of the cross-references only now becomes apparent to the reader when at last he can use the whole work as a single volume.

International Character of Work. The work is international, having been written by 96 specialists, of whom exactly one-third wrote in a foreign language. Roughly it may be said that over a third of the writers belong to England, nearly a third to Scotland (13), Ireland (23), or America (12), and a third use German (28), Dutch (3), or French (1). This international character of the work has given the editors a free hand in selecting the scholars to whom to entrust the various subjects. The only rule has been—"the best available."

Un-Sectarian Character. In the next place, the work is un-sectarian. To say of a work which professes to be scientific that in the selection of writers ecclesiastical connection or independence counts nothing is really superfluous. It is interesting and encouraging, however, to note the result—that, as a matter of fact, among its writers in English are Jews, Episcopalians of various schools, Methodists, Congregationalists, Presbyterians, and Baptists, besides others who do not perhaps represent any specific religious communion.

Thoroughly Modern. No work of this kind is more modern or more authoritative than Encyclopedia Biblica. This is not a reprint from wornout plates but a beautiful piece of printing setting forth conceptions of biblical scholarship held in the great theological seminaries at this hour. Every seminary trained preacher of the past decade has used this work and knows its value.

Equal to 24 Ordinary Books. To secure the equivalent of twenty-four ordinary books which would sell at $1.50 each for a total of six dollars has brought the best learning to the door of the humblest man. Ignorance of biblical problems on the part of ministers and Sunday-school teachers has had one cause removed.

An Epoch-Marking Work. As a mere volume printed and published it admittedly marks an epoch in several respects—for example, in the fact that more than a million words were practically all in type at one time. As a piece of editorial workmanship it has few equals in respect of the skill with which the parts have been, not pinned together, but intimately and organically united. As a singularly weighty contribution to the biblical science of the time, its impulse is admitted perhaps most markedly by those who dissent most strongly from the views defended in some of its articles. It will be impossible to understand the movement of thought on biblical subjects during the next quarter of a century without taking account of the "Encyclopedia Biblica."

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desire nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

A Literature of the Spiritual Life

THE GREAT PRACTICAL NEED OF THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST IS THE CREATION OF A LITERATURE BY THEIR TEACHERS AND PROPHETS INTERPRETING TO THE INNER LIFE THE SPIRITUAL SIGNIFICANCE OF THEIR FAMILIAR AND FUNDAMENTAL IDEALS.

The familiar principles of the Disciples have not historically been regarded by their teachers as primarily spiritual and personal, but as ecclesiastical and institutional, and have been defended and urged from the standpoint of their bearing upon the organized Church rather than upon the inner life of the soul.

But every structural principle of the Disciples' characteristic thinking is a deep-going spiritual principle, possessing a potency for profoundly quickening and thoroughly furnishing the inner life. The literature of our movement has dealt much with the Church, its form, its order and its faith, but little with the soul, its feelings, its outlook and its sources of power.

Whatever legalism and abstractness characterize the literature we have produced are due to this objective application of our principles to the organizational side of religion in comparative disregard of their application to the spiritual life. Whatever degree of disappointment we may feel over the unresponsiveness of the Christian world to our plea after a century of urgent advocacy, is due to the failure of our teachers to show us that our ideals must first be established as an inner reality in our own spiritual life before we can hope to commend them to others.

When Thomas Campbell set out upon his enterprise a century ago his soul and the souls of those with him were vibrant with spiritual passion. The magna charta of their movement—the famous Declaration and Address—was a thrilling spiritual document. It breathed catholicity, personal fellowship with Christ and deep yearning of soul. It had the flavor of an apostolic writing, a spiritual freshness as if its author was aware of possessing a new inner life which had been denied him under the conventional forms of the Church, and which he wished to share with others. There were no technicalities in the Declaration and Address, no legalities, nothing sectarian nor finical. Its subject matter and its appeal were just the opposite of all this.

But our later literature descended from the mount of vision into the valley of dry bones. We lost the earlier outlook, our dream, our spiritual idealism, and became engaged in unfruitful controversies over methods of doing missionary work, methods of administering baptism, methods of organizing the local church and methods of conducting religious worship.

The methodology of the Church has its place. It may be said truthfully enough that it has an important place. But as compared to the experience of religion its place is emphatically subordinate. And the Disciples' movement was at the beginning launched on the level of a new experience of religion, not merely a new methodology of the Church. Had it taken the course determined for it by its initial impulse it would have produced a rich body of literature of the spiritual life which would, ere this, have modified appreciably the quality of spiritual life of the American Church. As it is, the Disciples are not interpreted by the Christian world as a spiritual people. The principles for which we stand are not conceived by the Christian denominations as having anything essentially to do with an order of the inner life richer and more Christian than the orthodox Church possesses. The reason is plain: The literature we have produced does not so interpret our principles, and our own practice does not so interpret them.

The writer of these words was in a distinguished Disciple pastor's study last week and while there, a Methodist minister who had previously declared his intention of uniting with the Disciples called. He asked for some books setting forth the principles of the people among whom he was expecting to find his future fellowship. An extraordinary library filled all the wall space in the room. Old and new books by Disciple authors stood on the shelves, but after a search no constructive volume not controversial, not dealing with the external methodology of the Church but suitable for building into this man's mind a broadly spiritual conception of our position, could be found. And the pastor contented himself by loaning his caller a biography of Alexander Campbell!

Meanwhile, as was pointed out in a previous editorial on this page, the Disciples have been taking over by imitation the kind of spiritual life obtaining in the Christian denominations, all unregardful of the fact that in their own hands they hold the structural principles out of which they ought to be constructing a spiritual life for themselves. Instead of sitting imitatively at the feet of the ever so admirable but nevertheless limited and ofttimes misleading teachers and interpreters of the spiritual life found in the Christian denominations, the great, unrecognized, practical task of the Disciples of Christ is to produce for the inner life a literature of their own.

Happily there are signs that a few minds among us are making a beginning at such a literature. The little volume of addresses on "Fellowship with Christ" published last year by the Christian Board of Publication strikes a deeper note than our earlier literature sounded. The two exquisite books by Dr. Peter Ainslie, "God and Me," and "My Brother and I" together with Rev. Edgar DeWitt Jones' "The Inner Circle," are harbingers of a fruitful springtime in which our increasing yearning for the spiritual is bound to flower forth in interpretative literature.

Of a different type are the scientific writings of Professor Ames who deals with the soul's experiences of religion with the purpose of understanding that experience, judging it and guiding it. The scientific study of the inner life has an important function in an interpretative literature such as we are discussing, and perhaps it is true to say that the inadequacy of so much of the conventional literature now in the field is partly due to its unawareness of the scientific point of view.

Two volumes of unusual importance are the little volume "Alone With God" by Dr. J. H. Garrison and "The Daily Altar" by Dr. Willett. The former was a series of spiritual meditations and prayers, a kind of modern "Imitatione Christi" and has unveiled the spiritual order of the world to thousands of grateful souls. The latter work ran through a volume of The Christian Century and has not yet been published in book form, but the gracious flavor of its prayers and its poetry abides still in the hearts of those who read its chapters from week to week. It is hoped that arrangements may soon be made to give it to the thousands of homes consciously calling for a manual to guide them in kindling and keeping burning the fire on the family altar.

But the mention of these books and other writings only faintly suggests the task that awaits the earnest-hearted and clear-visioned teachers and writers among the Disciples.

This great task, we repeat, is to take the Disciples' own characteristic ideals and interpret the neglected inner side of them, disclosing their spiritual character and their application to the inner life.

This is not a task for one writer nor for one book. It is a task for co-operative spiritual culture to work upon for many years. But it is high time that our teachers and prophets become conscious of it as their supreme obligation.

To it the insight of our Carey E. Morgans, our Charles S. Medburys, our J. H. Goldners, our Finis Idlemans, our Burris A. Jenkins', our Geo. H. Combs', our Alva W. Taylors, our A. McLeans, our Stephen J. Coreys, our H. H. Guys, our E. B. Barnes'—but where can one stop?—ought to be consecrated. The construction of a spiritual order of the inner life, indigenous to the thought life of the Disciples, waits upon the construction of such a body of literature.

In several succeeding articles it is our purpose to indicate what these characteristic ideals and principles of the Disciples are out of which an inner life and a literature thereof ought to be builded.

The Queen of the Peace Movement

BY LYRA D. TRUEBLOOD.

The present conflict has not entirely obliterated the memory of Baroness von Suttner, author and pacificist of Austria. The following article concerning her work will be of still deeper interest because of the fact that Europe is now mad with war.

ON JUNE 21, 1914, occurred the death (at her home in Vienna) of the Baroness von Suttner, one of the most famous of the world's peace leaders. The cause of international peace has sustained an irreparable loss, for it has rarely possessed a more earnest, able, and untiring advocate. The story of her life and service is an inspiring and fascinating account of what one woman may accomplish, if she is in earnest and devoted to the uplift of humanity along some special line of reform. She is best known as the author of "Lay Down Your Arms," and as a leader of the peace movement in Austria, yet her services have been more varied and manifold than most people are aware.

Baroness Von Suttner.

SOME EARLY ASPIRATIONS.

Bertha Sophia Felicita Countess Kinsky was born at Prague, June 9, 1843. She was the daughter of Lieutenant Field-Marshal Franz Joseph Count Kinsky, who died shortly before her birth. Her mother belonged to the noble family of Von Körner. She was carefully reared and educated by her devoted mother, and a powerful influence was exerted over her early years by her guardian, Friedrich, landgrave of Fürstenberg, a member of the proudest Austrian nobility, who held one of the highest positions at court. "I simply worshiped him," she writes; "I regarded him as a being of a higher race . . . yet for me he was 'Fritzerl' to whom I said 'du.'" She led the usual life of a girl of her social position, devoting much time and attention to music, in which she became a real artist. At one time she aspired to a concert and opera career, for which her teachers declared her fitted, but because of nervousness whenever she appeared in public she soon gave up any idea of such a career. From her earliest years she had a devouring passion for books, and the amount and scope of her reading amaze one. She knew French and English well at the age of ten, had read "Jane Eyre," "Uncle Tom's Cabin," many of Victor Hugo's works, beside the best German authors.

Up to the age of thirty, however, there appeared no trace of anything out of the ordinary about her, excepting perhaps her musical talent. She was occupied with social duties and absorbed in the life about her. Romances of love entered her life, but were of short duration, and only one of them seems to have left any real impression. Prince Adolf Wittgenstein, to whom she was betrothed, had taken passage for America, to appear on the concert platform, but he died while at sea, and with the brief message that told her of the tragic end was concluded this "painful and yet beautiful episode" of her life.

THE TURNING POINT.

In 1873, however, she took the step which was to change the whole trend of her existence. The finances of her mother had become much reduced, and it was necessary for the daughter to earn her own livelihood. Entering the family of Baron von Suttner as instructor and companion to his four daughters, it was not long before her heart was captivated by the youngest son of the house, Artur Gundaccar von Suttner, then twenty-three years of age, and the real romance of her life began—a romance that was not to end until death separated the lovers twenty-nine years later. His youth and her poverty were barriers that to the parents Von Suttner seemed impassible. It therefore became incumbent on her to leave the home, and seek employment elsewhere. Curiously enough the advertisement which she answered and accepted was by Alfred Nobel, the Swedish millionaire and inventor of dynamite. Going to Paris to interview him, she took the position offered as his secretary and manager of his household. Of her long friendship with him in after years we shall speak later. At the present moment it is enough to say that the separation soon became unbearable for the two lovers, and, leaving a letter of explanation for Mr. Nobel, she sold a diamond cross to obtain money to take her back to Vienna, where they met, and the elopement followed.

NOVELIST AND PHILOSOPHER.

Married on June 12, 1876, in a parish church in Vienna, they took ship at once for the Caucasus, where she had friends who had long wanted her to visit them. There they remained for nine happy years, beginning life together in the simplest way, earning their own bread, she by giving piano and voice lessons, he working at designing and architecture, and later as a war correspondent discovering a talent for writing. In 1878 she too made her first attempt in the literary field. Under the pseudonym of B. Oulot, she sent her first manuscript to the Vienna Presse. To her surprise it was accepted, and she was sent twenty florins, her first literary earnings. Novels on different subjects followed. Meanwhile she was perfecting herself in Russian, and together they were delving into the mysteries of Darwin, Spencer, Haeckel, and the like. Happy years these were of work and study and independence, while they lived in a peasant cottage, much of the time entirely removed from association with other people and dwelling in a world of books.

Her mother's death came to her with a crushing sense of bereavement while she was in this far-off land, and on their return they first went to her grave to pay the last tribute of affection. The baron's parents had at last relented, and welcomed them back to the old home at Castle Hermannsdorf, when the years of exile were ended in 1885. These years had, however, furnished the unrecognized training which they both needed to fit them for their real life-work. His Caucasian stories had met with great success, and her "Inventarium einer Seele" had created a considerable sensation. They were welcomed to membership in the Authors' Union, and from that time belonged to the most exclusive literary circles.

BEGINS REAL LIFE WORK.

The day of her awakening to her real lifework was near at hand. In 1887, in a matter-of-fact way, through a conversation with Dr. William Loewenthal she learned for the first time of the existence of an organized peace movement. He told her that there was in London an International Peace and Arbitration Association, that its founder and leader was Hodgson Pratt, and that branches of it existed in many countries already, there being one in Stuttgart and a provisional committee in Berlin. "What?" she exclaimed. "Such a league existed—the idea of justice between nations, the struggle to do away with war, had assumed form and life? The news electrified me." Returning to the proof sheets of her latest book, Das Mashinenzeitaler ("The Age of Machinery"), she added to the last chapter an account of the London League. This book appeared anonymously, and no one dreamed its author was a woman; it was widely attributed to Max Nordau and other celebrated writers.

But the change had come. As from girlhood the baroness had always been under the control of some one overpowering passion, now she was gripped by a new idea—to be of service to the Peace League. And so Die Waffen Nieder ("Lay Down Your Arms") came to be written. It appeared in 1889, only two years after the awakening. "During this period of study my horror of war waxed to the most agonizing intensity. I can certify that the sufferings through which I led my heroine were actually experienced in me while I was working on it." To her great surprise the manuscript was rejected by every publisher to whom she sent it for serial publication.

WAR UTTERANCES NOT ACCEPTABLE.

They assured her it could not appear in a military country, where the press laws were so rigid. Her book publisher advised her to get some statesman to strike out all the offensive references to war, or at least to alter the title. Her soul was stirred, and she declared she would burn the manuscript rather than alter one syllable of title or content. He yielded, and had no cause for regret, for the popularity of the book was assured from the first. From this time she was one of the pacifist workers, "swept into the movement," as she declares, "not only with my pen, but with my whole being."

Her reading of Concord, the journal of the International Peace and Arbitration

Association, kept her in touch with the movement, and in Venice, in 1890, she met Mr. Felix Moscheles, now president of the Association, who was there in the hope of forming a local section. She took it up with zeal, interviewing Marquis Pandolfi, a member of the Italian Chamber, and found him already interested. A meeting was called, and a section formed, known as the Pandolfi Union. Returning to Vienna, they met members of the Reichsrath, to whom she related the story of the founding of the Venetian Peace Society, and also the beginnings of the Interparliamentary Union in 1888, which was to meet that year (1891) in Rome. Soon the efforts of the baroness resulted in the formation of the Interparliamentary Group in Austria. She herself attributes it to others—Baron Kuebeck, Baron Pirquet, and their like, but had it not been for her enthusiastic initiative in arousing the interest of such men, it is doubtful whether the organization would have come about until later.

FOUNDS AUSTRIAN PEACE SOCIETY.

In the year 1891 the Peace Congress was to be held in Rome, and the baroness greatly desired that her country be represented in this meeting of the peace societies, as well as in the Interparliamentary gathering. She set herself at once to the task of securing enough adherents to form a peace society in Austria, publishing her first appeal in the Neue Freie Presse, in September, 1891. To her surprise the response was immediate, and enthusiastic co-operation was promised by people of all classes of society. Thus in October, 1891, in the old Rathhaus in Vienna, was formed the governmentally authorized Austrian Peace Society, with a membership of two thousand, and there was money enough in the treasury to pay the expenses of six delegates to the Congress at Rome. To Rome then the two went, attending the Interparliamentary Conference and then the Peace Congress. There in the Hotel Quirinal she met all the peace workers with whom she had been in correspondence, Hodgson Pratt, Frederick Passy, and the rest. It was at this Congress that the decision was made to found the central Bureau at Berne, and it was the baroness' privilege to start the first funds in its treasury by paying over the fifteen hundred francs she had received as an honorarium from the publisher of the Italian translation of Die Waffen Nieder.

EDITS PEACE JOURNALS.

Returning to Vienna she started her peace journal, Die Waffen Nieder, which she kept up for eight years, until it was replaced by Die Friedenswarte. It was on the suggestion of Alfred H. Fried, then a young Berlin publisher, that an organ be begun for the new movement, the baroness to edit, he to publish the journal. "So then," she says, "I stood in the midst of the young movement. I had a new Union to preside over, a review to edit, a regular correspondence to carry on with the colleagues whom I had gained in Rome, and once more my life and activities were filled with something which I recognized as 'the one important thing.'" After her review was discontinued, she contributed regularly till the time of her death to Die Friedenswarte, a chronicle which she called "Randglossen zur Zeitgeschichte," or "Comments on the History of the Time."

The next thing to be accomplished was the founding of a peace society in Berlin. A public reading from her book, Die Waffen Nieder, aided in arousing local interest, and after some delay toward the close of the year 1892 the society was formed. So absolutely were their lives filled with peace interests that the baron's father remarked to them one day, "You have become regular peace-drummers." The peace society at Budapesth next came into existence in 1894 through the Vienna Society, and yet primarily through her efforts. The Interparliamentary Union was to hold its next conference in Budapesth, and a peace society to welcome it was essential, so she said. Maurus Jokai, the Hungarian poet and statesman, was chosen its first president.

FIRST HAGUE CONFERENCE.

In the half-dozen years preceding the calling of the First Hague Conference it was her joy to watch the steps by which the project for an international tribunal was gradually shaping itself, through the labors of far-sighted individuals, and through the Interparliamentary Union meetings. In her book, Schach der Qual, published in 1897, she has a chapter on "Good News," in which she describes an "international conference for securing peace," a prophecy of what came to pass so soon. When the Czar's rescript was issued her joy knew no bounds. "It was one of the loveliest hours of our lives," she writes.

The years from 1892 on were filled with labor for the cause, editorial work, authorship, a voluminous correspondence with men and women of the highest position all over Europe, each year a congress or conference to attend—so passed the next ten happy years of this marvelously fruitful life. In her correspondence she sought always the enlisting and holding of the sympathy of her friends in the peace cause.

A SIGNIFICANT FRIENDSHIP.

Of especial interest was the development of her friendship with Alfred Nobel; the letters that passed between them reveal the gradual increase of his sympathy with the aims of the peace movement. In 1891, after the formation of the Austrian Peace Society, she wrote asking him for a contribution to the treasury, and his reply enclosed a check for eight pounds sterling, "though" he says, "I do not see very clearly what great expenses either the Peace League or the Peace Congresses can have to bear." While they were at Berne attending the Fourth Congress in 1892, Mr. Nobel appeared one day and spent a long time conversing with her, though refusing to remain to attend the session. At the close of the Congress the Von Suttners repaired to Zurich to accept his pressing invitation to visit him, and in the days that followed they discussed all that had taken place at the Berne meeting, and the general status of the peace movement. The result of the visit was that Mr. Nobel gave in his name as a member of the Austrian Peace Society, and made a contribution of two thousand francs to its work. To one of her questions, Mr. Nobel replied: "Regarding the cause and its justice—no, I have no doubts about that, but only as regards the question whether it can be realized; nor do I yet know how your Unions and Congresses propose to take hold of the work. . ."

SECURES AID OF NOBEL.

"Then," asked the Baroness, "if you knew that the work was being well taken hold of, would you take a hand and help?" "Yes, I would. Inform me, convince me—and then I will do something great for the movement." They never met again, though the correspondence continued until his death. His interest waxed stronger in the cause in which she had so zealously endeavored to enlist him, and to her influence there can be no question is chiefly if not wholly due the munificent gift by which he is best known to the peace workers of today. On December 12, 1896, the news of his sudden death reached her. In his will he had set aside thirty-five millions of francs for the formation of a fund, from the interest of which five yearly prizes were to be assigned to such as had contributed some notable service to the benefit of mankind.

NOBEL PRIZES FOR PEACE ACHIEVEMENT.

The fifth of these was to be given "to that man or woman who shall have worked most effectively for the fraternization of mankind, the diminution of armies, and the promotion of Peace Congresses." Owing to a lawsuit regarding the validity of the will, the first distribution of the prizes did not occur until 1901. The baroness herself, whom we may justly believe the donor of the prize had in mind, was most fittingly, if somewhat tardily, awarded the prize in 1905.

After the great bereavement of her life came in 1902 in the death of her husband, it was hard for her to go on with the work alone, and it was possible only because she felt that in so doing she was carrying out his wishes. "Thou must work on in our plans," he wrote in his last will and testament to her, "for the sake of the good cause keep up the work until thou also at last shalt reach the end of the brief journey of life. Courage then! No hesitation! In what we are trying to do we are at one, and therefore must thou try still to accomplish much." Rarely if ever are two souls more ideally mated than were these, and faithfully she endeavored to carry out his desire until the very end.

VISITS AMERICA TWICE.

She became personally known to the people of America first in 1904, when she was persuaded to attend the Thirteenth Peace Congress in Boston, and to make several lectures in other parts of the country. Again in 1912 she came for an extended lecture tour, and wherever she went was warmly welcomed. The affectionate esteem and regard in which she was held in Europe was so great that she could with justice be called the uncrowned queen of the peace movement. She was beloved because of her true worth, her womanliness, her loyalty to conviction and her sweetness and charm of character. Above all things she was enthusiastically in earnest in the promotion of peace between nations. "This cause includes the mightiest task of onward-marching human society,—in a word, it is 'the one important thing,'" are the words with which she closes her Memoirs.

The influence of her life, of her words, of her letters, of her books, will abide. Her work is not finished. She knew how to build deep and firm the foundations upon which others will add the superstructure as the years pass, until the final edifice shall stand completed in the day when human society shall "shake off, as a legal institution, the greatest of all scourges—war."

"I feel that goodness, and truth, and righteousness are realities, eternal realities, and that they cannot be abstractions, or vapors floating in a spiritual atmosphere, but that they imply a living, personal Will, a good, loving, righteous God, in whose hands we are safe."

How We Got Our Bible

FROM WYCLIFFE'S VERSION TO THE NEW AMERICAN REVISED BIBLE.

With Some Suggestions as to the Advantages of the Latter.

THE original manuscripts and tablets from which the Bible was made were written in Hebrew and Greek. The first complete translation of the Bible into English was made by John Wycliffe in 1384. Other translations and revisions soon followed among them being the Tyndale, 1525, the Geneva, 1560, the Rheims New Testament, 1582, the King James, 1611.

Since the King James Revision was issued many ancient manuscripts and tablets have been discovered, among them being the three most accurate and important manuscripts in existence, namely, the Vatican, now in the archives of Rome, the Alexandrian, now in the British Museum, and the Sinaitic now in the archives of St. Petersburg, and as the English language in the long interval had undergone a great transformation, revision became once more necessary. Upwards of forty dictionaries of the English language have appeared since the revision, known as the King James Bible, was issued in 1611. These, with the other causes, combined to render a new version of the Scriptures an imperative duty. It was a work to be done well or not to be undertaken at all, and in 1856, the appointment of a royal commission was urged in England.

THE REVISION BEGUN.

It was not till 1870, however, that the great task of the Revision was really begun. On July 7, 1870, a motion was made in convocation of Canterbury instructing the British Revision Committee "to invite the co-operation of American divines." Two companies, one taking the old and the other the New Testament, were formed in this country to co-operate with the two English companies, as they were called, and a plan of work was duly arranged. Portions of Scripture as revised were exchanged between the two countries.

The two American Companies combined constituted the American Revision Committee and included the best Biblical scholars of all the leading evangelical denominations in the United States and the most distinguished professors of our leading universities and theological seminaries. This noble company of consecrated men undertook their great work with the full appreciation of its importance, without compensation, and with an unselfish desire to benefit their fellowmen. In the largest sense, therefore, the work was purely one of love; certainly it was not one of gain. It was done for Christ and for posterity.

AMERICAN SCHOLARS CONTINUE THEIR WORK.

When the English Revision was published, New Testament, 1881, and the Old Testament, 1885, the English companies disbanded but the American companies continued their organization. They felt that all too brief a time had been allowed for the consideration of many important questions in the English Revision, and that it was clearly their duty to preserve their organization and to continue their work on the lines upon which they had thus far proceeded, and from 1885, when the English Committee disbanded, to 1901, the American Committee devoted themselves to the preparation of the American Standard Version. They were fortunate in having the written notes, records and opinions of every member of the Committee from the beginning of the work, and as no change could be made without a two-thirds majority it was truly the work of the whole Committee although they were not all alive when the work was finished. In addition they had the advantage of all the criticisms which the English Revision had provoked, and of the new light thrown on the subject by the aroused interest of the Christian scholars of the world.

RESULTS OF EXCAVATION.

The twenty-nine years, 1872-1901, during which the American Revision Committee was at work, were years of unexampled fruitfulness in scientific explorations and literary investigation, the results of which have been far richer in many respects than any during the three preceding centuries. In a word, they were years that have thrown a flood of new light upon the accuracy of the Bible. Excavations in Egypt, Syria, Babylonia, Judea, and Arabia have been productive of the most amazing discoveries. Ancient sculptures, whole libraries of ancient dynasties and the stories of long-buried cities of the past have come to light in rapid succession, and so many of these discoveries have been associated with the Bible and the events it narrates, that a new aspect has been given to many passages in the books that compose the sacred volume.

It is unquestionable, too, that in these three decades there has been more earnest study of the original manuscripts composing our Bible than in any preceding period.

REVISION IN OTHER COUNTRIES.

Within a comparatively recent time, so great has been the increase of knowledge concerning ancient lands and languages, that Germany, France, Holland, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark have all made revisions of their Bibles. Greater familiarity with the originals has given to the student a better acquaintance with the spirit and character of the ancient languages, and has consequently rendered them better able to interpret their exact meaning. New light has dawned upon many of the passages which formerly were obscure if not meaningless, owing to defects in early translations. Thus the mass of new Biblical evidence, new manuscripts, the changes in the language and many other considerations had due weight with the American Committee in the preparation of the American Standard Version. Knowledge had advanced, and the art of textual criticism, by which the value of ancient manuscripts is estimated, had made remarkable progress.

ADVANTAGES OF THE AMERICAN VERSION.

Time would fail to indicate more than a small portion of the vast number of important changes and corrections which the American Standard Bible presents. The King James Bible, in Matt. 6:34, makes Jesus say, "take no thought for the morrow." What He really did say as given in the American Standard Bible, is, "Be not therefore anxious for the morrow," etc., giving a totally different meaning to the command. In the King James Version, the word "Master" is applied to Christ forty-seven times. In every instance it is an incorrect translation of a word that always means "Teacher" and is so rendered in the American Version.

In I Cor. 11:29, the King James Version has "He that eateth and drinketh, eateth and drinketh damnation unto himself." The American Standard Version has given the accurate rendering, viz.: "He that eateth and drinketh, eateth and drinketh judgment unto himself if he discern not the body," thus giving an altogether different meaning to a very important and oft-quoted passage. Again in Acts 19:2, the King James Version has it: "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" This is corrected by the American Standard Version to read: "Did ye receive the Holy Spirit when ye believed?"

SOME NOTABLE PASSAGES.

Still another notable passage is found in I Timothy 6:10. The King James Version has the passage, "The love of money is the root of all evil," which the American Standard Version corrects to read. "Is a root of all kinds of evil." The King James Version renders the famous passage in Acts 17:22, 23, "Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious," which is changed in the American Standard Version to the true meaning of the original: "Ye men of Athens, in all things I perceive ye are very religious." Paul had come to the Athenians, who were the most cultured people of the world at that time, to win them to Christ. It is inconceivable that in addressing them he would offend them by a statement accusing them, of all people, of superstition. What Paul said was intended to win their confidence by praise, but at the same time point out that although they were religious, yet there was a higher form of religion they had not attained.

WORK OF THE GIDEONS.

The great religious denominations such as the Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, United Presbyterians, Church of Disciples, Lutherans, Reformed Churches and many others recognize the merits of the American Standard Version by making it the basis of all their explanatory notes in their Sunday-school lessons and the notes for all the new Graded Sunday-school Lessons, for all Sunday-schools are based exclusively on the American Standard Version. Besides this, the American Bible Society which since 1816 has published only the King James Version has recently amended its constitution to enable them to publish the American Standard Version to meet the demands of churches and Sunday-schools for this version. The Gideons, an organization of live Christian Commercial Travelers have placed over 200,000 copies of the American Standard Version in the guest rooms of hotels in the United States, and there is not a prominent college, theological seminary or leading Christian scholar who does not recognize and use this latest version of the Scriptures because it brings the plain reader into closer contact with the thought of the original writer than any version in Christendom.

How easily we lose poise, swept by the currents of life. Our root is not deep enough. Consider the lily, resting on the face of the waters, its roots far below. How serene it rides the ripples, and how confidently it has sought the light, that its life may expand therein above the turbulence of the waves!—Trinities and Sanctities.

Dr. Mott Sees America's Opportunity

How the Present European War May be Turned into Good, Discussed by the International Y. M. C. A. Secretary.

BY JOHN R. MOTT.

AMERICA will be called upon to send trained religious leaders to Europe because the war will exhaust its hope, faith and courage.

This was the opinion expressed by Dr. John R. Mott, who has just returned from a tour of Asia and Europe, in an address given December 22, 1914, on the occasion of the laying of the cornerstone of the new buildings of the Young Men's Christian Association College, in this city.

Among those present were the presidents and members of the faculties of the numerous theological seminaries of Chicago and suburbs, Y. M. C. A. leaders, interested business and professional men and the officers, faculty and students of the Y. M. C. A. College.

Dr. Mott, speaking on the work of the Young Men's Christian Association Movement of which he is associate international secretary, said in part:

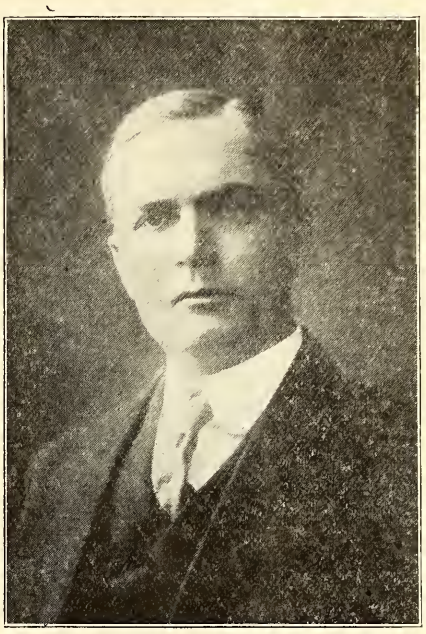
OUR GREATEST PROBLEM.

"If I understand this organization, after having devoted so many years of my life in some measure to its service, and after having studied it at first hand in virtually every nation of the world where it is to be found, I would say that incomparably our greatest problem is that of the raising of a well furnished and well qualified leadership for this great movement. We simply must have more men trained and trained as well as possible for this work of leadership in order to fill gaps that already exist in this brotherhood. It is startling to my mind to find today in our movement that the strategic fields are still unoccupied just for the want of leaders.

"An institution like this, in which we believe, is inperatively needed also in order that we may provide a worthy succession for those noble personalities who have brought this movement to its present stage of development. The most optimistic does not see forthcoming these well-furnished men to take these positions and meet the problems adequately unless we have an agency like this. It is surprising to notice so many poorly furnished men holding down positions of the very greatest possible importance over the Middle West just because the organization has had no better men to place in these fields. As I travel over the world I am reminded often of the vitality of this organization and of the insistent demand that is coming from the leaders of the church, both lay and clerical, for the expansion of its work. Expansion is the watchword just now with reference to this movement in every aspect of its life in whatever way you may think of it. There is a demand for the expansion of this work in order that the church may lay strong hands of Christ upon the boyhood and the young manhood of the world. Where are we going to get these men unless we strengthen the hands of a training institution like this?

AMERICA'S GOLDEN HOUR.

"I have come back from the European war zone carrying the heaviest burden on my heart that I have ever carried. When this great struggle is over, you will find the great nations of Europe exhausted not only economically, not only in the sense of having laid under the ground millions of lives; but exhausted, I fear, in hope, in faith, in courage.



Dr. John R. Mott.

"THEN WILL COME THE SOLEMN HOUR FOR AMERICA, TO ASSUME FAR LARGER RESPONSIBILITIES IN WORLD SERVICE THAN EVER BEFORE, WHEN WE WITH OUR UNSPENT ENERGY, WITH OUR FRESH COURAGE, WILL PLACE AT THE DISPOSAL OF THESE NATIONS THE CHOICEST PRODUCTS WE HAVE EVOLVED, AND WHAT GREATER OR MORE HIGHLY MULTIPLYING CONTRIBUTION CAN WE MAKE THAN THAT OF INFLUENCING, BY THE EXAMPLE WE SET IN SUCH AN INSTITUTION AS THIS, AND BY THE MEN WE TRAIN HERE, THE FUTURE LEADERSHIP OF THE CHRISTIAN FORCES AT WORK AMONG YOUNG MEN OF ALL NATIONS."

The Young Men's Christian Association College was founded at Lake Geneva, Wis., Aug. 1-17, 1884, as the Western Secretarial Institute under which name it was incorporated in 1886. In 1903 the name of the school became the Institute and Training School of Young Men's Christian Association and in 1913 to better represent the scope and educational standards of the institution the name was changed to the Young Men's Christian Association College which name it now bears. Dr. Frank H. Burt, the present head of the college, has served since 1905 as president.

The summer sessions of the college are held on the extensive property of this college at Lake Geneva, Wis.

THE NEW COLLEGE HOME.

The new buildings in Chicago are being erected on a lot space 220 x 463 feet and with equipment will cost approximately $400,000. The location is on the south side, within one-half mile of the University of Chicago. It is expected the new buildings will be ready for occupancy the beginning of the fall term in October, 1915, at which time the dedication will be celebrated. The Silver Jubilee of the establishment of the work of the institution in Chicago will also be observed at the same time.

The purpose of the college as stated in the articles of incorporation is:

"The establishment and maintenance of an organization for the purpose of training and developing secretaries and physical directors of Young Men's Christian Associations in their work and educating, fitting and training them and others for secretaries and physical directors of Young Men's Christian Associations, and for instructing them in the Word of God and in the practical work of the Young Men's Christian Association."

Bugle Song of Peace

(In which is implied a prophecy.)

BLOW, blow, bugle!
The day has dawned at last.
Blow, blow, blow!
The fearful night is past.
The beast of war is tame and cowed;
The world's great heart with grief is bowed.
Blow, blow, bugle!
The day has dawned at last.

Blow, blow, bugle!
The soul of man is free.
The rod and sword of king and lord
Shall no more honored be;
For God alone shall govern men,
And love shall come to earth again.
Blow, blow, bugle!
The soul of man is free.

Blow, blow, bugle!
The rivers run with blood,
But greed and strife and lust for life
Are passing with the flood.
The prophets realize their dreams.
Lo, in the east the glory gleams!
Blow, blow, bugle!
The day has dawned at last.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR WEEK.

LAST year there was begun the observance of Christian Endeavor Week in February. It was a new idea, but even its first observance was proof of its value. This year it will be given a much more prominent place in the program of the societies, and though some will go further than others in featuring its different activities, it is probable that most Christian Endeavorers who wish to utilize the best means of promotion will put emphasis upon some of its many interesting details.

It is suggested that Sunday, February 7, be utilized as Christian Endeavor Day, on which so far as may be consistent with other church plans, Christian Endeavor be given the right of way, either at the morning or evening service. Monday is Enlistment Day; Tuesday, Local Union Day; Wednesday, Church Day; Thursday, Entertainment Day; Friday, Extension Day; Saturday, Junior and Intermediate Day, and Sunday, February 14, Decision Day. Abundant suggestions are made in bulletins issued by the United Society of Christian Endeavor, Boston. These may be had upon request.

BREWERY FAILS.

THE news that a twelve-million dollar brewery corporation at Columbus, O., has gone into the hands of receivers brings another note of encouragement to the friends of decency and sobriety.

It was the more significant as it came on the heels of the alleged victory of the wet forces in Ohio. It shows that the signs of the times are too clear to be misread, and that no temporary victory can obscure the early and total overthrow of the liquor business.

Still further depression has come over the spirits of the saloon forces by the vote on the Hobson resolution in Congress, which failed of the two-thirds majority, but received the approval of over half of the House. A few more "victories" of that sort will put the liquor business completely on the scrap pile.

Shrewd business men, while anxious to safeguard their investments, do not care to put money into a losing venture that is sure to come to an end soon. Hence the decline in the value of brewery stock, and the failure of some of the largest of the brewing companies.

DEAN SUMNER'S CONSECRATION.

AN interesting event took place in the Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul in this city on the morning of January sixth. It was the consecration of Walter Taylor Sumner to be the Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Oregon.

Dean Sumner is a very young man. In his appearance he hardly seems to do more than comply with the canonical rule that a bishop "must be above thirty years of age," though in reality he is much older. He started life as a business man in the far south west, but came to Chicago and was led to undertake religious work through his interest in social reform. His activities on the West Side made him a power for good among the poor and the vicious. He became successively deacon, rector, and Dean of the Cathedral, and his election to the Bishopric was the fitting recognition of his admirable services to the Episcopal Church, to Christianity in general, and to the city of Chicago. For years he has been a valuable member of the Board of Education of this city. He was the chairman of the Vice Commission, which conducted the most exhaustive inquiry into the morals of the city ever undertaken in any municipality.

His departure is regretted by the entire community, as was proved by the great throng of people of all classes who gathered at the Cathedral to witness the solemn and impressive services of consecration, and later attended the mammoth reception accorded the new Bishop at the Auditorium Hotel. The people of Portland, and of the entire state of Oregon, irrespective of church connections or religious views, are to be congratulated upon the coming of Walter T. Sumner to be a fellow citizen. He is the sort of man a city may well appreciate and hold in constant regard.

DEAN MATHEWS' JOURNEY.

ON Tuesday evening of last week Dean Shailer Mathews of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago, left for San Francisco to sail on the S. S. "Manchuria" of the Pacific Mail Line for Japan. He goes as the representative of the Federal Council of Churches, of which he is the president. His mission is that of counsel and inspiration to the missionary and other Christian forces of the Sunrise Empire. He will visit all the principal cities of Japan, and will be gone until the latter part of March. He will meet many of the former students of the University of Chicago, and his services are in requisition to a far greater extent than time will permit. His journey to Japan is another of the links which ought to bind that people and our own in closer fellowship, and diminish notably any hostile sentiments such as the jingo spirits of both people are constantly stirring up.

Japan is our nearest neighbor beyond the Pacific, and ought to be our close and enduring friend. It is the task of the Christian Church to promote that good feeling of which the missionaries are the first and most impressive expression, and such visits as that of Dean Mathews are certain to have value to that end.

THE UPPER ROOM.

PROF. THOMAS M. IDEN of the Ann Arbor Bible Chair is the "father" of a class of young men which was organized while he was a teacher in Butler College, continued while he was in the State Normal School at Emporia, Kans., and is still growing and vigorous now that he has been called to the important work of Biblical instruction at Ann Arbor. This "Upper Room" class meets in the modest quarters which accommodate one hundred or more, but its membership now embraces many times that number and is scattered throughout the world.

At every Christmas season Prof. Iden sends out an "Upper Room" message to all of his boys. Among other things he says this year, "I have just returned from a trip around the world. Let me hasten to explain, however, that the trip has not taken me outside the walls of my Ann Arbor study. I have just finished addressing the envelopes that will carry the New Year's letter to thousands of men scattered over the whole world. And as I have written each of your names I have tarried for a moment's visit with you. This will explain to you my trip around the world."

HUMAN SACRIFICE IN INDIA.

IT is our habit to believe that British rule in India has abolished most, if not all, of the superstitions that once preyed upon the lives of the people there, and that the advent of Christianity has largely completed the process of enlightenment. But, it must be remembered that the native population is enormous, governmental influences are necessarily somewhat superficial, and Christian missionaries all too few to prevent occasional recurrence of deeds of darkness once common, but now supposed to be obsolete.

A recent message from our leading missionary in Jubbulpore gives a recital of an event illustrative of the occasional reversion of ignorant people to the most primitive and barbarous rites. He says:

"We are accustomed to think of a human sacrifice as being the extreme to which heathenism can go. We have begun to flatter ourselves that whatever may be the evil practices of the non-Christian world, human sacrifice at least has been banished; but such is not the case. Only a few days ago we had the startling intelligence that such a sacrifice had been performed in Jubbulpore. The circumstances are as follows: A certain woman of the weaver caste had had several children born to her, but they all died either at birth or very shortly afterward. Desiring to know what to do in order that the next child to be born might live, she appealed to her spiritual adviser, who happened in this case to be a woman. The woman told her that the curse under which she was living could be removed only by the sacrifice of some living child to the goddess who had put the curse upon her. Another woman was now called in, who kidnapped a four-months-old child belonging to a neighbor of the same caste. Secretly they murdered the baby, severed its body into fragments, and performed their magical rites. The services of a man were now requisitioned, who went out and dug a grave wherein the mutilated remains of the baby were buried. Of course, the child was missed and a search was instituted for it. In some way the matter was traced to its source, and a police investigation ensued. The grave was found and the body exhumed. Three of the persons concerned are now under trial for murder, and the fourth one as an accessory. This is but one of the many calls constantly coming from India for more workers to come and proclaim the truth of Christ and to prevail upon the people to turn to the God of love, under whose reign such things are impossible."

"George W. Brown."

THE SIN OF UNBELIEF.

MEN say that the old forms of belief are gone; some mourn and others rejoice over the decay of faith. What has gone? If some human speculations have gone, we can make others to order, and are none the poorer, however much we suffer in our own self-esteem. The discovery that we have been wrong in our thinking is matter for congratulation. We are well on the way to right thinking when we discover wherein we have been wrong.

But what have we given up? Have we discovered that we were mistaken about the wrong of evil-doing and the blessedness of goodness? No; the older the world grows the more we are sure that right is right and wrong is wrong. Have we given up the ethical and spiritual value of the Bible? No; we have modified some opinions about its literary character, but the moral truths of the Bible would be just as true if they had first appeared in a Chicago paper yesterday morning, and its spiritual realities are confirmed by nineteen centuries of Christian experience. Have we given up Jesus Christ? The farther we recede from Him in time, the wider our comparison between Him and all other teachers, the more He grows on human thought as the chief among ten thousand, and altogether lovely. It would be a sort of crime against reason not to believe in His goodness, His truth, and His abiding power over men. No; there are some things that have not been given up.

What we have occasion to fear is not genuine honest unbelief, but indifference. Men often shift upon their alleged lack of belief their real lack of interest in the vital concerns of life. They are unwilling to avow their lack of attention to concerns of such transcendent importance, and are ready to say, "I don't believe the Bible," when they mean, "I am not willing to live as the Bible would require me to live." There is immense insincerity in professed unbelief.

We can afford to be relatively careless in what terms a man expresses his faith, provided he has faith. We need not be sticklers for the mere verbal assent to certain prescribed forms. We may always have not only charity, but sympathy for honest doubt, and are ready to affirm with Tennyson that—

> "There lives more faith in honest doubt, > Believe me, than in half the creeds."

Toward such doubt the Master was always tolerant, and the pulpit of today is kindly disposed. But something is true. Not everything is or can be false. Back of our world of matter, and under it and above it is a world of spiritual realities. It is too well established to be denied; it is too important to be disregarded. Our great need is that men shall be willing to give sufficient consecutive attention to the concerns of man's highest welfare to be ready to believe. It is true now as it was true in Jesus' day that the man who is willing to do God's will shall have not faith alone but knowledge that his faith is justified.

A MUNICIPAL CHRISTMAS TREE.

MENTION has been made from time to time of the Municipal entertainments provided for the city of Houston, Texas, under the direction of Rev. W. S. Lockhart, pastor of the Christian Church in that city. A Christmas play was rendered and the mayor of the city acted the role of Santa Claus and gave gifts to a host of youngsters. Under the same auspices a Christmas tree treat was provided for the colored people of the city, at which time presents were given, clothing was distributed to the poor, and addresses were made by a number of negro speakers.

Such municipal activities set a fine example for all communities. No minister could find a better side issue for his civic interest than the promotion of such a type of municipal entertainments as Dr. Lockhart has encouraged the authorities of Houston to provide for its people.

Prayer

By Edgar DeWitt Jones.

OUR Father who art in Heaven, we thank Thee that we do not need to wait until we reach heaven in order to know Thy Father's love. We are conscious of Thy love at this moment and like the sunshine which bathes the fields in glory and beauty, that love floods with healing glow our poor lives here and now. We praise Thee that we do not need to die in order to partake of the privilege of our Father's House, but that the foretaste of such fellowship we may enjoy each Lord's day in the church of Thy Son. Command Thy blessing to rest upon us now. May this thought of sonship greatly encourage and inspire us. Put Thy hand upon our heads and call us by name. Grant that conscious of such kinship with Thee we shall be minded to seek the things that are above—to abhor that which is evil and to cleave to that which is good. By the sure tokens of change and decay that are all about us stir us up to remember always that we are pilgrims on the earth and that we must look for that city whose builder and maker is God. Make us to know all things are possible to those who trust and obey the Great Guide Thou hast given us in the person of Thy Son, our Savior. Help us to walk with Him in spirit toward the grander day, the fuller knowledge and the greater light, and in "the Father's House where are the many mansions" we shall sing Thy praise with one accord. In the Name of our great Kinsman. Amen.

Episcopalians Have Socialist Bishop.

Rev. Paul Jones was consecrated bishop of Utah in St. Mark's Cathedral, Salt Lake City on Dec. 16. A few days before his consecration he had joined the Salt Lake City branch of the Socialist party. He is the successor to a socialist bishop, the Rt. Rev. Franklin Spencer Spalding. Bishop Spalding was a very outspoken advocate of this economic viewpoint and his reply to questioners never minced words. He said, "I am a Marxian Socialist; that is the only kind there is." The conversion of the recently elected bishop is a source of great gratification to the Socialist party in the United States, as this party has found some of its most bitter opponents in churches that called themselves Christian.

New Duties for Rev. Chas. Stelzle.

It was recently noted that Rev. Chas. Stelzle was to have charge of the work of relieving unemployment in New York under the Federation of Churches. Following this is the announcement that Mayor Mitchell's civic committee on unemployment has engaged him as its "executive director for relief and emergency measures." The chairman of the mayor's committee is Judge Elbert H. Gary, with whom is associated a number of the leading men of New York. Mr. Stelzle has accepted the new duties on condition that they shall not be made to interfere with his work with the Federation of Churches.

Bohemian Mission Work is Prospering.

The Bohemians of Chicago are one of the older colonies of immigrants in the city and they have organized institutions opposed to religion, with Sunday-schools, singing societies, athletic clubs, and other societies housed in great halls. The success of the Presbyterians in Lawndale in building up mission work is therefore noteworthy. They have spent eight years in getting a good church under way, with the leadership of Rev. Vaclav Vanek. On January 3, they dedicated Hubbard Memorial Church and Dr. John Timothy Stone preached the dedicatory sermon.

Archbishop Ireland May be Cardinal.

Archbishop Ireland, the well-known Roman Catholic ecclesiastic of St. Paul, Minn., is being freely mentioned as a candidate for the red hat the next meeting of the consistory in Rome. His friends suggested him frequently for this honor during the lifetime of the late pope, Pius X, but he was not appointed. There are reasons to believe the appointment will be made by the new pope.

The Pope and World Peace.

Great Britain has appointed Sir Henry Howard as envoy to the Vatican at Rome and has thus re-established relations that have been severed for four hundred years. This appointment is naturally opposed by some English people, even with the danger of embarrassing the government in the midst of the world war. It is argued that France has no representative at the Vatican, owing to recent events, and Russia on account of its religion is always able to count on the opposition of the Vatican, so the allies were likely to find the whole weight of the Catholic political machinery against them. In connection with this, comes the startling suggestion of Rev. Reginald J. Campbell, pastor of the City Temple, one of the most prominent Congregational churches in the world, that the Pope summon a general council of all Christian churches with the purpose of putting an end to the war. He argues that the Pope is the only person in Christendom that could take this step with any hope of success. Mr. Campbell says: "There is precedent for this in the fact that Protestants were summoned to the council of Trent, and who knows but that if they had accepted the invitation the scandal of a divided Christendom might have been averted?" Mr. Campbell was once the object of much bitterness in England, but this has long since disappeared and the prominent religious journals of the country now treat him with great respect. His suggestion is likely to command a very serious consideration.

Principal Lindsay is Dead.

Principal Lindsay, the distinguished head of the United Free Church College of Glasgow, passed away early in December. He was seventy-one years of age at the time of his death. During his youth he and Robertson Smith were firm friends. In the unfortunate controversy that drove Robertson Smith out of the Scotch church, Principal Lindsay remained his firm friend and was the real leader of the Liberals. Dr. Lindsay was a great student of philosophy and was preparing to write a history of mysticism at the time of his death, a task for which he had made unrivaled preparation. He is known to American readers through his history of the Reformation in two volumes in the International Theological Library series. Though maintaining sympathy with the radical scholars that wrote the Encyclopedia Biblica, and contributing largely to it, Dr. Lindsay kept alive his evangelical sympathies throughout his life and for many years was president of the missionary society of the Free Church. In his death, Scotland has lost one of her very foremost scholars and Christians.

Universalists Honor Great Leader.

The Universalist denomination is gathering up its historical treasures and is educating the young of the body to understand the meaning of its history. December 27 was observed in all Universalist churches as the centennial of the birthday of Edwin H. Chapin, who was a contemporary of Henry Ward Beecher, and who is regarded by Universalists as being the peer of this great man. He was the author of eighteen volumes and was much in demand in the councils of religion in his day. Dr. Bellows has said of him: "He has proven how to unite the profoundest reverence for Christianity with the completest hospitality for new thought, and the most generous sympathy for freedom. He has clung with never relaxing hand to the ark of the covenant and to the cross of Christ, while welcoming all fresh light, and all generous hopes, and all new learning."

Federation Head Recovers from Accident.

Rev. W. B. Millard is the executive secretary of the Chicago Church Federation Council. He fell from a railroad train a few weeks ago and as a result of his accident blood poisoning set in. He was taken to St. Luke's Hospital and the reports indicate that he will recover, though it will be some time before he is able to resume his work in connection with the Chicago Federation.

Seminary Inaugurates Evening Classes.

Evening classes to teach religious subjects are to be inaugurated at Lane Theological Seminary of Cincinnati and will continue from Jan. 12 to April 29. These classes will be open to Sunday-school teachers and other students of the Bible. Dr. J. V. Stephens will lecture on "Studies in the Beginnings of Christianity." Dr. Selby F. Vance's subject will be "Paul's Letters to the Thessalonians and Philippians," and Dr. Edward Mack will be heard in "Studies in the Psalms."

New Presbyterian Pastor at Lake Forest.

Lake Forest University is located in a suburb in easy reach of Chicago and the Presbyterian church of that suburb is easily the leading church of the community. Many great financial leaders of Chicago live in Lake Forest. The new pastor recently called there is Rev. George Roberts, Jr., who was graduated from Yale in 1903 and who has had two pastorates since leaving Union Theological Seminary. He succeeds Dr. John N. Freeman.

Salvation Army Gives More Christmas Dinners.

The Salvation Army of New York City has given Christmas dinners to the poor for many years but they are able to report that the gifts in the street kettles were greatly increased last year. It had been planned to give 25,000 Christmas dinners in the Bronx and Manhattan and 15,000 in Brooklyn but owing to the generosity of the people, this number was greatly increased.

Churches Consider Consolidation.

Los Angeles already has a down town problem and three Presbyterian churches are considering consolidation. They are: First Church, Rev. Edward Campbell, D. D., pastor; Immanuel, Rev. John Balcolm Shaw, D. D., pastor, and Central, Rev. A. B. Pritchard, D. D., pastor. The matter is not settled but plans are being discussed. Perhaps a new building would be built in the neighborhood of the Immanuel Church in which there would be offices for the Church Extension Board, and an assembly hall for presbytery. The other buildings would be sold and part of the money used in building up churches in the suburbs.

Presbyterians Have Vocation Sunday.

Vocation Sunday was observed in many Presbyterian churches on January 3. The idea is to aid young people in the choice of a life calling and in many cases the minister spoke in behalf of the ministry and missionary work as opportunities of life investment. Rev. Joseph Albert McCartney, pastor of the Kenwood Evangelical Church of Chicago, spoke on "The Christian Ministry: A Sermon to Young Men on the Christian Ministry as a Life Profession."

Universalists "Put Smile in Religion."

A conference of Universalist ministers was held in Chicago recently and plans were laid for a campaign of evangelism for their denomination in the Middle West. A slogan was adopted, "Universalism is the church that put the smile into religion." In days gone by, the Universalist church has been inclined to discount evangelism but lately there is an awakening interest in this phase of the work of the church. Five hundred new members were inducted into the New York churches last year through evangelistic effort. Rev. H. L. Haywood, who is pastor of the Universalist church of Webster City, Iowa, defined the program of the movement. He said: "The doctrine of the new Universalism is to make happiness, culture, and freedom from poverty universal. In proportion as we preach the gospel and lift up Christ Universalism will grow. Some say that Universalism cuts the nerve of missionary effort. I say that it is the very essence of missions and no true Universalist will rest until the last man in all of the world is saved."

Brooklyn Church Closes Up.

Ross Street Presbyterian church of Brooklyn has decided to discontinue its work and its members will unite with the Central Presbyterian church of that city. They recently held their last annual dinner, and revived the memory of bygone days. Rev. John Erskine Adams has been the pastor for the past twenty-three years.

Union In City Mission Work.

Presbyterians and Congregationalists have united in a joint work among the 30,000 Italians of San Francisco and have secured a Baptist worker from New York City to take charge. Rev. Robert Walker, formerly superintendent of Baptist Italian work in New York will undertake the work in an institutional building valued at $40,000.

Holiness Movement Deplores Higher Criticism.

The General Convention of the Movement for the Promotion of Holiness was held in Cincinnati last fall and one of the great themes for discussion was the higher criticism, which was regarded as very inimical to the interests of religion as represented by this group of Christians. Resolutions were passed declaring "We should refuse to be quiescent in the face of errors and false doctrines propagated by men in high places within the pale of the Christian church, but we should exercise our privilege and power of protest. We should use our prerogative and right of electing to office in the church only such men as are true to the Christian faith and the Bible. While we welcome true biblical research and reverent scholarship, we should, in every way, discountenance and refuse our support to anything and everything that lends its aid to destructive criticism."

New President for Lafayette College.

Lafayette College at Easton, Pa., is one of the oldest of the Presbyterian colleges of the country and an institution which, while maintaining scholarly standards, has also been very loyal to the denomination. It is an event in Presbyterian circles to have Dr. John H. McCracken, now Syndicate of New York University accept the presidency of Lafayette College. Dr. McCracken received his Master's degree in New York University and his doctor's degree in Germany and was for four years president of Westminster College of Missouri. At the same time this announcement was made, it was also announced that Dr. McCracken's brother had become president of Vassar College.

Minister and Wife Go Together.

Rev. and Mrs. Charles H. Gates of Auburndale, Mass., who were mentioned in a recent issue of The Christian Century, contracted pneumonia and passed away about the same time. Both were taken ill on December 6. They had lived together for sixty-three years. Mrs. Gates was in her ninetieth year and Mr. Gates in his ninety-second year. A very beautiful service was held in the Congregational chapel at Auburndale when the double funeral was held.

Japanese Christians Give American Deputation a Fraternal Greeting

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has performed an interesting and significant service in sending two of the most prominent of American Christians to bear the greetings of the American churches to the Churches of Christ in Japan. Dr. Shailer Mathews and Rev. Sidney Gulick are now enroute to take this message to the Land of the Rising Sun. The following is the message they are authorized to convey:

To the Churches of Christ in Japan.

Greeting: The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, on behalf of its thirty constituent denominations, has delegated two of its most honored and beloved representatives, to convey to you the assurance of our love unfeigned and of our prayers in your behalf.

Professor Shailer Mathews, doctor of divinity, is the dean of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago, an author widely known among us, and for this quadrennium, president of the Federal Council.

The Rev. Sidney L. Gulick, doctor of divinity, needs no introduction to you, for he has been a missionary in Japan for many years. Since his return to America upon his furlough, he has been invited to our most prominent pulpits, has secured a hearing for the cause of Japan by the foremost men of our nation, and returns to you not only as your brother, but entrusted with the duty of representing, with Dr. Mathews, this Federal Council. We are thus sending to you those who are well qualified to speak for us.

We beg to assure you, dear brethren, of the interest with which we have noted the recent history of Japan, that ancient and venerable nation with its notable achievements in the arts and sciences. With eager hand you have grasped what other peoples could offer for the enrichment of your life, and in turn you have contributed to the life of the world the inspiration of your fine enthusiasm. You have felt the stimulation of ethical ideals, the transcendent significance of moral values. In the industrial, intellectual and moral fields of your activity, America has noted your unwearied progress.

But our deepest interest and sympathy have been evoked by the numbers of those who have been reaching out eager hands to God. Beyond all else the spectacle of so many in Japan, seeking after a deeper and stronger spiritual life, has moved and still moves our hearts. It is with such sympathy toward you, beloved brethren, that we send our messengers to you.

We believe that the religion of Jesus makes its largest possible contribution to the peace and uplift of the world, not when it undertakes by ecclesiastical utterances and activities to solve the complex intellectual and practical problems of civilization, but rather when it leads men to the inner life of spiritual self-mastery and self-devotion, helps them to learn the privilege and joy of absolute trust in Christ our Lord, and enables them to appreciate the obligation of such loyal devotion to Him as finds expression in holy and unselfish service of humanity.

We are sending these, our brethren, to tell you as no written word of ours can tell, the sincerity of our affection, the eagerness of our desire, and the steady persuasion of our hope that we all, of the East and of the West, shall be one in Jesus Christ.

We pray that in your land and in ours, faith shall have its satisfying vision of our Lord, that love shall be sanctified by His fellowship, and that our common life shall be broadened in its sympathies and beautified with His likeness.

May the God of love unite our hearts in the bonds of holy sympathy, and bring us all into the joy of fellowship one with another through that diviner fellowship which is with the Father and with His Son our Saviour.

May peace and prosperity abide in all the homes of Japan. May your schools be centers of intellectual light and your churches centers of moral life and spiritual power. May believers be multiplied and all your land be blest by Him who is the Light of the world, the Redeemer of men.

Now unto Him that is able to keep you from falling and to present you faultless before the presence of His glory with exceeding joy, to the only wise God our Saviour, be glory and majesty, dominion and power both now and ever. Amen. Your brethren in Christ,

THE FEDERAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN AMERICA.

LAYMEN VITALIZING CHRISTIANITY.

Not many weeks ago 2,000 men crowded the Grand Ave. Temple, in Kansas City, to hear what a half-dozen business men from Wichita, Kas., had to say about Christianity. Henry J. Allen, editor of The Wichita Beacon, was the principal speaker at the afternoon meeting. Here is a portion of his address:

I've come to you from the atmosphere of facts that surround me in a newspaper office to say that the most practical, the most usable thing in the world today is the religion of Jesus Christ. I've come to say that the most practical man is the fervent Christian; the most useless is the chap who just sits around and lets his membership in the church count for nothing.

It wasn't the fault of the preacher that I wasn't converted long before I was. I don't believe the world has ever seen such a consecrated ministry as that of the present day. It wasn't the fault of the choir. It was the fault of the laymen—they hadn't made an attractive exhibition to me of their own church.

I tell you it takes prayer and service plus membership in the church to make a Christian today. If you feel that membership in the church is a great obligation, a great opportunity for service, then I think you are a Christian.

If the men of today lived according to the Ten Commandments there would be no problem of the boy in Kansas City. Some boy is gauging his life by yours. If the men live right, the boys will live right.

Christianity used to seem to me not a job for a red-blooded man. But, friends, let me tell you, it is a man's job. I have learned that only real men are Christians. That's almost a test of Christianity, friends.

The old Biblical miracles seem to me no greater, no harder to understand than the miracle of Abraham Lincoln riding all night to hold a prayer service with Henry Ward Beecher, or Gladstone arising in Parliament to tell of Christ.

Christianity must be vitalized through the men in its churches.

SUFFRAGE SOCIETY IN NORWAY DISSOLVED.

After an existence dating from 1885, the Society for Suffrage for Women has been dissolved, there being no longer any reason for its activities, since women in Norway have now obtained equal rights with men in the matter of voting in city, county and state elections.

In 1896 women paying taxes on incomes of more than $120 a year were granted the vote in city and council elections, and in 1907 the same privilege was given them in state elections. In 1910 every woman over 25 years of age, who had never been a public charge or sentenced in the courts, was granted suffrage in county elections, no matter what she earned, and in 1910 the Storthing, without debate, unanimously passed a law giving women common suffrage in state elections.

There has never been any militant suffrage agitation in Norway; the women leading the movement have worked quietly and made headway by means of pamphlets and lectures. Leading men in the political world have helped them without noisy demonstration of any sort.

For many years women have been members of city councils and county boards. While they have not been prominent as leaders in reform movements, they have proved themselves less apt than men to become professional politicians who hold office for the sake of personal profit. A couple of years ago one of their leaders held a seat in parliament for a few months as a substitute for a male member, but since then there has been no other woman member. It will doubtless be a few years before women acquire the experience to be represented in proportion to their numbers. At present about 35 per cent of the electorate are women. The majority of women voters continue to cast their votes for men.

A LOFTIER RACE SHALL RISE.

By John Addington Symonds.

These things shall be: A loftier race
Than e'er the world hath known shall rise
With flame of freedom in their souls
And light of knowledge in their eyes.

They shall be gentle, brave and strong
To spill no drop of blood, but dare
All that may plant man's lordship firm,
On earth, and fire, and sea, and air.

Nation with nation, land with land,
Unarmed shall live with comrades free;
In every heart and brain shall throb
The pulse of one fraternity.

New arts shall bloom of loftier mold,
And mightier music thrill the skies,
And every life shall be a song
When all the earth is paradise.

There shall be no more sin, no shame,
Though pain and passion slow may die;
For man shall be at one with God
In bonds of firm necessity.

WHAT FAITH IS.

Dr. J. H. Jowett.

Mental conclusions and spiritual experiences are quite two different things. Reason may gather piles of knowledge concerning the historic Jesus, but reason alone will give me nothing about the risen Christ. I want to know the Jesus of history, but I want to have communion with the Christ of faith. Such knowledge of the Lord comes to us through the act and attitude of faith. Faith is more than a mental decision; it is a surrender of the will. It is more than a verdict; it is the execution of the verdict.

It is of momentous importance to remember that the very core of faith is motion—a movement of the will toward the Lord Christ. The act of faith is the yielding of the personal life to the God who is revealed to us in Jesus Christ our Lord. And the life of faith is the constant repetition of that act of surrender until the repeated acts become an attitude and every choice and will in life is stamped with the pleasure and fear of God.

A "NIGHT" THOUGHT.

Dr. M. S. Rice of Detroit tells this story on himself. He is a great admirer of Bishop Quayle and in his earlier ministry was much impressed by the statement of that eloquent divine that some of his greatest thoughts had come to him when he was in "God's out-of-doors" during terrific storms:

"I made up my mind," said Dr. Rice, "that I would go out in the very next big storm and see if I couldn't have a great thought, too. It came in the middle of the night, but that never daunted me and two o'clock in the morning found me sitting out on a rock, drenched to the skin, with thunder and lightning going on all about me, but no great thoughts within. Years afterward I told Bishop Quayle about it.

"The only thought I had, I said, was what a big fool I was.

"'Well,' drawled he, 'wasn't that worth while?'"

THE LOVE OF GOD.

By Maltbie Davenport Babcock.

God's boundless love and arching sky
Above us when we wake or sleep,
Above us when we smile or weep,
Above us when we live or die.

God's tireless love! Beside the cot
Of her sick child the mother sleeps.
The heavenly Father ever keeps
Unweary watch—he slumbers not.

God's patient love! Misunderstood
By hearts that suffer in the night.
Doubted—yet waiting till heaven's light
Shall show how all things work for good.

God's mighty love! On Calvary's height,
Suffering to save us from our sin,
To bring the heavenly kingdom in,
And fill our lives with joy and light.

God's changeless love! The wandering one
Forsakes, forgets, dishonors; yet,
Repenting, going home, is met
With no reproach—"Welcome, my son!"

God's endless love! What will it be
When earthly shadows flee away,
For all eternity's bright day
The unfolding of that love to see!

A JOKE ON CIVILIZATION.

Some nations were fighting fiercely.

"Why are you fighting so?" inquired the bystanders, moved at length to curiosity.

"To save civilization!" replied the nations severally.

Here a draggled figure rose from the mire under the feet of the combatants and limped lamely away.

"And who are you?" asked the bystanders, with a disposition to get to the bottom of the matter.

"Don't speak to me—I'm civilization!" the figure made answer, somewhat pettishly.

BATTLE SONG OF SERVIA.

Servia, peaceful land of bowers,
Home of vines and leafy bowers,
Thou, the Danube's gentle daughter,
Rise, prepare for slaughter!
Foes are near! Will Servia cower?
Rise, and strike for freedom's dower!
Though no stately towers have we,
Yet our land is fair and free!

Free are Sav and Duna's waves;
Shall then we be Turkish slaves?
Like Stefan so fam'd in story,
We will lead to glory!
Foes are near! Will Servia cower?
Rise, and strike for freedom's dower!
Balkan vales, Moravian land,
Free shall be from tyrant's hand!

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Woman Superintendent Achieves

Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, Re-elected through Women, Has Saved Children's Health and Established Inspiring Record for Ed ucational Work.

Some of the accomplishments of Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, who was re-elected recently superintendent of Chicago schools by the activity of the women voters, are given in an interview with her by William L. Chenery of the Chicago Herald. Mr. Chenery asked about the schools as she had found them five years ago when she came to power, about her accomplishments and about those future developments for the people of which she hoped to be a part. She replied in the following illuminating sentences:

I first thought about the physical side of the children. I had noticed that in September children entered school hearty and well. By June they were pale and tired. That showed some wrong condition and it affected the teachers just as badly as it did the children.

The physical conditions were bad. I determined that every school room in Chicago would have sunshine every day possible in Chicago. For this reason all new buildings were constructed on a north and south line. That was one of the first things.

FRESH AIR IS NEEDED.

The next fight was for fresh air. I had been in office for only a few weeks. The order was that every schoolroom should have fresh air from the outside several times a day. I was told at once that I had embarked on a stormy sea without rudder and without sail. But a large percentage of the engineers are now as much in favor of fresh air as I am.

Still on the physical side, as the next step, the cooking was reorganized. The idea was that no product should be allowed to come out of a school kitchen which was not palatable and nourishing. That meant at least one good cook in an immense number of homes in Chicago.

Then we came to the question of happiness. Children ought to be happy in school. Unless they are, there isn't the response to stimulus which there should be. We went at this in a number of ways. First of all, the gymnasium was attacked. Two sorts of training are had in the gymnasium. One is recreation, denatured dancing as one of my critics once said. Then there is the exact training, the response to signals and the strengthening of the muscles. Incidentally the children are practicing the Kaiser's goosestep in the gymnasium, and they have been doing so for a long time.

REMEDIES PHYSICAL ILLS.

Next we came to the question of curvature of the spine, which the schools were developing.

That trouble develops during the middle grades. Children were forced to retain the same positions for so many hours when their muscles demanded frequent changes. Hours of the same position have been abolished largely. I wish, indeed, that some of the principals had more fluidity of mind on the subject and would permit children to change their seats more often.

Still in this connection, affecting both the health and the happiness of the children, is the question of sight. In all new schools we have installed divided curtains. That prevents the glare of the sun in the children's eyes. The change doesn't cost much, but on account of some malign influence all of the old schools have not been equipped in this way, and there are still dark rooms.

Then every effort has been made to abolish severe evening work for the children. It is not to be justified.

TO KEEP PUPILS.

These changes were preliminary. The next big thing was to recognize that children had types of mind. The schools assumed that all were made from the same mold, yet you cannot talk to the mother of children without being told about the children's differences. We were losing the great majority of children about the fifth grade. So many were weary of academic life. They wanted to get out.

For them we started industrial, or constructive work in sixteen schools. In all schools of course there is a certain amount of manual training and cooking. This constructive work allowed the children to put in half a day doing things. We began to keep them at once. Then we took some of the boys and girls who were fourteen years old, but not yet graduated, and gave them a chance in the prevocational work in the Crane, Lane, Lake and Flower high schools. Often these backward children caught up with and passed their more academic-minded schoolmates who had graduated at the grammar schools.

That meant the saving of great waste, a saving of the waste of the human spirit itself.

FOR BETTER TEACHING.

Then came the teachers. In order that teachers may delight in awakening the spirits of children they must themselves be awake daily. Every day the teacher must say not "What can I do to carry out instructions?" but "What can I do to arouse these children?"

We gave the teachers an opportunity to teach the subjects in which they had especial interest one period a week. That was one step. Then we organized teachers' councils. Teachers have ideas on the needs of their children but we were losing all the inventiveness and suggestion in passing on from authority to authority. The seventy-two councils are held twice a year. Each council appoints a delegate to bring to the attention of the superintendent contributions of the teachers. That, too, was a saving.

These were some of the things which I have been concerned about. I wanted to be re-elected this time in order to be able to stand out against the Cooley bill for separate vocational schools. As Agnes Nestor said at the Woman's Club, "We don't want to be set over in a corner and told to take this." We want to be a part of one great system. Some day the system will be such that child and teacher each will go to school with elastic joy. During the day the school should allow a life of activity which will satisfy both. At home in the evening the child will talk about the things done during the day, and will talk with pride. I want to make the school the great instrument of democracy. I do not want it to tend against democracy, as it would do if the Cooley bill were law.

MANY OTHER IMPROVEMENTS.

Mrs. Young did not mention the great extensions of the kindergartens for which she has been responsible. She did not mention the transformation of the evening schools and the summer schools which has been accomplished by her administration. She did not mention the broadening of the social life of the schools through the appointment of women deans. She did not speak of the establishment of social centers in some of the schoolhouses, a product of her regime. She did not refer to the raising of the standard of efficiency among the teachers.

She did not speak of that justice which has been extended to teachers through the adjustment of salary troubles. Nor did she notice the great example which Chicago has given to the nation in making teachers free from the restraints of bureaucratic control, in liberating them to give their best to their community.

This is the woman whom the women voters of Chicago appreciated and saved by their political power.

"WOMAN EDISON" DEAD.

Miss Margaret E. Knight, often referred to as the "woman Edison," and the first woman inventor to obtain an American patent, died a few days ago at a New York Hospital after an illness of three months. For twenty-five years she lived alone in a cottage, where she spent nearly nineteen hours out of the twenty-four in her laboratory. Here she developed the Knight-Davidson motor and many engine devices.

Miss Knight was born in Manchester, N. H., seventy-five years ago, and it was in that city at the age of twelve years she invented a stop motion contrivance for preventing the steel-tipped shuttles of the mill looms from falling out and injuring operatives. The idea came to her after a visit to a mill where her two brothers were employed.

In 1871 she invented a machine for making and folding square-bottom paper bags which is used today. In all she had eighty-seven inventions patented, most of which are used at the present time. They were confined almost entirely to rubber, cotton and shoe machinery. Miss Knight's work was hampered many times by lawsuits, but she never contested a patent without receiving the award.

A few years ago, after Miss Knight had perfected a tin can, which invention was readily taken up by several canners, her picture was hung in the Patent Office at Washington.

WHAT WOMEN ARE DOING.

In London there is a school for motoring women, owned and managed by women.

Miss Emily P. Biddle is the originator of the Red Cross stamps to fight tuberculosis.

Mrs. Mabel H. Kirk has been appointed psychologist of the Essex County (N. Y.) courts.

In Switzerland girls are rapidly giving up domestic employments for those of the office and shops.

A women's bootblack shop in Bloomington, Ind., is managed by women and only women can get a shine and have it done by one of their own sex.

Judges 13:8-16, 24, 25. Memory Verses, 12-14

Golden Text.—Beware, I pray thee, and drink no wine nor strong drink. Judges 13:4.

American Standard Bible.

Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons. (Used by permission.)

(8) Then Manoah entreated Jehovah, and said, Oh, Lord, I pray thee, let the man of God whom thou didst send come again unto us, and teach us what we shall do unto the child that shall be born. (9) And God hearkened to the voice of Manoah; and the angel of God came again unto the woman as she sat in the field: but Manoah her husband was not with her. (10) And the woman made haste, and ran, and told her husband, and said unto him, Behold, the man hath appeared unto me, that came unto me the other day. (11) And Manoah arose, and went after his wife, and came to the man, and said unto him, Art thou the man that spakest unto the woman? And he said, I am. (12) And Manoah said, Now let thy words come to pass: what shall be the ordering of the child, and how shall we do unto him? (13) And the angel of Jehovah said unto Manoah, Of all that I said unto the woman let her beware. (14) She may not eat of anything that cometh of the vine, neither let her drink wine or strong drink, nor eat any unclean thing; all that I commanded her let her observe.

(15) And Manoah said unto the angel of Jehovah, I pray thee, let us detain thee, that we may make ready a kid for thee. (16) And the angel of Jehovah said unto Manoah, Though thou detain me, I will not eat of thy bread; and if thou wilt make ready a burnt-offering, thou must offer it unto Jehovah. For Manoah knew not that he was the angel of Jehovah. (24) And the woman bare a son, and called his name Samson: and the child grew, and Jehovah blessed him. (25) And the Spirit of Jehovah began to move him in Mahaneh-dan, between Jorah and Eshtaol.

Verse by Verse.

BY ASA MCDANIEL.

Manoah. A popular man in his day. One who had many of the qualities which in that day the people called great. He was a Danite and lived at Zorah. Their home was for many years childless, and to the Hebrew of that day, it was most unfortunate. The gift of a son at this time would be of unusual importanee, and a gift of Jehovah. The Hebrew saw God everywhere; he recognized his hand in everything. The man of God. The message of God. Come again. The first visit is found in V. 3-5.

9. God hearkened to the voice of Manoah. Jehovah has been and is always willing to speak to souls sensitive to his message. As she sat in the field. She in all probability was caring for their sheep, while her husband who "was not with her" was attending to other business.

10. The man who appeared unto me, that came unto me the other day. The man who came to me the other day has appeared to me. The versions generally read, "on that day."

11. Manoah rose, and went. Manoah follows his wife to the field and asks the messenger if he had spoken to his wife. "Manoah's intense desire for the repetition of the angel's visit was prompted not by doubts or anxieties of any kind, but was the first of a lively faith and his great anxiety to follow out the instructions given."

12. Now, let thy words come to pass. Now when thy words come to pass. What shall be the ordering of the child? How shall the boy be brought up? And how shall we do unto him? What shall his calling be, or what shall his mode of life be?

13. The messenger does not answer the question directly, he only repeats his injunction to the woman, found in V. 4.

14. She may not eat. Directions for living in view of the promised child. See also the Nazarite vow. Num. 6:1-21. Strong drink when used in connection with wine means all kinds of strong drink.

15. Let us detain thee. With true Oriental hospitality Manoah invited the messenger to remain and eat of the meal; all of which was an expression of his gratitude. In this connection read Gen. 18:1-16; Judges 6:17-24.

16. I will not eat of the bread. The messenger declined to eat of the meat, and suggested that he "offer it unto Jehovah," which was cheerfully carried out by Manoah, see v. 19.

24. Called his name Samson. Samson is derived from "Shemesh" which means sun. There is no explanation of the word suggested in the story of Samson. The Lord blessed him. Jehovah endowed him with strength to meet the needs of his day and generation, just as he has helped men in all times and is helping them today. What we must learn is that our strength lies in our obedience to the true God.

25. The Spirit of Jehovah began to move him. Samson early began to realize his strength, and to consecrate it to the task of freeing his people from the hands of the Philistines. In true Hebrew thought he attributed it all to Jehovah. Esthaol is identified with the modern village Eshna. Here Samson was buried. Chap. 16:31.

A Lesson in Eugenics

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

Another judge of the long ago and another series of hero stories. The moving-picture man might find a rich field here. The day is at hand when through the eye-gate, all of these fascinating and instructive tales will be brought home in our Sunday-schools and churches. Such a movement as that of Pastor Hudson at Pomona in using pictures for his junior congregation is timely.

Rev. John R. Ewers.

SAMSON.

No polished Bostonian was Samson. He was the crude son of a starlight age. His muscles were better developed than the convolutions of his brain. His jokes were primitive; his pranks boyish. His task was to humble the Philistines and for twenty years he was a thorn in their side. Like most of us, Samson was a strange mixture. At times the spirit of Jehovah came upon him prompting him to deeds of great danger and heroism. At other times his huge body was shaken by the tempests of lust and anger. Very human, this ancient judge.

EUGENICS.

Samson was well born. His home was religious. His mother talked with angels. That was the reason why God talked to Samson. We are just beginning to appreciate the value of being well born. Those of us who came into the world untainted ought to do valiantly. It is a great thing to come unhandicapped into this world. Many a poor chap carries heavy weights through all his days. To have no trace of alcoholism, to be clean in every fiber, to have a bright mentality, to be normal in every capacity—ah, that is a wonderful heritage. God bless our parents, who against every temptation stood firm and who passed on to us uncorrupted the priceless treasures of the past. For life is like a cathedral. Thousands of people toiled painfully for years to build it, but a fool may blow it into rubbish in a night. Woe unto that youth who lifts up vandal hands against the treasures of his own body! Cursed be he who selfishly despoils that temple reared by good ancestors through the centuries. "If any man ruin this temple—him will God destroy." And God will.

THE VOW.

There are those who do not believe in taking pledges. Certainly it is easier not to do so. No one likes to be bound. But it was a great day when with a hundred of my school fellows, as a lad, I stood upon the school lawn while the teacher unfurled, from a balcony, the stars and stripes, and we lifted our hats and raised our right arms and swore allegiance to our country. It was a great hour when as a boy of thirteen I walked down the aisle of the old home church and gave my heart, unreservedly, to Jesus Christ. Pledges are necessary. We need to drive our stake. We need to pledge our honor. We need to tie ourselves up. The committed life is the powerful life. "This one thing I do." That spells power. It is the secret of Paul's success. Sign the pledge. Promise that intoxicating liquors shall never find the way to your lips. You remember how, after you took the Endeavor pledge, you used to get out of bed, light the lamp and read the verse which, in the busy day, you had forgotten? That put iron into you. It is well that you made the promise. If modern young people do not like to sign the pledge it is a sorry comment upon their nerve! Pledges are splendid things. Make them and keep them. Be true to your Bible, your church, your country, your wife. I tell you we need a new sense of high honor in this land. We might well pray for a new evolution of sacred honor. Honor is worth fighting for. A Christian man should certainly have a gentleman's honor. Samson carried the Nazarite vow. It gave him whatever strength he possessed. The vow carried the idea of entire consecration to Jehovah. He made mistakes. He was pitiably weak, but that vow put stamina into him. It gave him a glorious end, a sacrificial death.

DELILAH.

In his biography be it written—he was undone by a beautiful, faithless woman. This ancient Cleopatra had her Anthony. A million times has this human story been repeated. A woman's influence either makes or breaks a man. Behind Thomas A. Edison stands his wonderful wife. She watches over him and guards his marvelous genius. Now that his energies are sorely tried by the rebuilding of his plants, she makes him sleep six instead of three hours as heretofore. When you read the biography of great men always note the influence of the woman. Isaac Newton, Phillips Brooks, Lord Kitchener and "Bobs" were bachelors. All the more glory for their greatness.

SHORN OF STRENGTH.

There is the sad note of the story of this ancient Hercules. Every man has his point of greatest weakness. Yielding means the loss of strength. Sir Galahad boasted the strength of ten. There is a tonic in the superman doctrine of Germany. The hatred of weakness; the grand scorn of softness; the noble contempt of the lack of strength—we may not believe in war, but we are bound to admire, being men, that scorn of weakness.

Our Readers' Opinions

THE TITHE QUESTION.

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

In your issue of November 5, I find an article on the question "Shall we give one-tenth to God?" accompanied by an intimation that you would be glad to hear from others on the subject of tithing.

My own answer to the question would be, "Yes, and the other nine-tenths, also."

It seems clear to me that the Christian has no right to use any fraction of his income or property in any way other than that in which he conscientiously believes his divine Master wishes him to use it.

How would it accord with the general teaching of the scriptures, if we should resolve to love the Lord, our God, with one-tenth of our heart, and with one-tenth of our soul and with one-tenth of our mind?

Such a resolution might naturally result in our offering one-tenth of our income to the service of God.

Would I, then, you may ask, urge all Christians to place their total incomes in the collection envelopes for the support of the church services?

By no means; for I do not believe God wishes us to do that. He wishes us to provide food, shelter and raiment for ourselves and families.

Personally, I believe he wishes us to enjoy some amusements; excluding, of course, such as are harmful, or too expensive.

There are other good things which, at times, God wishes us to have: and has placed within our possession the means of obtaining them. In doing this, we may not ask concerning another person—"Lord, and what shall this man do?"—since this other man is in a position to decide better than we can what is the Lord's will concerning him.

If any brother of mine believes it his duty to offer exactly one-tenth of his income—no more and no less—for the support of the church, I have no quarrel and no argument with such an one, but I would protest against the tendency on the part of clergymen and missionaries to assume that all which does not go into the contribution box is used to promote selfish ends.

When property is so used such use is, certainly, contrary to God's wish and Christ's teaching. R. D. SWIFT.

"BAPTIZO," "TAUFEN" and "IMMERSE."

Dear Brother Morrison:—I am reading your "The Meaning of Baptism." Have just read first three chapters. Lest I forget I stop to raise a question. Your contention that we revolt against Campbell's translation of the word by "immerse," etc., is well taken. But the question arises, "Would the first English readers have felt so?" If in the first English version the word had been translated, and then likewise in all succeeding versions would not the technical meaning have attached to it when the context warranted? That is, would not the word immerse, for instance, have acquired the technical, religious significance which we now attach to "baptize" in our thinking? If the Scriptural act had been used, of course it would.

Does not the German translation of the word "baptizo" justify my suspicion that the special significance would have attached even though the act in no wise suggested the root-idea of the word? Or had the German "taufen" a special significance that made it a competent translation of "baptizo." Luther translated "baptizo" "taufen," did he not? Do you get my point? L. E. MURRAY.

Richmond, Ind.

[Mr. Murray's point is perfectly clear and just as valid as it is clear. The German taufen means etymologically "to dip" just as the Greek baptizo means etymologically "to dip." But the use of taufen as the translation of baptizo necessitated the reconstruction of the meaning of taufen, which reconstruction it obviously underwent, just such a reconstruction as the word baptizo underwent in late pre-Christian times in Palestine. The German use of the word in its religious signification has no reference to dipping at all, for the general mode of administering taufe in Germany is by sprinkling. Of course taufen does not refer to the sprinkling either; it refers to the function of induction into the church or consecration or to the non-Scriptural act of christening.

Had the first versions of the English Bible translated baptizo by "immerse," the word "immerse" would have undergone precisely the same reconstruction that taufen underwent. I regard it as fortunate, however, that our English scholars have consistently refused to translate the word on the basis of its etymology and chose to transliterate it so that its actual meaning could be more easily carried over.—C. C. M.]

"MEANING OF BAPTISM" HELPS.

DEAR MR. MORRISON:

I have been amused by some of the comments published about your book, The Meaning of Baptism. The main point seems to have been entirely lost. But that you may know that the book has to some a real message I mention the effect it has had upon me. I never did accept the old legal explanation of baptism, and never did succeed in giving a satisfactory meaning to the ordinance until your book was published. Now my mind is clear on the subject, and since reading your book when baptizing I explain that baptism is the initiatory process of taking membership in the church. It gives baptism an office or function, and to me your arguments are conclusive. I still retain the symbolical lessons, which are beautiful and instructive but inadequate to explain the real meaning of the ordinance. I thank you for the message of the book and its assistance to me in clearing up this subject.

Corydon, Ind. M. A. COSSABOOM.

MYSTICISM AGAIN.

To the Christian Century:

I read with interest the able articles in the Todd-Ames discussion. Religion seems to be born through nature, call it intuition, instinct, desire, or what you will; and like desire, it may become perverse or beneficent.

Mysticism is generally defined by its devotees in terms mystifying. We imagine cold to be a living active force, inferring from certain sensations, while it is only a negative term, and is simply the absence of heat. It is our removal from certain of the active effects of the sun. Our feelings make us conscious of the absence of the heat.

Mysticism is the negative of rationality. It is the condition of feelings out of harmony with nature. We imagine the feelings as being produced by an active force, while it is simply the lack of mental moorings. In mysticism there is a consciousness that something is absent. The mind is detached from rationality. Mysticism may very consistently be defined as the asylum of religious ignorance, superstition and perversion.

The oriental in India has crawled in the dust for ages to make himself more holy. His acts are repulsive to nature and revolting to rationality. A man told me a supreme being interpreted a word to him contrary to the obvious meaning. He has slipped anchor into mysticism with the oriental. His mind has missed, and his body is on the road to the insane asylum.

Effects in mysticism have dragged the teaching of Christ into the dust from which it has not emerged, and have impeded civilization more than a thousand years.

The Mid-Week Service

BY SILAS JONES.

TOPIC FOR JANUARY 27, 1915.

Dangers of Our Way. Matt. 7:13-23; Luke 12:13-20; Col. 2:6-17:1; Jno. 2:12-17.

The dangers which meet us in life are not arbitrarily put in our way. They come with opportunity. They seem to be necessary to our development. Our philosophy may halt when it tries to explain them; when we look back over the way by which we have come and have the consciousness that we have not lived in vain, we are thankful that we had to encounter danger. We leave it to others to construct a world free from danger; if we can encounter the dangers that are along our way and be the stronger for the experience, we have no cause for complaint.

FALSE TEACHERS.

Why should we listen to deceivers? Why should we not always have our ears open to those who are wise and sincere? It takes a wise man to know the folly of the fool and a good man to know the baseness of false teachers. At our best, we are imperfect, we are growing. We make mistakes through ignorance. Our motives, good though they may be, can be further purified. Then, the teachable attitude subjects us to deception. We are willing to learn from every one we meet if he has something to teach us. To be suspicious is to be shut off from those who can help us. Experience alone can teach us whom to trust and whom to distrust.

MEDDLESOMENESS.

The good man is interested in his neighbors. He likes to know what opinions they hold. He tries to influence them for their good. But he knows where to stop. He knows where his responsibility ends and theirs begins. Jesus declined to interfere in the matter of dividing an estate. That was not his business. It was his business to open the eyes of the young man who appealed to him to the ethics of the situation. Our neighbor's opinions and conduct concern us. We have a right to demand certain things of him. He has a right to demand certain things of us. And here lies the danger. On the one side is indifference. "You go your way and I will go mine. We have nothing in common." We cease to live human lives when we say this. But how to exert a legitimate influence upon him is to be learned and in the process of learning we make serious blunders.

THRIFT AND AVARICE.

A man who is genuinely enlisted in the service of Christ wisely provides for himself and those who depend upon him. He believes that God's providence operates through the foresight of man and the industry of man. His world is one of law and order. In it those who work and save are most likely to have food and shelter. To look the whole world in the face and owe not any man is a worthy aim. A good piece of evidence that a man is really converted is the payment of an old grocery bill. But thrift may pass over into covetousness. Avarice is never known or acknowledged to be such by the man it holds in its grasp. There is a fascination about money that causes it to deceive the very elect.

THE CONCEIT OF KNOWLEDGE.

The harm that conceit does is that it fences us in so that we have few chances of increasing our resources. We must have confidence in ourselves and that confidence extends to our knowledge. We must act upon our own knowledge or faith. It is easy for us, if we can do things, to become conceited. We use freely the terms "foolish," "ignorant," of the actions of persons whom we do not understand. We call him superstitious who believes what we have discarded and the rationalist is the man who has discarded an article of our creed. There is plenty of room for humility right here.

Deut. 8:11-18; 13:3; Prov. 6:27: I Tim. 6: 9-10; Jas. 2-4, 12-15; I Pet. 1:6-7; Matt. 24:42-44; Rev. 3:2-3; I Cor. 16:13.

Disciples Table Talk

Record of a Successful Ministry.

On January 1, George A. Miller began his ninth year as pastor of Ninth Street Church, Washington, D. C. During the past eight years, 792 persons have been enrolled as members of the church which now has a resident membership of nearly 1,100. The Bible-school has grown from an attendance of less than 400 to a regular attendance of between 600 and 700 and is surpassed in attendance by only two other schools in the city. This is now the largest church and school of the Disciples east of the Allegheny mountains. Eight years ago there was a mortgage of $15,000 on the church property together with a floating debt of several hundred dollars. These debts have been paid and a residence adjoining the church building has been purchased and remodeled into a Bible-school house. A new system of semi-indirect electric lighting has recently been installed. The church is a living link in both the home and foreign societies and contributes liberally to all other missionary and benevolent work.

Sunday-school Gives Everything to Missions.

The Sunday-school at Hutchinson, Kans., has arranged to give all of its collections the coming year to missions. They are enabled to do this by the fact that the official board of the church has agreed to meet all bills for supplies. They plan to give their money the coming year, as follows: Mission work in Hutchinson, $50; Kansas missions, $190; missions in America, $150; foreign missions, $470; church extension, $100; National Benevolence Society, $25; ministerial relief, $25. Total, $1,000.

Minister Decides to Go.

Although urged by a majority of the church to remain, J. T. Houser of Davenport, Ia., has decided to leave First Church. A reception was given to the pastor and his wife one evening recently and the Christian Endeavor Society presented them with a set of silver tea spoons bearing the Christian Endeavor monogram. The Loyal Sons gave Mr. Houser a fountain pen. The church parlors were nicely decorated and a very interesting program of music and addresses was given.

Paris, Ill., Church Has Annual Meeting.

At the annual meeting held recently, Paris Ill., church received the annual reports. Every society in the church had their bills paid and a balance, but there was a deficit in the church treasury which will be taken care of by special effort. The attendance of the Sunday-school the past year has been 408. The Aid Society raised over $500. This church begins the year in a series of evangelistic meetings conducted by Herbert Yeuell.

Galesburg, Ill., Church Publishes Statistics.

The church at Galesburg, Ill., has issued the statistics of that work for the past year. It is seen that the money raised for current expenses was $3,133.96. The money received for the new building was $8,648.02. In addition, the departments showed receipts of $3,047.10. The net resident membership is 538. H. A. Denton is pastor.

Mormons Use Church Baptistry.

December 27 was an interesting day at Boone, Ia., church. In the morning, an Indian missionary, Levi M. Rouillard, spoke on the Sioux tribe and their ways. In the afternoon the Mormons of the community used the church baptistry to baptize a number of converts. In the evening a ministerial student, E. J. Cartwright, who is studying for the ministry at the University of Chicago and who was home visiting his father over Christmas, preached.

Pacific Northwest Parliment Closes.

The Pacific Northwest Parliament which met this year at First Church, Seattle, has concluded its sessions. There was a good attendance and nearly all of the speakers were present to take their parts on the program. Doctor Shailer Mathews addressed the meeting. He was in the city euroute to Japan on a commission for the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. The meeting will be held at Walla Walla next near. The new officers are W. W. Burks, president; A. L. Chapman, vice-president; Tolbert F. Weaver, secretary and treasurer. The meeting closed with an automobile sight-seeing trip over the city of Seattle.

Preacher Addresses Printers.

W. N. Briney, of Broadway Church in Louisville, Ky., was a printer before he became a preacher and was once a member of Cincinnati Typographical Union No. 3. On a recent Sunday afternoon, he spoke before Louisville Typographical Union, No. 10, of which he is an honorary member, on "The Influence of the Christian Religion on Social Conditions." He said "Christ's halo was a workingman's cap, and labor owes its present high social standing to the influence of the Carpenter on the world. Labor was once degrading but now is honorable, and people now hold it is dishonorable not to do some kind of work. Cicero said it was a disgrace to soil one's hands with implements of toil but this is not the Christian point of view."

Rev. W. N. Briney, who recently addressed the Louisville Typographical Union.

Minister Goes Home.

W. G. Surber finished his earthly ministry at Oklahoma City recently. He was formerly minister at Moberly, Mo., where he had a large circle of friends who will regret his passing.

Church Refuses Pastor's Resignation .

E. W. Killion recently resigned at Pickering, Mo., but the church at a business meeting refused to accept his resignation by a vote of sixty to forty. The official board had previously decided to accept the resignation. W. A. Chapman was present and made an address at the annual meeting.

Minister Works with Human Welfare League.

Albert Gulledge of Lansing, Mich., is state chairman of the Human Welfare League. This organization proposes to secure the names of ten million voters who will vote for a president pledged to national prohibition in 1916. While Mr. Gulledge is busy with this work, he preaches on Sundays at Capital Church in Lansing.

Disciple Boys Win From Congregationalists.

The basket ball team of Central Church in Wichita, Kans., played with the Congregationalist team last week. They did not run up the large score which characterized the game with the Presbyterians but they won 30 to 22. Experts pronounced the work in this game as exceptionally good.

Moving Pictures of Moses.

Moving pictures of Moses may seem an anachronism, but they were actually given at Lodi, Cal., church recently. V. M. Hovis said: "The pictures will be used when we think they add anything to the historical data of the sermon, and no charge is ever to be made when the pictures are shown. We realize a great part of man's knowledge is gained by use of his eyes, and we also believe human beings also need a certain amount of amusement and recreation which is educational. This addition will not cut the regular services shorter, but will tend to lengthen them."

Is Known as Marrying Parson.

Walter Scott Priest of Wichita, Kans., is known as the marrying parson and he has a parlor in the church fitted up specially for weddings. Last year he married 64 couples and in 1910, 63. He recently celebrated his 55th birthday. He has been in the ministry for 37 years.

Hold a Church School Institute.

The state superintendent of Bible-schools of Iowa, Leon S. Dudley, is holding church school institutes and recently began one at Cedar Rapids. Among the subjects discussed are "The Child God's Child, "Thou Hast Known From a Child," "The Senior Age," "Boys Will be Boys." The church took great interest in the meetings and attended in large numbers.

In and Around Chicago

The Ministerial Association will join in a union meeting of Chicago ministers held under the auspices of the Chicago Church Federation Council on January 25. Rev. Martin D. Hardin, D. D., pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church will deliver an address on "America's Supreme Opportunity in the Light of Europe's Colossal Failure."

W. C. McDougal of Jubbalpore, India, who is home on a furlough and studying at the University of Chicago, spoke at a C. W. B. M. day service at the Evanston church, January 10. He said few people realized the vastness of India's population. This was illustrated by the supposition that the people of India should march by the Evanston church at the rate of three a minute. The column marching night and day would require thirty years to pass. The address was heard by a large and appreciative congregation.

The difference which has existed for the past year between C. G. Kindred of Englewood church and the Co-operative Council of City Missions with regard to the Disciples Mission at Morgan Park has been adjusted. The Chicago Christian Missionary Society made application to have the Morgan Park mission approved by the council and after a full hearing, with the Morgan Park ministers present, the approval was granted. This removes a knotty problem that has taxed the ingenuity of Chicago church leaders for some time.

C. C. Morrison visited Detroit on January 10, speaking at the great Y. M. C. A. of that city in the afternoon and at Central church in the morning.

Martin Luther Pearce of Canton, Ohio, spoke at Metropolitan church on January 10. It is reported that J. H. O. Smith did not accept the call to this church.

Jasper T. Moses of Colorado has been called to Douglas Park church where W. C. Hull recently ministered.

The Chicago Christian Missionary Society will hold its quarterly assembly in the First M. E. church building at Washington and Clark in the loop on January 31. The speakers will be O. F. Jordan, Dr. P. L. Prentis and Basil S. Keusseff. The topic discussed will be the Russian mission and plans for housing it.

Y. M. C. A. Makes Twentieth Annual Request.

For twenty years, the Y. M. C. A. of Los Angeles has asked the pastor of First Church, Los Angeles, to make the New Year's address to the Association and this year the task fell to Russell E. Thrapp. He took for his topic, "Yesterday, Today and Forever."

Pittsburg Edifice in Conflagration.

The edifice of Wilkinsburg Church, Pittsburg, Pa., was entirely destroyed by fire recently. The congregation is not discouraged by this catastrophe but will undertake to rebuild on a new location at once. There were 95 accessions to this church the past year, 63 being inducted into the church by baptism. The net gain was 82. The money raised for all purposes was $4,300, of which $662 was used for benevolences. The gain in the average attendance of the Sunday-school over the previous year was 57. Walter Scott Cook is the pastor.

Annual Report for Wellington, Kans.

Wellington, Kans., church reports 37 additions during 1914 with 28 losses and the present membership is 404. The money raised in all departments was $3,635 of which $750 was given to missions. The C. W. B. M. of the church in connection with the missionary women of the other congregations of the county, joined in the support of V. C. Carpenter in Porto Rico. This coming year, the women of the church will undertake his support without outside help. The congregation conducts a mission in the east side of the city in the railroad section, where they have a neat chapel all paid for. Henry W. Hunter became pastor of this church in November of last year.

Pastor Lectures on Palestine.

The Sunday services are greatly enriched at Gibson City, Ill., by the fact that the pastor, C. J. Robertson, has spent eight months in Palestine the past year. He uses his experiences to make his sermons more interesting and he also lectures. A Chautauqua circuit recently made him a very flattering offer for his services next summer.

Study Church History at Prayer-meeting.

The church at Cedar Rapids, Ia., will study church history at the prayer-meetings this winter, beginning January 6. The pastor, Walter M. White, who is president of the general convention of the Disciples of Christ, will lecture first upon the fathers of the religious movement of the Disciples. The series begins with a study of Thomas Campbell.

New York Disciples Have a Dinner.

The Disciples of New York city will have the annual dinner of the Missionary Union on February 9. There will be an interesting program of music and speeches.

Union Evangelism at Noblesville, Ind.

The churches of Noblesville, Ind., have gone together for a union meeting, under the leadership of "Bob" Jones and company. There is a large tabernacle built especially for the meetings and the community is much interested in the efforts being put forth for the regeneration of the city. The First church, of which L. C. Howe is pastor, is participating in the meetings and will hold a follow up meeting after the union effort closes.

A Union Church of Christ at Seeley, Cal.

Geo. A. Ragan was formerly a minister and is now a Christian business man, but he cannot escape the call to preach on occasion. This fall, under his leadership, the Union Church of Christ was organized at Seeley, Cal., with 25 members from different denominations. This organization is the only congregation in Seeley, though some denominational agencies have been anxious to enter the field. The church uses a simple statement of faith in Jesus as its creed and practices a monthly communion service. Since organization, the congregation has increased its membership to 50. The church maintains no denominational connections whatever.

J. N. Jessup Begins at Hopkinsville, Ky.

J. N. Jessup has assumed charge of the work at Ninth Street Church, Hopkinsville, Ky. On his first Sunday, he pleaded for a pure gospel in the pulpit and a pure faith in the pew. He paid a beautiful tribute to his predecessor, H. D. Smith.

A Good Year at Midway, Ky.

There have been 97 additions to the church at Midway, Ky., during the past year without any outside assistance. The pastor, Rev. T. S. Tinsley, has held meetings in six other fields in Tennessee, Missouri and Kentucky, and in these meetings there have been 204 additions, making a total of 301 additions for the year. Building enterprises have been started in three points and one congregation has been organized. Midway church, including the Woman's Auxiliary, has given $1,000 for missions during the past year. The church has a Living Link in the mountains of Kentucky, and in the far fields of India. An atmosphere of faith pervades the congregation and the New Year opens auspiciously with the purpose to freshen up the church building with fresco and new carpet.

Bethany Student Revives Church.

Sistersville, W. Va., church was to have had a series of revival services led by C. D. Poston but on account of his serious illness he was obliged to give up holding the meetings. W. V. Lytle, a Bethany College student, came in his stead. The meetings were preceded by cottage prayer-meetings. There were eight new members inducted into the church and a Christian Endeavor Society was organized. The church held a communion service in the homes of two members who are not able to attend the church services.

Tabernacle Meeting at Wellington, Kans.

The churches of Wellington, Kans., have gone together to hold union evangelistic services and have erected a large tabernacle holding 2,000 people. Evangelists Lowery and Moody are holding the meetings. First church of that city is co-operating heartily.

Illinois Secretary Sends News.

Several news items of interest are contained in a recent letter from John R. Golden, secretary of the Illinois Christian Missionary Society. He states that Stephen E. Fisher is at the present time ill and confined to a room in a hospital in Champaign. The Six Mile church in Jackson County has been reorganized following an evangelistic effort which brought thirteen additions to the church. The office of the Illinois Christian Missionary Society has been moved in Bloomington, and may now be found at 504 People's Bank Bldg.

William Woods College Prospers.

William Woods College at Fulton, Mo., of which Jos. L. Gravin is president, has an unusually large attendance this year. It is a standardized junior college for women and the improved equipment and instruction are given as the reason for the increase in the size and spirit of the student body.

Interesting the Young People.

Sterling Place church, Brooklyn, N. Y., knows how to keep things interesting to the young people. On a recent evening the Endeavorers had an old-fashioned "taffy-pull." Taffy candy and sticky hands was the program. Another evening, the pastor, Malo Marius Ammunson, lectured under the auspices of the Sigma Girls using the stereopticon. The topic was "A Brooklynite in Shakespeare Land." In this lecture, the pastor told of his experiences in visiting the scenes of the lives of Shakespeare and Anne Hathaway.

A Disciple for Fifty-eight Years.

William B. Raper was a member of First Church in Lincoln, Neb., at the time of his death, December 29. He had been a Disciple for fifty-eight years. He went across country to Nebraska in 1858 from Bloomington, Ind., and carved for himself an abiding place in the wilderness. He was prominent in politics and was honored with many positions of trust during his lifetime. The cause of his death was apoplexy. He was eighty-two years of age.

Business Men Tell Why They Abandoned the Church.

Some little time ago, Carl A. Burkhardt sent out a letter to the business and professional men of Lexington, Mo., asking a number of questions about their religious life. The answers have come back and the pastor preached on the evening of January 3, the first of the sermons based upon these replies. The subject of this sermon was "Why Some Lexington Men Have Cut Out the Church." There have been ten accessions in this church at recent services. Events that lie immediately ahead are the annual meeting, the every-member canvass and an efficiency campaign.

Methodists Give Disciples a Building.

The First Methodist Church of Greeley, Colo., recently gave free of all cost to the Disciples Church at Gill, Colo., where J. E. Lynn ministers, a church building which was no longer being used. It cost when new $2,500 and was in good repair except the roof. It is being moved to Gill where a fine basement will be built under it and it will make a commodious equipment for the Gill Church which has been meeting in a hall. This is a splendid illustration both of interdenominational comity and of the appreciation in which the work that has been done at Gill is held by the community at large.

Leads Canvass for Whole City.

A religious home visitation of Rockford, Ill., was undertaken recently by the co-operation of all religious bodies. The general committee asked W. B. Clemmer to be the general superintendent. On Saturday, December 5, from nine to twelve, the whole city was covered by over 600 visitors. The Central church received names of 102 new families and of more than sixty of these no information was had previously, as preferring the Disciples. It is hoped that many of these may become active members, through the follow up system employed. There have been ten additions to the church recently. Despite the distressing financial conditions in such manufacturing cities as Rockford, and the fact that the congregation is worshipping in the basement until the entire auditorium is finished, good work is being done.

Gifts for the Pastor and Wife.

First Church of Charleroi, Pa., presented their pastor, E. N. Duty, who began his fourth year January 1, with a purse containing $50 as a Christmas present to show their esteem and love for him. Mrs. Tracey Rhodes, of Boynton, Somerset County, Pa., presented a beautiful hand-made quilt to Mrs. Duty. Mrs. Rhodes is seventy-eight years of age. She made the entire quilt herself. Members of the church made beautiful gifts to Mrs. Duty. Mr. Duty has plans formulated and committees appointed for a tabernacle meeting to be held by his church in February with the Minges Evangelistic Company leading. Two accessions were received recently.

Los Angeles Pastors Discuss Union.

At a recent meeting of the Ministerial Association of Los Angeles, the ministers discussed the problem of the relation of the local church to the unimmersed Christians of the community. Wm. Bayard Craig made a report on the practice of two churches in Denver who receive these Christian people as "associate members." The question proved to be a very live one and there was considerable discussion on the advisability of practicing Christian union as well as preaching it.

Pastor Asks Organizations to Evangelize.

Geo. A. Campbell, pastor at Hannibal, Mo., began a series of evangelistic services on January 3. It was observed as "the New Leaf Sunday" and everybody was urged to start the year off right. Every organization of the church is asked for some form of co-operation in the special meetings. The pastor has been asked to serve on the program committee for the next general convention at Los Angeles.

Church Extension Enlists the Churches.

The Church Extension Society makes a report for the first quarter of the new missionary year which shows a very material increase in the regular offerings of the churches but a decrease in the personal offering. This is because no annuity gifts were received in December. It is reported that applications for church extension loans are coming in in larger numbers than commonly, and several churches must have money to save their credit.

Sunday-school Helps Prayer-meeting.

The prayer-meeting problem has been solved at Warren, O., where they have asked various Sunday-school classes to be responsible for different months of the year in the aid of the mid-week prayer-meeting. There has been unusually large attendance and the people who come for the one month, learn to come at other times. The topic on a recent evening was "Divine and Human Agencies in a Great Revival."

Watch Church Attendance of Officers.

There grew a suspicion in Warren, Ohio, that some of the officers were not attending church as well as they might. A record was kept for four months and only one officer beside the pastor was at two services a Sunday throughout the entire period. A number, however, were almost perfect in attendance. One officer attended only two services in that period. Another only five. These facts were printed in the parish paper and were read with interest by the members of the congregation.

Read the Bible Through in a Year.

Many of the members of the church at Uhrichsville, Ohio, will read the Bible through in 1915. This is accomplished by reading three chapters on week days and five chapters on Sunday. The members who start in on this are asked to send the pastor a post card and at the end of the year the list will be examined to see how many persevered throughout the entire year. A printed card passed out in January shows where the members are reading on any given day of the month.

Church Election by Ballot.

Wellington, Kans., church issues a ballot for the church election that looks like a regular political ballot with squares to mark in. Three candidates for trustee were presented and only one could be elected. Eight candidates for deacons were offered and five could be elected. Evanston, Ill., church has a nominating committee present names of candidates to the official board and when they are approved a ticket is printed with a blank after every name. In the election, the members write alternate names against any to be rejected. In this church only enough officers are nominated to fill the offices.

Church Issues Annual Report.

Central church, Buffalo, formerly known as the Jefferson St. church, has issued a very interesting annual report. The additions at the regular services have been 100; weddings, eighteen; funerals, twenty-nine; the audiences have been the largest in eleven years. B. S. Ferrall, the pastor, is secretary of the Billy Sunday Campaign Committee. He is also the secretary for the third year of the Buffalo Ministers' meeting which is an organization forty years old and has a membership limited to thirty-eight ministers. He is the president of the State Ministerial Association of the Disciples, and is a member of the Buffalo Church Peace Centenary Committee. The Bible-school of this church entered into a contest on January 3, with four other schools in the neighborhood, Central church putting its attendance against the combined forces of the other four.

Class Has a Christmas Dinner.

The Berean Bible Class of Palestine, Tex., had a turkey dinner on Christmas day. There were addresses about the table from various members of the class on themes both humorous and practical. C. S. Melson spoke on "Gas;" Miss Bessie Wagnon on "Flowers;" and the pastor, L. B. Haskins spoke on "The Bible School and the Church." The teacher of the class, Bonner Frizzell, was presented with a beautiful gold chain and pen knife. The class is a mixed adult class.

Okmulgee, Okla., Rejoices in Progress.

The New Year's dinner at Okmulgee, Okla., was an enthusiastic function in that all expenses have been met the past year and the church has had a substantial net gain in membership. The pastor, R. W. Clymer, is beginning his sixth year with this church. He was given a vote of confidence and a 33 per cent increase in salary.

Ten Thousand Church Calls to Be Made.

Ten thousand calls are to be made in the parish of Broadway church, Los Angeles, Cal., during 1915, but not by the pastor alone. During the month of January every member is asked by the pastor, Charles F. Hutslar, to make twenty-five calls on members or prospective members, and the response to date is very encouraging. The motto for this campaign is "Every Member Busy for Christ."

Christian Education Coming Into Its Own

Ministers and Churches Aroused by the Plea for More Adequate Support of Our Educational Institutions.

Following are some of the choice messages of encouragement that have come to the office of the Education Day Secretary of the Board of Education. They tell their own story of widespread interest in our educational institutions:

"Glad that Education is to 'Come into its own'—after a long delayed start." W. J. WRIGHT, Franklin, Ind.

"The apportionment of territory fine plan. The map will help. This year Shelby gave for first time to the cause of Christian Education. May this be the greatest year for our schools." E. B. QUICK, Shelby, O.

"We must educate; we must educate, or we shall perish. Education is vitally essential to any permanent forward movement." JOHN G. QUINLAN, Georgetown, O.

"We are greatly rejoicing in the Men and Millions Movement and praying earnestly for its success. We believe God will give the Victory." ERNEST B. MORLEY, Ghent, Ky.

"I trust all of our ministers and congregations will co-operate with you in so feasable and effective a plan. It cannot but help in securing a larger support for our deserving institutions." S. H. ZENDT, Bloomington, Ill.

"Am glad to see this united effort to help all our Christian schools and other interests." J. A. HOPKINS, Confluence, Pa.

"We will take the Education Day offering." HUGH S. CALKINS, Augusta, Ky.

"We are in heartiest sympathy with our educational work. We feel the need of it in S. E. Mo." J. B. LOCKHART, Sikeston, Mo.

"The Christian college is fundamental to the Lord's work. I am holding the ideal of being a minister or missionary before my young people constantly. Praying and hoping for results. God bless you in this grand work." A. F. RITCHEY, York, Neb.

"You have my hearty co-operation in this Education work." LELAND COOK, Livingston, Tenn.

"Some one has declared that 'Tis better to say —this one thing I do, than to say, these forty things I dabble in.' On this principle we should observe 'Educational Day' and give it the emphasis it richly deserves. This church family has observed the day for some years." B. S. FARRALL, Buffalo, N. Y.

"Push education. It is one of our supreme needs." MELVIN MENGES, Lemoyne, Pa.

"Our apportionment was $4.00 but we are going to try to double it. Am sure we can." F. M. TIBBS, Westboro, Mo.

"Commendable work should be encouraged by every minister." J. H. MOORE, Vallonia, Ind.

"I am for all the missionary enterprises of the church and am glad that at last Christian Education has been given its place." GUY H. FINDLY, Guthrie, Okla.

"Always glad to get a communication from you. We will want to make our offering to Missouri Christian College, direct. Best wishes." J. H. STIDHAM, Unionville, Mo.

"Only as we environ the youths of our homes with the distinctive disciple atmosphere in education, can we hope to attain the disciple aim, 'That they all may be one.' Hence, the necessity of educational aggressiveness and a proper adequate support of those schools to which the attainments of the future are certainties." E. J. FENSTERMACHER, Crestwood, Ky.

"This church is well linked up to the Education (College) idea, through Virginia Christian College, to which we have given $100.00 a year for 5 or 6 years. The Lord forward you." GERALD CULBERSON, Richmond, Va.

"Our apportionment was $3.00. We will send at least $5.00 to T. C. U. at Ft. Worth." J. B. HOLMES, Galveston, Tex.

"I am so glad for the brighter day for our colleges, and for the fact that many are seeing clearly their vital relation to all our work." SUMNER T. MARTIN, Nowata, Okla.

"I rejoice that a systematic campaign is to be made for students as well as for support financial. May the Lord richly bless the effort." N. J. REASONER, Palisades, Colo.

"This is a movement towards permanency in educational work. At last the colleges of the Disciples are coming into their own." LOUIS S. CUPP, Eugene, Ore.

"Will do my best to raise good offering and wish the movement God-speed." JOHN HEWITSON, Watertown, N. Y.

"Keep the good work going, Brother Underwood." E. N. DUTY, Charleroi, Pa.

"Our schools are well and favorably known here and have already done a great work. We will try to keep it going." G. J. DANIEL, Pikeville, Ky.

"As we have a college here cannot canvass for students much, but our church has given a portion of its budget to Missouri Christian College for several years and will continue to send apportionment or more." R. L. THORP, Tarkio, Mo.

Education Day

Sunday, January 15, 1915

Charles E. Underwood, Treasurer Board of Education
70 Layman Ave., ndianapolis, Ind.

Deacons Resume New Testament Function.

The deacons of Shreveport, La., church have resumed their New Testament function of being the disbursing agency to the poor. There is much suffering locally and the church wishes to help. A local grocer has made his store a collection point for supplies and his wagons are distributing the materials that are secured.

Annual Meeting at Beatrice, Neb.

The annual meeting of Beatrice, Neb., church was held on Dec. 14. The current indebtedness has been entirely liquidated and the membership has had a net increase of 63 during the year. The present membership is 1,350 of which 300 are non-residents. The average attendance in the Sunday-school was 520. The congregation raised $11,673.92 during the year of which $3,448.57 went to various forms of mission work.

Gives One Dollar for Every Two.

The Indiana Christian Missionary Association has a good friend in the person of Marshall T. Reeves of Columbus, who has agreed to give one dollar for every two raised in the state for state missions during 1915, with a limit to his gift of four thousand dollars. The limit last year was five thousand but the prosperity of the society has encouraged Mr. Reeves to decrease his gift.

Likes "Gospel of the Kingdom."

So enthusiastic was President H. O. Pritchard, upon reading the January issue of Dr. Strong's social service magazine, that he felt impelled to write to this office a word of appreciation. In his letter, dated December 31, at Eureka, he writes: "I have just received a copy of 'The Gospel of the Kingdom,' 'Studies in War and Peace,' edited by Josiah Strong and W. D. P. Bliss and published by the Disciples Publication Society. This copy contains the lessons for the first quarter of 1915 for adult Sunday-school classes. It also contains an outline of the studies for entire year. I want to say that I have read the entire quarterly and pronounce it one of the finest studies on the subject of War and Peace that I have seen. It was so interesting that I could not lay it down until I had read every word. Such literature put into the hands of the rising generation will make war impossible within a few decades. This literature is so exceptional and so excellent that I could not forego writing you a word about it. If the remaining issues of this monthly magazine keep up to the pace of this issue it will be an epoch making piece of literature."

Minister's Wife is Taken.

Mrs. J. N. Crutcher, wife of the pastor at Burton, Kans., was recently called higher. Her remains were laid away at the Mt. Washington cemetery of Kansas City. She not only leaves her husband to mourn her loss but also a son who is a practicing physician, and who formerly lived at Beatrice, Neb.

Geo. L. Snively Dedicates Another Church.

The beautiful new church building at Carlock, Ill., will be dedicated on Jan. 24 and Geo. L. Snively will be the master of ceremonies. The congregation has made great sacrifices to erect the present commodious building. Milo Nethercutt is the pastor.

Children Help the Poor.

North Side church, Omaha, had a giving Christmas this year and the children entered very heartily into it. Two hundred separate gifts of food and clothing were brought to the Christmas exercises and were distributed by the church the day before Christmas. There was also twenty dollars in money. The invitation was given for the children to give themselves as well as their money to the King and ten made confession of faith.

State Secretary Talks Finances.

I. J. Cahill has been using much of his time this year to lead Ohio churches into the adoption of proper financial methods. He has spoken to 22 district conventions and in twenty churches on the every-member canvass. He attended a convention of the Laymen's Missionary Movement to secure the latest ideas upon this matter.

Church Maintains a Nursery.

There are a good many babies in the church circles at Warren, O., and the congregation has arranged a nursery in the church with toys and games and every convenience for the care of children. This room is in the care of an experienced person every Sunday morning. This enables the mothers to get out to church who would otherwise find it very difficult to share in the morning worship. The Ladies' Aid Society of this church recently gave the play called "The Old Maids' Convention."

Parliament of Ministers in Northwest.

The Parliament of Ministers in the Northwest met in Seattle beginning Dec. 28. Two years ago this body laid the plans for the Spokane University. The parliament meets annually and deals more with questions of speculative and doctrinal interest. This group of ministers was addressed by the former moderator of the Presbyterian church, M. A. Matthews, of the First Presbyterian church of Seattle on "Christian Unity." They also listened to an address by Dr. I. N. McCash, president of Spokane University, on "The Greek Orthodox Church."

From the Foreign Society

Secy. Stephen J. Corey reached Cincinnati, Saturday, January 2. His family and associates and the Norwood Church, of which he is a member and an elder, gave him a most enthusiastic reception.

R. A. Doan remains in China for a time holding evangelistic services, organizing men's Bible classes, and consulting with the missionaries, and doing a real constructive work. It is expected that he will reach America about June 1.

Rev. Frank Garrett, missionary, recently married to Mrs. Verna M. Waugh.

Prof. W. C. Bower, of the commission to the mission fields, has also returned. His associates in Transylvania University and the College of the Bible gave him a very cordial reception. The Lexington papers are publishing his opinions concerning the religious, political and social situation in the Far East.

On October 31 Frank Garrett and Mrs. Verna M. Waugh were married at Nanking, China. For the present Mrs. Garrett will continue to do the work of office secretary in the School of Theology. As soon as possible some one will be secured to take her place.

H. A. Baker writing October 19, says: "We reached Batang six days ago safe and well. The roundabout way we had to come made the trip from Tatsienlu a long one. We traveled all or parts of thirty days. Yet with the exception of a few days we did not get very tired. Our goods are all here. Not a box has been soaked, none has been stolen on the way and scarcely anything has been broken or spoiled. We firmly believe this is due to the people whom we know and those unknown to us who pray for us every day. The Lord has been good to us."

M. B. Madden, Osakka, Japan, reports five baptisms.

F. E. Meigs writes that great preparations are being made for the evangelistic meetings to be held in Nanking. Between sixty and one hundred men are being trained in normal classes to follow up the meetings as teachers of the Bible.

Miss Gretchen Garst writes that the new janitor of the Kindergarten in Akita, Japan, has had a great sorrow. Her husband's health was delicate and he had to stop work The wife and her sister are Christians, but most of the relatives are very much opposed to Christianity. They told the sick man that if he drank some water that had been offered to the gods he would get well. They said that all of those connected with him must believe this. His wife could not believe it. The teachers talked to her about her faith and that she must believe in spite of everything. When the man was going to die he talked to her about it, and he confessed that he had done wrong in not becoming a Christian.

Miss Rose T. Armbruster of Akita, Japan, has returned to Colorado where she hopes to regain perfect health and strength.

A. F. Hensey and wife left Bolenge, Africa, in December for America. Mr. Hensey will no doubt address the next National Convention in July at Los Angeles, Cal.

C. E. Robinson, of Sendai, Japan, has been ordered home by physicians. This good man has lost three children during his brief stay in Japan. It will be remembered that he is supported by the church at Columbus, Ind., W. H. Book, pastor.

The furlough of Dr. C. C. Drummond has been extended to September next, when he will return to Harda, India.

F. M. RAINS, Secretary.

Long Beach Cal., Churches in Union Revival.
A union revival will be conducted in Long Beach, Calif., beginning this month. Evangelists Brown and Curry will have charge of the movement. J. N. Crutcher has been asked to remain with First church until the meetings are over. C. C. Bentley and East Side church are planning to give active cooperation.

A Pastor Uses a Questionnaire.
Carl A. Burkhardt is conducting a questionaire in Lexington, Mo., and is sending to one hundred men in his town eight questions for their consideration. When the answers are received, he will preach a series of sermons based upon his replies. The following are the questions that were sent out: (1) Are you a member of any church? Why? (2) Do you attend church regularly? What services? Why? (3) Do you value the church service as much as you used to? Can you tell why? (4) Do you think men generally are coming nearer to or drifting further from the church? Why? (5) What in the way of church attendance should constitute a "reasonable loyalty" to the church? (6) If a Christian, approximately, how many men have you invited to church in the past year? How many men have you invited to become Christians? (7) If not a Christian, how many men have you invited to attend church? (8) Would you offer any suggestions? Any criticisms will be thoughtfully considered.

Every-Member-Canvass at Quincy, Ill.
Quincy, Ill., church made the "Every-member-canvass" recently and as a result the offerings to missions the coming year will be doubled and the money for the current expenses of the church will be increased by a thousand dollars. After January 1, the church will use the Duplex envelope. The pastor, W. D. Endres, says, "This financial canvass, properly made, will solve the financial problems of nearly any church, if followed by a proper administration of the funds of the church. This will go a long way toward giving the membership heart to undertake the more immediately spiritual work of the church. Every pastor owes it to his people to master the problem of church finance."

Minister Becomes a Banker.
F. M. Wood resigned at Urbana, Ia., recently but found it very difficult to leave a community in which he had formed many friendships. As a solution to the difficulty, he decided to become a banker, and organized a banking institution with fifteen thousand dollars of capital. A two-story brick stone building will be erected to house the bank.

School of Methods in Northwest Missouri.
A School of Methods will be held in Maryville, Mo., in the northwest section of the state about the middle of February. Four leading biblical instructors have been secured for holding classes. There are 260 churches in the district to be reached by this school of methods. R. L. Finch is pastor of the church at Maryville.

Pastor Writes "Living Epistles."
Byron Hester, minister at Pryor, Okla., has gotten out some leaflets which he calls "living epistles." These documents plead for a living and personal experience of religion. On the leaflet is a place for an autograph message by the minister.

Help for Needy at Prayer Meeting.
The devotional was mingled with the social service spirit at the prayer meeting of Cleburne, Tex., church on a recent evening. There are a number of people in need in their city, and the members of the church were asked to bring provisions for the poor to prayer meeting. There was a most generous response and the pastor, F. L. Young, superintended the distribution of the supplies.

English Minister Helps Son.
G. W. Buckner, pastor at Southport, England, is assisting his son, S. G. Buckner in a revival in the latter's church at Somerset, Pa. G. W. Buckner was in early life a lawyer and shared an office with Champ Clark in Bowling Green, Mo. For nine years he was pastor at Canton, Mo., and taught in the college at the same time. The church work in England is much hindered on account of the war and this enables Mr. Buckner to leave his charge for a time. During his absence, Mrs. Buckner will preach for the English church. G. W. Buckner is also father of Champ Clark Buckner of Connellsville, Pa.

In Your New Year Resolutions for 1915

Let us hope you resolved to send your daughter to college this year. Let us also hope that you resolved to send her to one of the best colleges in the land, such as

WILLIAM WOODS COLLEGE

It is a standardized Junior college, with Departments in Music, Art, Expression and Home Economics, that resolved a quarter of a century ago to become a leading educational institution of the Middle West, and it has made that resolution good.

School was full first semester. We can accommodate four or five new pupils for second semester, which commences February 1, 1915.

WILLIAM WOODS COLLEGE

(Owned by the Christian Churches of Missouri.)

FULTON, MO.

Small Insurance on Bible Chair Building.
The fire which destroyed the Bible Chair building at the University of Indiana on Dec. 26 was noted recently. There was insurance of $4,000 on the building and $1,500 on the contents. A two thousand dollar library belonging to J. C. Todd was destroyed. At the time of the fire, J. C. Todd was in a meeting at Poseyville, Ind., but had come home for Christmas. He and his wife and three children barely escaped from the burning building, with but scanty clothing. Already plans are being formulated to secure another home for the work.

Orphans' Home Building Completed.
A new home for orphans is being completed by the National Benevolent Association at Junius' Heights, Dallas, Texas. The home is called the Juliette Fowler Orphans' Home. The building is located on a beautiful sixteen acre tract of land given to the board by Mrs. Juliette Fowler and her sister, Miss Sarah A. Harwood. A home for the aged was built on this tract three years ago and now shelters twenty old people, with a capacity for thirty-five. The new home for the orphans has been completed at an expense of between $45,000 and $50,000. It has a capacity for 125 children. The plan of the work in this home is to find homes for the children as fast as possible and more than six hundred homeless children have already been placed in Texas. While the chief support for this home comes from the Disciples, children of any denomination or none at all are received and cared for.

A LETTER THAT TALKS.

Mexico, Mo., Jan. 5, 1915.

Disciples Publication Society,
Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:

Please send me by return mail twenty-five additional copies of "The Life of Christ," by Dr. Loa Scott. The men of my class grabbed up the fifty copies sent so rapidly last Sunday that they left twenty or thirty men without any books. My men think it is a great book.

Sincerely yours,
W. A. Shullenberger.

[This text book, "The Life of Jesus," in 52 lessons, may be secured at 50 cents per copy, 40 cents in quantities. It is an ideal course for a year's study for adults or young people. Address Disciples Publication Society, 700 E. 40th St., Chicago.]

One Church Visits Another.
The congregation at Metropolis, Ill., has built a new building at a cost of thirty thousand dollars which was dedicated on Jan. 3. The church at Paducah, Ky., chartered a boat and went down the Ohio river in a body and attended the dedication of the Illinois church. The Kentucky congregation sang an anthem in connection with the dedicatory services. After the services were over, the Kentucky group returned by boat.

Santa Claus Brings Pastor an Automobile
If John G. Slayter of East Dallas church, Dallas, Tex., had any doubts whether Santa Claus was real, they have been happily dissipated by receiving an Overland automobile as a Christmas gift. S. J. McFarland made a presentation speech in behalf of the saint from the northern country, at a prayer meeting service, near the Christmas time. The gift was an entire surprise to the pastor but is a welcome aid to facilitate the calling work necessary in a large parish.

A Giving Christmas at Atchison.
The church at Atchison, Kans., had a giving Christmas this year in behalf of the poor of their city. Eight hundred people were present at the Christmas program. A hundred dollars in cash given and among the supplies were an order for two tons of coal, twenty-five sacks of flour, and various canned goods and groceries of different kinds. The Christmas giving service was introduced for the first time in Atchison this year by this church. Jesse Bader is pastor.

Hold an Old-Fashioned Spelling Match.
The church at Deland, Ill., had an old-fashioned spelling match one evening recently. Two societies of the church were matched against each other and there were numerous spectators. Three ladies were the last to be spelled down.

Bible School Has Gift Day.
December 20 was gift day with the East Dallas, Texas, church. A number of wagon-loads of food, clothing and toys and $92 in money were contributed toward the relief of the needy of Dallas. One class of boys contributed 65 sacks of meal. What is not needed for the poor will be given to the Juliette Fowler Orphans' Home.

Establishes a Question Box.

O. H. King, who is the minister at Everett, Wash., established a question box in his church recently which has been in successful use for several weeks. His members ask questions which are answered in the evening service. The following are some of the questions that have recently been turned in: "What can an honest doubter do? What are the causes of backsliding? Should I join the church before I settle my doubts? Should a Christian marry an unbeliever?"

Dr. Combs Speaks of Roosevelt.

Dr. George H. Combs preached a militant peace sermon on Dec. 27 in which he commended the policies of President Wilson and dissented vigorously from the views of Former President Roosevelt. He said: "Mr. Roosevelt says the United States should recruit a full military force if it would preserve peace. It is the first argument of his stirring indictment against the present administration that national unpreparedness makes for war. Give every man in Kansas City a pistol and teach him how to use it and even though he be cautioned to use it only in self defense, you would have to enlarge your jails every three months. Does any one believe the present European war was brought about because of the unpreparedness of any nation for war? Mr. Roosevelt has adopted an attitude that any thing or any person can be described by one of the two words, 'bully' or 'bosh.' Everything with him is black or white. There are no intermediate tones or colors. Feeling all the while that he would make a better president than his successful opponent, Mr. Wilson—opinions differ on this point—it is inevitable that he should lean to the opposition on the question with which the present administration is dealing in a pacific manner."

Church Has Roll-Call of Members.

Sterling place church of Brooklyn, of which M. M. Ammunson is pastor set Jan. 3 as their day for the annual call of the membership. The city conditions tend to scatter the membership and on this day there was a renewal of the covenant that binds the members together. Plans are being made for aggressive work in 1915.

Church Discovers Pastor's Wife Can Preach.

It was because the regular minister was ill, that the church at Blue Springs, Mo., discovered that the minister's wife could also preach most acceptably. The minister, J. T. Brown, was lamenting the disappointment the congregation would suffer when his wife proposed that she would take his place. She had just one sermon, on John 3:16, which she prepared when she was a classmate of her husband in Transylvania University. The sermon proved to be a good one, and the congregation has invited her to prepare many others, which she has done to the edification of the local group of church people. Mrs. Brown organized the women for the local option campaign in her town at a recent election. Both the minister and his wife will enter the University of Kansas soon to take some special work in sociology to fit them for certain types of church work.

Minister Fears End of World.

William Verner Nelson spoke at Lyon Street church, Grand Rapids, Mich., on "The Last Day," on Dec. 27. He asserted his belief that the last days of the world are at hand and he regards the present world war as the battle of Armageddon. He prophesied that Christ would establish peace by overcoming his foes and would reign a thousand years. A large congregation listened to this exposition of premillenarian doctrine.

Reach the Mind Through the "Eye Gate"

The most progressive pastors and teachers today are finding that the quickest path to the Kingdom of the Mind is by the way of the "Eye-Gate." It has been scientifically demonstrated that pictures get over three times the results obtained by the use of words. Preach a sermon, teach a lesson, by word of mouth; it takes the message a long time to reach the mind, and too often it is lost after getting to its destination.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desire nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Bible Questions Answered by the Best Progressive Scholarship

Printed on India Paper. By printing on the best Bible paper the four large octavo volumes of the original edition are condensed into one. It is a library in one handy volume for the student's desk.

Correlation of Parts. By common consent the book as a work of reference is strikingly accurate and for convenience of use unsurpassed. The real value of the cross-references only now becomes apparent to the reader when at last he can use the whole work as a single volume.

International Character of Work. The work is international, having been written by 96 specialists, of whom exactly one-third wrote in a foreign language. Roughly it may be said that over a third of the writers belong to England, nearly a third to Scotland (13), Ireland (23), or America (12), and a third use German (28), Dutch (3), or French (1). This international character of the work has given the editors a free hand in selecting the scholars to whom to entrust the various subjects. The only rule has been—"the best available."

Un-Sectarian Character. In the next place, the work is un-sectarian. To say of a work which professes to be scientific that in the selection of writers ecclesiastical connection or independence counts nothing is really superfluous. It is interesting and encouraging, however, to note the result—that, as a matter of fact, among its writers in English are Jews, Episcopalians of various schools, Methodists, Congregationalists, Presbyterians, and Baptists, besides others who do not perhaps represent any specific religious communion.

Thoroughly Modern. No work of this kind is more modern or more authoritative than Encyclopedia Biblica. This is not a reprint from wornout plates but a beautiful piece of printing setting forth conceptions of biblical scholarship held in the great theological seminaries at this hour. Every seminary trained preacher of the past decade has used this work and knows its value.

Equal to 24 Ordinary Books. To secure the equivalent of twenty-four ordinary books which would sell at $1.50 each for a total of six dollars has brought the best learning to the door of the humblest man. Ignorance of biblical problems on the part of ministers and Sunday-school teachers has had one cause removed.

An Epoch-Marking Work. As a mere volume printed and published it admittedly marks an epoch in several respects—for example, in the fact that more than a million words were practically all in type at one time. As a piece of editorial workmanship it has few equals in respect of the skill with which the parts have been, not pinned together, but intimately and organically united. As a singularly weighty contribution to the biblical science of the time, its impulse is admitted perhaps most markedly by those who dissent most strongly from the views defended in some of its articles. It will be impossible to understand the movement of thought on biblical subjects during the next quarter of a century without taking account of the "Encyclopedia Biblica."

SPECIAL OFFER

Encyclopedia Biblica will be sent prepaid on receipt of the price, $6.00.

Encyclopedia Biblica will be given as a premium to anyone who will secure ten new cash subscribers to The Christian Century.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

Christian Unity and the Spiritual Life

CHRISTIAN UNITY IS PRIMARILY AND ESSENTIALLY A SPIRITUAL IDEAL: THE FIRST AND GREATEST TASK FOR THOSE WHO CHERISH IT IS TO MAKE IT A CONSTRUCTIVE PRINCIPLE IN THEIR OWN CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE: ONLY AS ITS IMPLICATIONS AND OBLIGATIONS ARE PERCEIVED AND PRACTICED IN THE PERSONAL INNER LIFE OF THE SOUL CAN IT BE MADE A STRUCTURAL REALITY IN THE OUTER ORGANIZED LIFE OF THE CHURCH.

That is to say, churchmen who believe in Christian unity and plead for it ought to be a better kind of Christians, illustrating a higher order of spiritual life, than those who have not consciously felt the claim of this imperial ideal.

That is to say, again, Christian unity is not merely a "far-off, divine event," for the consummation of which the forces of the organized Church are to be stategically mobilized—a task to be worked at objectively; but it is a personal experience, for the attainment of which the forces of the inner life must be prayerfully and purposefully mobilized—a task to be worked at within each soul that has seen the vision of a united Body of Christ. Like the kingdom of God, Christian unity is within the soul, and while its outer realization is a future event—also like the kingdom of God—for which we must labor and ever pray, its spiritual reality may be a fact here and now in every heart that desires to possess it.

The Disciples of Christ have their beginnings historically in a vision of the united Church. The whole meaning of their movement, of their presence in the midst of Christendom, is found in their passion for the unity of Christ's followers.

They have no other reason for being.

And in committing themselves to this single ideal they did not take up simply one of the many equally good causes which called then as now for championship, but they seized upon the root of all good causes, the tap-root of God's whole spiritual enterprise in the world.

The ideal of Christian unity is the matrix within which the kingdom of God is formed.

Christian unity is only another way of spelling Christianity.

And if once Christianity could get itself spelled as Christian unity there would be a new religion in the world, the religion of Jesus. A new theology—or better, a new science of religion—is implicit in the ideal of Christian unity. A new form of organization of the Church, a vast new practical task for the Church to work at, and deepest and most significant of all, a new order of spiritual life, all would appear were the prayer of our Lord for the unity of his disciples once realized.

In all the eulogies which we Disciples are accustomed to pronounce upon Christian unity it is doubtful that the full depth and scope, the comprehensive and radical nature, of the ideal have been felt by us. Like most of God's servants to whom was committed some divine message or task, we have accepted our commission and delivered it with a very partial and, no doubt, oftimes mistaken conception of its meaning and its importance.

Very early in the history of our movement the primary passion for unity which had found its first expression in terms of a catholic fellowship—a spiritual conception, was absorbed by discussions and contentions over church ordinances and other forms of organization—ecclesiastical conceptions, all of them.

The passion for the IDEAL of unity was superseded by a passion for a particular BASIS of unity.

The essential principle of Thomas Campbell's famous "Declaration and Address," was the thesis that Christians are already one, that we need only to sweep the living Church clean of the sectarian accretions which now divide group from group, and there will then stand revealed the essential New Testament Church of Christ, the divine common denominator underneath our sinful denominationalism.

The practice of erecting barriers of creed or order or ordinance, and maintaining closed circles of fellowship narrower than the Church of Christ itself, was the central object of condemnation by Thomas Campbell. His basic thesis was that whomsoever Christ has received into His church ought to be received by every congregation of Christ's disciples.

It was a thoroughly spiritual conception, rooted in humble loyalty to Christ and bathed in the human emotion of love for others who may not see as we see but whom Christ claims as his own.

Had the Disciples kept this principle of a catholic fellowship clearly and centrally in their souls during the century that has elapsed since the elder Campbell first stated it, and had they taken it seriously as an ideal to be consistently practiced and passionately propagated there would inevitably have grown up among them a spiritual life of a distinctly higher order and an incomparably richer content than the conventional spiritual life found in the present day Christian denominations.

As it is, the Disciples are, spiritually, no improvement on the Christian denominations. We who should have made our distinctive contribution on the high level of the spiritual life are found in the anomalous attitude of sitting at the feet of other interpreters of the spiritual order who lack the fundamental insights which have been historically vouchsafed to us.

It seems like a trick of fate that a movement conceived in such catholicity should from the very early years of its life have shrunk back into the practice from which at the beginning it strove to emerge.

The partial relapse of the movement from its free non-denominational character to a semi-denominational and ecclesiastical basis is accounted for by the partial eclipse which the ideal of Christian unity underwent.

The motif of Thomas Campbell and his "Christian Association" was the longing for unrestricted fellowship with Christ's people, a catholic fellowship, absolutely non-sectarian. Their movement was human, full of yearning, undogmatic.

Love was its essential principle.

In the next generation the movement had become theological, ecclesiastical, dogmatic. Christian love found itself restricted by considerations of theoretical opinion and formal correctness.

There was an acknowledged distinction between "our people" and the rest of the Church of Christ. The clan feeling grew strong upon us. We became super-sensitive in matters of form and order and method.

The basis of unity which at first was sought as a means of realizing the actual unity already existing came to be regarded as an end in itself, fixed and authoritative.

At first the basis of unity was conceived as being determined by the living fact of unity, so as to include all whom Christ had included. Later the living fact of unity was denied by the dogmatic insistence upon a particular basis of unity. Only those could share in the fellowship who in addition to their being received by Christ submitted also to the terms of this particular basis of unity. So far was this conviction of the absoluteness of the basis of unity carried that many came to limit the very Church of Christ itself to those who conformed to these particular terms of fellowship.

It needs no words to suggest to the reader what would inevitably be the effect upon the spiritual life of those who held this conception.

One can write of it only with profound regret that a movement first emerging from the by-paths of sectarian exclusiveness into the broad highway of a catholic Christian fellowship should so soon be deflected into a by-path again.

To say this is not an ungracious or invidious criticism, though the words fall heavily from one's pen. The Disciples' by-path is just as good a by-path as the Presbyterian or the Baptist or the Methodist by-paths.

But the broad highway is still unoccupied!

And the Disciples began on the highway!

God intended them for the open road of catholicity. He set them in the midst of the Church to illustrate the vital unity which denominationalism had blurred and thwarted. Had the catholic principle been consistently accepted, it would have quickened their inner life, richly impregnating it with a distinctive spiritual experience, which would, in turn, have lent a winsomeness and urgency to their pleading for unity compared with which all arguments for unity are cheap and futile.

The great task for our generation of Disciples is to recover this catholic ideal of Christian unity; to make it the master ideal of all our thinking and feeling, as well as of our practice; to let its influence have full sway in our souls.

It will stretch our conceptions and our sympathies as far as Christ's conceptions and sympathies reach.

It will open the avenues of love which denominationalism always keeps stuffed up.

It will lift every inhibition which dogma puts upon our fraternal impulses.

It will show us that any conviction on matters of creed or form of ordinance, be it held ever so conscientiously, that stands between us and a disciple of Christ stands between us and Christ also.

Through it Christ will make it clear that to have loving, unrestricted fellowship with all his disciples is itself to be one of his disciples; that he cares first about the fellowship and only afterward about the formal basis of it; that the real basis of fellowship among his disciples is their common fellowship with himself, and that every other consideration is pragmatic and tentative.

A people possessed of this catholic ideal of unity, holding it seriously, not merely as a thing to be talked about and looked forward to, but as a principle to be put into practice in the habitual attitudes of the soul—such a people would find themselves possessed of a thoroughly humanized spiritual life. They would once for all have broken the shackles of ecclesiasticism and doctrinal creed as Jesus broke them.

Catholicity of mind would drive out from the soul that whole brood of carnalities named party-pride, opinionativeness, strife, bickering, contentiousness, parochialism, selfishness, finicalness, and such like, and in their stead would furnish the inner life with the rich and wholesome qualities of kindliness, patience, tolerance, humility, sympathy, breadth of interest, coöperativeness and active love, which, alas! so much of our conventional piety so sadly lacks.

The kingdom of God can never come in the world so long as Christ's Church keeps on imagining that her Lord has sealed with his "authority" this or that doctrine of a creed or this or that device of ecclesiastical practice.

Upon that misconception of her Lord hangs the whole sectarian order.

What Christ cares about is that his disciples shall be one, really one, spiritually one, organically one, so that within this unity of his Church may be formed the vaster unity of which seers have ever dreamed—the brotherhood of man.

Last week we wrote of the need of a Disciples' literature of the spiritual life, and indicated at the end that subsequent articles would deal with certain structural principles familiar to Disciples which await a literature to give them adequate spiritual interpretation. This principle of Christian unity is here set down as the first of these principles awaiting such spiritual restatement.

An editorial such as this can only suggest a point of view. Probably no single writer will exhaust the theme in ever so ambitious a volume. It is a principle whose inner side can be revealed only to those who within a fellowship of catholicity actually practice the unity of the spirit.

That the Disciples of Christ will find the fulfillment of their historic passion for unity in the creation of such a fellowship we truly believe and for its hastening devoutly pray.

A Hotel for "Down-and-Outs"

Story of an Interesting Social Service Experiment and a Statement of Some Future Plans.

ONE of the most important financial statements put before the public in a generation is that of the Rufus F. Dawes hotel, covering the first year of its operation.

As a result of that statement it is already certain that a chain of similar hotels will be built in various cities of the United States by the Rufus F. Dawes Hotel Association. The money for the first of the new hotels has already been subscribed by Mr. Dawes and his friends and the construction of the new building will be started within the year, reports H. M. Hyde in the Chicago Tribune. It may be located in New York, in Seattle, or in Minneapolis.

The foundation on which the success of the Dawes hotels rests—now and in the future—is that they are not in any sense charitable institutions. Their guests pay for everything they get and the men who furnish the money for the construction of the new hotels are investing in a business enterprise which will pay them 4 per cent annual income.

PROFITS IN 14-CENT BEDS.

The importance of the financial statement of the first year's operation of the Rufus F. Dawes hotel, which is located just across the river, on the West Side, is that it demonstrates the possibility of running such an enterprise as a paying business proposition at a charge of not to exceed 14 or 15 cents for a room, a comfortable bed, and a substantial meal.

Incidentally, the statement also furnishes a lesson in the possibility of economical living which should open the eyes of everybody in the country.

The Rufus F. Dawes hotel was built by Charles G. Dawes as a monument to the memory of his son. As such Mr. Dawes does not, and will not, of course, attempt to make it a profit-paying enterprise. It is rather a great experiment station, where has been demonstrated the possibility of furnishing clean and comfortable lodging and good food at prices as much below those charged by the Mills hotels, for instance, as the Mills prices are below those of the most expensive hotels in the country.

179,000 GUESTS IN A YEAR.

For the year ending Dec. 31, 1914, the Dawes hotel sheltered a total of 179,000 guests. Almost every night during the year every one of its 511 beds was occupied.

During the year also the hotel served 59,000 meals. To each guest free service was rendered, with the lodging, to the extent of a shower bath, with use of towel, soap, and razor, night gown and slippers.

The daily charge for a bed is 5 cents, with the exception of a few private bedrooms, for which the charge is 10 cents.

HERE'S THE A LA CARTE.

The bill of fare includes the following items, the charge for each being set opposite:

	Cents.
Meat hash and beans	3
Coffee, with milk and sugar	2
Roll	1
Macaroni and bread	3
Mutton stew and bread	3
Soup, with bread	2
Doughnut	1
Baked beans and bread	3
Macaroni and bread	3
Pie, all varieties	3

PURPOSES OF HOTEL STATED.

The purpose of the Rufus F. Dawes hotel as operated by Mr. Henry M. Dawes and Charles G. Dawes, is stated by the latter to be to provide men with accommodations at reasonable figures. It is no different from any other hotel except its charges are lower.

"It assumes," says Mr. Dawes, "that its guests are gentlemen and appreciative of gentlemanly treatment. The fact that in the operation of the hotel a small deficit results is not made the excuse by the management for any different treatment of guests than is customary in other first-class hotels. However sympathetic with religious, educational and charitable work I might be—and I am so—if I went as a paying guest to a first-class hotel and found the management solicitous as to my mental state, religious beliefs or daily occupation, and insisting upon my listening to unsolicited advice or religious or educational addresses, I would regard it as an insult and as an assumption of inferiority on my part and superiority on theirs unjustified by the nature of our relationship.

"There are no rules in the hotel different from any other first class hotel save those relating to sanitation. I make the assertion that there is no hotel in the country, accommodating anything like an equal number of guests, that has as little trouble with its patrons as ourselves. In fact, we have no trouble at all."

The Voice from Behind

A Fresh Interpretation of an Old Text.

BY L. O. BRICKER.

> "And thou shalt hear a voice from behind thee saying: This is the way, walk ye in it." Isaiah 30:21.

WE LIVE in a speaking universe, in a many voiced world. We are continually spoken unto, there is never any silence in our souls. There is the voice from above; the voice that calls us to the heights; that gives altitude to human life; that puts into human countenances the upward look and into human souls the upward tendency. The voice from above reveals the direction that our lives must ultimately take if we are to become full statured and grow up into all high and supreme things.

There is the voice from below, the call of our animal nature, the desire of the eye, the lust of the flesh, the appeal to passion and appetite. The voice from below urges us to grasp the pleasures of the moment, the immediate, accessible, enjoyable thing that lies at hand: to eat, drink, indulge and be merry. There is that within us that answers back to the voice from below just as there is that in us which answers back to the voice from above. The one is the answer of the body, the other the answer of the spirit.

THE FORWARD LOOK.

There is the voice from before us; the appeal of the future, the call of tomorrow. This voice gives to life its forward look, its bright hopes, its splendid dreams and imaginings. From the very beginning all life has heard the voice from before and so the future has ever been the supreme allurement. Childhood catches its whisper, youth is thrilled and moved by its great notes, manhood listens in spite of disillusion and unbelief, old age hears in it the welcome of the better world. In response to the voice from before all humanity stands facing the coming time.

But there is also the voice from behind us, which says: This is the way, walk ye in it.

The voice from behind us is the voice of history, the voice of experience and wisdom, and the voice of the living past. One of the greatest errors in human thinking is the mistaken idea that all of us hold about the past. Centuries of bad philosophy and of worse theology have created in our minds an illusion about the dead-and-gone-ness of the past.

We habitually think and speak of the past as something finished, beyond recall, and dead; and of the present as the only living thing. Whereas the truth is that the past is the only living thing, and the present is really alive to us because of this living past. All of our past lives in us, not only the past of our actual life since birth, but of all the ages and aeons since time began. We are what we have done, and, in a sense, what everybody else has done.

THE PAST IS NOT DEAD.

Right here we come upon the fundamental error in our thinking. Because we are at this moment the sum of what we have done, we are told that we must continue to be what we are, that the past is sealed and irrevocable fate, exercising a sort of tyranny over us; involving us in an unescapable web of necessity. This all comes from thinking of the past as dead. But it is not dead. It is alive and because it is alive it is full of mobility. It is plastic in our hands. It changes as we change.

As an illustration, take two outstanding careers, those of the Apostle Paul and Rev. L. O. Bricker.

Martin Luther. The Apostle was educated in rigid Phariseeism and Luther in ascetic Catholicism. These facts of their lives lay behind them as something done, experienced once and for all, as we would say, and not to be reversed. Of themselves these two pasts would have worked on, in the one case, to a more fanatical Phariseeism, and in the other to a more slavish and servile Romanism. They did work that way to a certain point, then in both men a mighty change was wrought.

These two men both had their vision, their new revelation; and then along with their inner change the whole past changed, assuming a fresh and new aspect. Instead of pushing them along the road they had been traveling, it thrust them in quite the opposite direction. Every feature of the past argued for the change, became a reason for the change, and taught them to hate the things they once loved and love the things they once hated. All things became new, and the old helped the transformation at every point.

THE PAST NOT NECESSARILY A HINDRANCE.

This is the heart of the gospel and the essential truth of the operative power of religion—if you have been and are a sinner in any part of your life—if this morning some sin of the flesh, of the appetite, of the will, has its grip upon you—your past instead of hindering you in the new life, will help you. Instead of being a drag, it will become an inspiration. If you resolve to change your manner of life, your whole past will help you. At once the demon that pulled you down will become an angel to help you up. Your past is behind you to tell you the way to go. "And thou shalt hear a voice from behind thee saying, This is the way, walk ye in it."

There is another thing about the living past which we would do well to bear in mind, and that is, that the living past calls upon the present to do its full share in the evolution of life. Being the life of the present, it desires also to have a part and place in the future. The past is never content with itself; it demands always the something more. It is here that mere conservatism, content with a repetition of bygone things, shows itself so hopelessly wrong. It is contrary to the whole scheme and movement of life. For it is only when the past is creating a new present that it fulfills itself.

A LESSON FROM THE PAST.

Nowhere is this truth more clearly revealed than in the history of religion. The past of religion offers us a deposit of old beliefs, as given in creeds and dogmatic systems. It offers us also the history of great religious movements. But to cling to the old and to the old only is always a failure. Religion in its each succeeding generation must contribute its quota of the new. The old is there to help it do that. To reproduce only itself would be to contradict the law of life.

When Thomas Campbell wrote his Declaration and Address, he began with the faith that is common to all Christian people. He took all that was true in Christian doctrine, all that was scripturally right in Christian practice, all that was good in Christian fellowship, and to these, he added something new, filled it all with a fresh spirit and lifted it into a new and thrilling appeal. There are those among us who would have our religious movement do nothing except reproduce the past.

THE HEART OF THOMAS CAMPBELL'S FAITH.

One of our most influential religious journals is bending all its energies, apparently, to the task of trying to head our religious movement back into the past. In the editorial section each week there is a page edited by one of the oldest of our living ministers, entitled "Fifty Years Ago," and filled with interesting things concerning what the fathers said and did and thought fifty years ago. I like to read that page, but I resent the comment introducing and following each extract from the records of fifty years ago, inviting the ministry and churches of this day to preach and to do exactly as the fathers did fifty years ago. This would be to take our religious movement into the graveyard.

The spirit of Thomas Campbell was the spirit of a pioneer and if we today would be true to the succession in which we stand, we must also be pioneers, not going back over the traveled past and settling down in old country, but with our eyes on the horizon, ever seeking something new and traveling toward it.

THE DISCIPLES MUST BE TORCH-BEARERS.

To reproduce the victories of the past, our religious movement must ever and always be the vanguard of all religious movements. It must be a torch bearer, a path finder. It must always have a morning face, with dewy freshness resting upon it; the first to behold every new day; to interpret every new truth.

"And thou shalt hear a voice from behind thee saying: This is the way, walk ye in it"—the way of the pioneer, the way of the vanguard, the way of upward progress and onward going.

The President Talks About His Job

From an Interview Reported in the Saturday Evening Post.

BY SAMUEL G. BLYTHE.

THERE is a general disposition to regard the President as a thinking machine, as a large and brilliant but gelid intellect, incased in a non-responsive and highly insulated covering. He is thought of and talked of as mostly brains—and cold, analytical, logical brains at that; and there can be no denying that he has those commodities in full supply. The other side of him is not so generally known, principally because his rise in public life has been so rapid and his transfer from academy to arena occurred so few years ago.

Wherefore, it seems about the proper time to set down the fact here that Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, is one of the most kindly, courteous, considerate, genial and companionable of men; that, so far from being aloof from the people, his passion is the people—the real people—and his sole desire is to serve them so long as his term of office shall continue, and afterward in such measure as he may. He holds his position to be that of a man connected with his fellowmen by a peculiar relationship of responsibility, and the vivid sense of that responsibility is doubtless accountable for the impression of aloofness. However, that is not what I started out to say. The point that presses at this time is that the President of the United States weighs 176 pounds, and that those 176 pounds are mostly bone and muscle. There is not an ounce of excess baggage in the way of flesh about him. He lives out-of-doors as much as he can. His face is tanned and so are his sinewy hands. His eye is bright and clear. His laugh is hearty and unaffected. His spirit is good. He is buoyantly healthy. He sleeps well, eats well, works hard, and plays whenever he has a chance.

THE PRESIDENT LIKES PEOPLE.

"I rode my bicycle in Europe several times," said the President, discussing his love for the common people, "and reached many places rarely seen by the tourists—little out-of-the-way corners: and the experiences were delightful. I liked to meet and talk and perhaps journey with the other vagabonds on the road, who, free from all sense of responsibility, went where they liked and when they liked, and were always prepared for whatever adventure might ensue.

"I like to be with people, to rub elbows with them. It must be a very ordinary crowd not to interest me. Nothing bores me so much as a conventional assemblage, and nothing interests me so much as a crowd of people on a street—any street—who are just human beings, filled with human passions and joys and sorrows, and not trying to be what they are not."

"There's one thing that goes with this job which I do not like, and that is the eternal kotowing to the President. Every time I go anywhere it is an event. If I want to go on the MayflowerI can't go as Woodrow Wilson, seeking a little recreation; but I must go as the President and be piped over the side and have the officers standing stiffly round, and all that.

SOME MADDENING EXPERIENCES.

"And it is so everywhere. Some day I hope to get a chance to visit some of the interesting places in this town and see the sights. I can't do it now, because the minute I stick my head into a public building they turn out the guard and I can't see anything for the crowd of officials surrounding me. It's maddening!

"They have recently adopted some rather complicated regulations about automobile lights here in the District of Columbia. They are hard to understand, and we have put in a good deal of time trying to comply with them. We have been stopped by policemen two or three times because we have not had our lights right. Each time, as soon as the policeman discovered he had stopped me, he ran madly away—not walked, but ran. I have called after them in a vain endeavor to stop them and ask what is wrong, in order that the fault may be corrected; but each time the policeman has galloped down the street away from me.

"I hate that. I despise any person who takes advantage of his position to evade any responsibility. I remember, when I was president of Princeton University, being out on the campus one night when the Seniors were to have some rites particularly sacred to them. They had a space railed off on the lawn. I was with some friends, and we started to go within the inclosure. A man stopped me. He said I wasn't a Senior and had no right within that select inclosure. I turned away.

"'Why,' said one of my friends, 'you are president of this university and can go anywhere you like!'

"'No,' I said; 'the mere fact that I am president gives me no right to go where I am not invited or where custom operates against me.'"

"And it is so with the presidency and with any other position. I despise a person who will use his position to gain an advantage for himself, or to evade any responsibility, or to avoid any obligation."

"I love my fellowman. No person takes keener delight in his society than I do. I have my friends and I love them; but I realize that the circumscriptions of my position are not an unmixed evil. I may be lonely because of the necessities of my place; but my vision is clearer than it would be were I surrounded by a group—any group—of well-meaning and zealous friends with interests of their own.

"Do not misunderstand me, I beg of you. Do not think or say that I take no delight in the society of my fellows. No man is more gregarious than I. As Lincoln said: 'I reckon no man likes his fellow-men better than I do—and no man sees less of them socially.' It goes with the place, and, as I have explained it, it is not altogether undesirable."

We stood there for a minute silently. Then he put his hand on my shoulder and we walked back to our chairs.

THE PRESIDENT'S "THORN IN THE FLESH."

"What," I asked, "is the most disagreeable feature of the Presidency?"

"Patronage," he replied without a moment's hesitation—"patronage, and the genuine astonishment and resentment of personal frieds that I cannot take care of them merely because they are personal friends. Politics, you know, as it is widely considered, consists in taking care of one's personal friends. Now I should like to do that, love to do it; but I cannot. And I am constantly perplexed at the aggrievement of those friends because I cannot and do not.

"I would willingly take the coat off my back and give it to a friend who needed it. My friends can have anything I have that is mine; but I cannot give them what is not mine. These offices are not mine. They belong to the people. They are the nation's. Merely because a man is a personal friend of mine, or has been something or other that makes him think he is, is not a valid reason for bestowing on him an office that does not belong to me, but is mine only to administer through the proper person selected as the active agent. The obligation incumbent on me, as the distributor for the moment of these offices, is to find efficient men to hold them, not personal friends to hold them and get the emoluments.

"I do not think my generosity or my sense of deep and lasting friendship for my real friends can be questioned; but there is a higher obligation than any personal obligation: that is my obligation to the people of this country, who have put me in this place temporarily to administer their government al affairs for them and who demand of me that I shall administer them for the public and not for the individual.

We talked of many other things, discussing various statesmen and the correctness of certain policies. He showed me why a writer was wrong who said he could not be a progressive Democrat if he admired Edmund Burke, and explained his liking for Burke and quoted much from Burke's orations.

The President said he intends to make some speeches on his return from the San Francisco Exposition next spring—"because," he remarked, "I shall have something to say to the people then. I have felt that it was not for me to appear in the role of a prophet before the people: but when this Congress is over we shall have a substantial record of things achieved, and I want to talk to the people about what we have done—not about what we intend to do."

The Awakening of China

BY L. WILBUR MESSER.

The marvelous changes in the attitude of the Chinese toward the Christian religion are reflected in a letter to L. Wilbur Messer, secretary of the Chicago Y. M. C. A., from G. Sherwood Eddy, who has recently completed a four months' tour of the principal cities of China. Mr. Eddy is the Young Men's Christian Association secretary for Asia.

WE HAVE just left Foochow, the "city of joy." I went to the province of Fukien in response to a telegram of invitation received from the governor, the chamber of commerce, the minister of education and the Confucian principals of the government colleges.

On the morning the meetings were to begin I visited the quiet cemetery where the missionary martyrs of Foochow lie buried. I stood beside the eleven graves of those who were torn limb from limb and hacked to pieces by an angry mob less than twenty years ago, and then went to the great guild hall for the meetings. More than 2,000 Confucian students and young men were crowding every seat in the hall, and almost as large a number were standing outside waiting their turn to get in to hear the message repeated.

CHANGES IN FIFTY-TWO YEARS.

Sitting on the platform was the aged Archdeacon Wolfe. When he arrived in China fifty-two years ago there were but four Christians in this part of the empire. He was driven from the city by a mob.

On five successive nights we were given a Chinese feast by the various classes of the community. First the governor and all his officials invited us to dinner and requested us to address them. We spoke on Christianity and presented the governor and the others with Bibles.

Two days after the meetings the governor subscribed several thousand dollars toward the purchase of a site for a new Young Men's Christian Association building in the student quarter. Some forty educators and college principals, with the minister of education, gave us a banquet on another evening and said to us in an address:

"Confucianism alone cannot save China. We need the moral dynamic and principle of progress which Christianity can give. Christianity has long appealed to the lower classes, but has not the time now come for you to appeal to the leaders and educated men of the nation?"

Several of these college principals expressed a desire to study the life of Christ and a number offered us the privilege of opening Bible classes in the government colleges. More than 100 members of the chamber of commerce promised to join Bible classes. A few years ago there was no chamber of commerce here, and these men would have been hostile to Christianity. The Chinese press also co-operated and all the papers of the city published Christian articles and indorsed the meetings.

CARRYING THE MESSAGE TO ALL PARTS.

But the most significant development of this year was the new departure in organizing from this city a province-wide campaign to carry the message of Christianity to all parts of this province with its 11,000,000 inhabitants. Three hundred and fifty Chinese workers were gathered here for a week of special training to prepare for the campaign in their own cities. Some of them traveled for ten days a distance of 300 miles by boat or on foot to attend the meetings.

The poor Christians of the province raised $4,000 toward the cost of the campaign. Five science lecturers, with five Chinese evangelists who had attended the training conference, then went out two by two to the twelve secondary cities of the province to conduct similar campaigns in these centers. In each of these centers the officials co-operated, offering the guild halls, the government buildings, the theaters, and, in one case, part of a Confucian temple for the purposes of the evangelistic meetings.

SOME REMARKABLE MEETINGS.

On the opening day of the public meetings in Amoy, the rich port city in the south of the province where we spent the next four days after leaving Foochow, more than 5,000 filled the mat shed which had been temporarily erected in an open square of the city. For an hour I showed from charts the material bankruptcy of China, due to her moral bankruptcy. Feeling was so deep some men were in tears. I spoke so strongly against graft and corruption in official and business life I was not sure how they would receive it.

The attendance on the second night, however, was remarkable. It was raining and we expected the meeting would be postponed, as Chinese do not come out in their silk garments and cloth shoes on a rainy night. Upon arrival at the hall, however, we found the men had taken off their undergarments to wipe off the wet seats, and they were sitting on these garments. The rain kept coming through the porous mat shed, but in spite of this over 3,000 men sat for an hour as we spoke upon sin, endeavoring to drive home conviction on dishonesty, gambling and impurity, which are the besetting sins of the city. When, on the third night, it was asked how many were ready to become earnest inquiries to join a Bible class some 1,200 non-Christians gave in their names. Side by side were millionaires, students, officials and business men.

A CAMPAIGN OF SOCIAL SERVICE.

Following the evangelistic meetings a campaign of social service in education, sanitation and moral reform is to be conducted throughout the province. The section on sanitation is to be in charge of the missionary doctors and hospitals of the province.

We aim not only at the saving of individuals, but at the bringing in of the Kingdom of God and the establishment of a new social order in this long stagnant and once changeless empire. The whole tide is rising. In every province the governors and officials seem almost to have vied with one another to co-operate with this Christian movement. When in all history has such an opening been presented to reach the leaders of a nation? This is the decisive decade for China.

Blind

"Show me your God!" the Doubter cries.
I point him out the smiling skies;
I show him all the woodland greens;
I show him peaceful sylvan scenes;
I show him hills rock-ribbed and strong;
I bid him hear the thrush's song;
I show him flowers in the close—
The lily, violet, and rose.

I show him rivers, babbling streams;
I show him youthful hopes and dreams;
I show him maids with eager hearts;
I show him toilers in the marts;
I show him stars, the moon, the sun;
I show him deeds of kindness done;
I show him joy; I show him care;
And still he holds his doubting air,
And faithless goes his way, for he
Is blind of Soul and cannot see!

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

CHINA'S STATE RELIGION REVIVED.

A SIGNIFICANT event happened in Pekin on December 23, at the time of the winter solstice. Yuan Shi-Kai, president of the republic, revived worship at the open air altar of heaven, a spot held in the greatest veneration by the Chinese people.

About three miles from the center of the city in a great enclosure, formerly kept guarded from all intrusion, there rises a circular platform of marble approached by three series of stairways, and elaborately decorated in the finest of Chinese art. Here in former times it was the custom of the emperors to present themselves as the representatives of the nation, after a night of fasting, and to offer the sacrifices which were supposed to insure the welfare of the people for another year.

The place is called "The Altar of Heaven," but it is not to any of the many deities revered in China that the worship is directed. It is rather to the universe, or, as the phrase is, "to heaven and earth." Many have thought that this was a close, though unconscious, approach to monotheism. It was a service of great solemnity, and though it was witnessed by only the inner circle of court officials, its influence was widely felt through the nation.

In 1911 when the Manchu dynasty was overthrown this annual function fell into disuse. The head of the republic did not undertake to continue the practice, and it has been supposed that with its disuse all signs of the old state religion of China had passed away.

At first sight this would seem to be a fortunate situation. It is natural for Christian people to regard with satisfaction the abandonment of any heathen practice. Yet it is not certain that China is as yet ready to declare formally for Christianity. In spite of all that has been done the missionaries are few and far between. Even the simplest form of worship is better than irreligion. Some of the missionaries are therefore inclined to believe that the revival of this imageless worship may be of value until such time as Christianity is strong enough to replace Confucianism and all other forms of non-Christian religion.

DEAN HAGGARD AND BILLY SUNDAY.

ONE of Billy Sunday's big sermons deals with the second coming of Christ in the lurid terms with which that evangelist is expert. The theme seems to grow more and more central in Mr. Sunday's thought-system with the passing years and his increasing fame.

Formerly it was despatched in a single sermon, like some Disciple evangelists despatch Christian unity or baptism. But latterly the theme appears and reappears in the general course of his meetings, sadly darkening his view of the world.

In Des Moines, Dean A. M. Haggard, of Drake University, who is something of a specialist on apocalyptic writings, was much stirred up by Mr. Sunday's pessimism. He states his own fundamental variance with the evangelist in these terse words:

> I assume that coming history is not unlike past history in its general principles—that God as seen in the history of the past will not be greatly different in the history of tomorrow. If Wm. A. Sunday thinks that way, I find little evidence of it. His pessimism is awful, though he tries to tone it down. I wish he and I had time to go over the ground together. I am sure I could appeal to him in some lines of thought.

Mr. Sunday had used the text, "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the coming of the Son of Man," to fortify his doctrine that the world was headed straight for another cataclysmic destruction similar in its universality to the destruction caused by the great flood. Dean Haggard declares that Jesus did not mean what Mr. Sunday makes him say:

> Jesus used these words for one purpose, while Mr. Sunday used them for another. Mr. Sunday used them to prove that the world would be unspeakably bad when Jesus comes, a veritable hell on earth, steeped in such rot and ruin and crime as has never yet been seen! He made our blood run cold and our hair stand on end. As the context clearly shows, this was not Jesus' use of them. His thought was the surprise to both good and bad in his coming. Jesus never did stand for the pessimism of the Moody Institute.

Mr. Haggard is charitable, however, and makes the usual qualification: "I never did see so much good done by one single sermon loaded down with so many bits of bad exegesis and so much that was arbitrary and unnatural."

THE PAST.

WHETHER you are a sermon maker or sermon taster or just a plain lover of truth do not fail to read the great message of Rev. L. O. Bricker in this issue entitled "The Voice Behind."

Many a sermon is preached from that text.

The assumption always seems to be that the Voice from the past calls us back to the old paths, puts an inhibition on progress, and warns us against the new and untried paths.

Mr. Bricker takes the text quite differently.

He says the Voice from the past counsels and urges us to go forward!

When one stops to think that nearly all of those of the past whose voices anybody cares to listen to were themselves courageous pioneers, pathfinders, it would seem that Mr. Bricker's interpretation of this old text is likely about correct.

Certainly we could hardly imagine Paul counselling timidity, or Luther pointing out the way of reaction, or Thomas Campbell insisting that we must always do things as they had always been done and believe things as they had always been believed.

These men of the past are not honored by our servile imitation of them. They exhort us to live our own life, to hew our own way, to find the answers to our own problems by the light that God has given us—just as they did!

The past is, after all, out-and-out progressive.

CITY VISITATION.

AN INTERESTING feature of the international Sunday-school work is the home visitation which has been undertaken in several cities under the direction of Mr. J. Shreve Durham of this city, who has been successfully representing the association in this specific work for some years.

It is the plan to organize the Christian forces of a community through several weeks of careful preparation, and then on a designated day, when, as far as possible, people are requested to remain in their homes, a host of workers go forth two by two to tabulate the population, particularly with reference to church attendance and preference.

Within the past two or three years many cities have tried the plan with great success. In Chicago out of a total number visited, reaching more than two millions, it was found that 946,800 were without church relationships. In St. Louis out of 720,000 visited, 320,000 declared themselves unconnected with any church. In Montreal the total number recorded was 460,000, and of these 170,000 were unchurched, while more recently in Baltimore out of a half million registered 230,000 reported no church connection. The latest city in which the work has been tried is Detroit, where preparations were made to reach a half million people by 6,000 workers in an afternoon. The number of Detroit's unchurched people has been estimated at 270,000. The church canvas will correct that figure.

The advantage of such a church canvas is very great. Pastors and church workers in every part of a city are furnished with a mass of very useful information. More than this, religious leaders and workers are brought together as by no other means. It is difficult to conceive of a cause directly related to religious work that could unite Protestant, Roman Catholic and Jew in a common enthusiasm. And yet that was the achievement in the preparatory work in Detroit, where the executive committee included Bishop Foley of the Roman Catholic Church, Bishop Williams of the Episcopal Church, Rev. C. J. Tanner, pastor of the Central Christian Church and president of the Detroit Pastors' Union, and Dr. Franklin of the Temple Beth El.

Mr. Durham, who is a member of Memorial Church of Christ of Chicago, is enthusiastic over the results of this plan of visitation, and believes that it holds great promise as one of the most successful methods of promoting Christian union.

PROGRESS IN 1914.

THE year that has passed will be recalled for a generation as the red year of the war. It is difficult to fix attention upon any other than its lurid features. Yet some of the most notable achievements of modern times in the line of human progress occurred in 1914.

After a half century of struggle and recrimination, at times amounting almost to bloodshed, Ireland was granted home rule by England.

The Welsh Church, that has since the establishment of the British Empire been supported by the state, was disestablished, and the nonconformist churches now have equal standing with the Episcopalians.

The completion of peace treaties between the United States and nearly a score of the nations of the world is perhaps for the time overshadowed by the military situation in Europe, but it is the basis for a future era of harmony and good will.

A decided advance has been accomplished in the field of woman suffrage. Several states of our own republic have been added to the column of equal suffrage territory, and abroad the sentiment has likewise gained rapidly.

The desire for peace of a lasting and honorable character has been no doubt greatly quickened by the war, and in spite of immense military and naval preparations on the part even of neutral states there is a genuine movement under way looking toward reduction of armies as useless for insurance against war, and actually provocative of hostilities.

Perhaps most notable of all has been the progress of temperance sentiment and legislation. In Russia the national prohibition of Vodka was an event of enormous significance. Very definite and positive action has been taken in Great Britain, France and Germany to reduce the consumption of liquor as a menace to national strength.

The abolition of the use of liquor in the United States navy was a notable victory for sobriety won by a courageous public official in the face of strong opposition. And the rapid increase of dry territory in the United States has been brought to a climax by the majority vote in Congress in favor of national Prohibition, which though it failed of enactment, foretokened the early overthrow of the saloon as a legalized institution in America.

When one adds to these highly encouraging events of 1914 the long list of splendid legacies devoted to religious work, to education, to philanthropy and to the public welfare, little ground is left for pessimists to rail at the dead year. Even the war has brought frank confession from all the combatants that it has no justification, and that it should not have been allowed to break out. The attitude of apology is of great significance considering the world's former attitude toward war.

If the year 1915 can bring us as many signs of moral progress and can crown all with an honorable and enduring peace, it will be the greatest year in recent history.

THIS IS HEARTENING.

DOCTOR NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS said in private conversation recently that this was the best year for church-going that he had seen in a long time. He told of the experience of Plymouth Church in being obliged to turn away many people from the evening service. He felt that the people were thinking more seriously, more religiously, this year.

MORE MEN FOR THE MINISTRY.

SEMINARIES are reported to have gained from ten to fifty per cent in enrollment this year. There are more trained men entering the ministry. "The Failure of the Church" is not throwing college students into a panic or driving them from the ministry. The service that the church is rendering is too apparent and too vital to the community to permit its permanent neglect by college students. They will continue to answer the call for leadership by an institution which has behind and in it the Christian ideal.

THERE'S TRUTH IN IT.

A NOTED humorous writer in a Chicago daily proposed recently the "absurd" suggestion that all the common soldiers of all the countries now fighting should with one mind drop their weapons and refuse to obey their officers' commands.

It was absurd. But it has sufficient sense in it to show that in the common man, after all, is vested the power to end the whole war business.

THE ANSWER.

"'I do not see thee, God!' a soul made plaint;
'O for an angel hand to tear the veil apart;
Hide not from me thy face, I strive, I faint!'
The silence whispered, 'Art thou pure in heart?'"

The Carpenter

By Edward Wilbur Mason.

The breath of pine arose as scent
From shavings on the floor.
The azure of the firmament
Shone in the open door.

The sound of hammer and of saw
Made music in the room:
There labor was a lovely law
Like beauty of perfume.

The hand that fashioned sure and fine
The fragrant wood of earth,
Could trace with starry fire divine
The things of higher worth.

For he from selfish aim was free
Unswayed by care or fret
Who learned to master destiny
In quiet Nazareth!

Up the Road

By Charles S. Newhall.

Friends of mine along the way,
Whither bound this windy day?
Join us, friend, our way is one,
Up the road, till day is done:

Up the road toward light of Home
Shining far for all who roam,
Shining for us brothers all,
Lest we falter, lest we fall.

Up the road, with words of cheer
Fit to banish every fear,
Helpful deeds and kindly smiles,
Easing so the wind-swept miles.

Up the road we brothers all!
Brave to answer every call;
Up the road, till day is done
And the goal at last is won.

Presbyterians Send Student to Croatia.

In accordance with their more recently adopted methods, the Home Mission Board of the Presbyterian Church sent Rev. Ralph Cummins, of Cincinnati, to Croatia as an "immigration fellow." He spent a year and a half in that country, and part of that time his friends have been very anxious about him. He has studied the language and the customs of the people and now knows the Croatians in their native habit. This will be a great asset for his future home mission work. Mr. Cummins will take the pastorate of a Croatian church in America where he may be stationed by the Home Mission Board. The Croatians are of the same race as the Servians but politically are under the rule of Austria. They are fighting against the Servians without enthusiasm at the present time. In religion they are divided from the Servians, belonging to the Roman Catholic Church, while the Servians are Greek Orthodox. This division in religion has grown out of their political disunion.

The Church in Germany.

In the Atlantic Monthly sometime since, Prof. Kuno Francke discussed with ability and insight the situation in the Germany of today as contrasted with the Germany of thirty years earlier. From the point of view of a lofty idealism he surveyed its amazing progress in the sciences and arts of living, and asked whether, out of these stirrings of life, there would come a re-awakening of spiritual strivings. He said: "In Germany the church has ceased to be a moral leader: it has sunk back to the position of a defender of creeds. The inner life has been secularized in Germany: the men who shape spiritual ideals are philosophers, poets, artists. In Germany the church had gone so far in its reaction from the free ideals of liberty that in Prussia, for instance, cremation was forbidden by the law, on the ground that it is prejudicial to the resurrection of the body."

A Church News Bureau Founded.

The changed attitude of the daily press toward religious news in recent years is very marked. The Chicago Tribune called Dr. W. B. Norton as religious editor, and Mr. Fegert, who was the originator in Chicago of the "Go-to-Church" Sunday campaign of last year is the religious editor of the Chicago Herald. A church news building is to be erected in New York to become the center for publicity of the religious activities of the country. The movement is started with gifts but will be maintained by selling the news to the daily papers.

Dr. Campbell Morgan Convalescing.

Dr. Campbell Morgan returned to London from Gloucestershire at Christmas time and later went to Mundesley. With quiet and rest, he will soon be restored to a normal condition of health, and will probably be more vigorous physically than he has been in several years. He worshiped recently at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church at Cheltenham.

Unitarians Prepare Defense.

The Unitarians have prepared to defend themselves during the revival conducted by Rev. William Sunday in Philadelphia, which has just begun. Mr. Sunday has been accustomed to call Unitarians agents of the devil, and has said they are certain to be cast into hell. A literature room for the Unitarian cause has been opened in Philadelphia with paid attendant and a committee of twenty has been appointed to co-operate with a committee from the American Unitarian Association. The latter committee is composed of Rev. S. A. Eliot, D. D., Rev. L. G. Wilson and Rev. E. S. Wiers. The Unitarians got to town first and opened their campaign with an address by Dr. Charles W. Eliot, former president of Harvard University, on Dec 29. He spoke on the theme, "The Impotence of the Christian Churches with Respect to the Prevention of War." Books will be sold or loaned, and tracts will be given away, and these will be much in demand no doubt if the Unitarians receive the usual advertising at Mr. Sunday's hands. The newspapers of the city have engaged to print Unitarian doctrinal statements during the entire campaign. A local Unitarian committee issues the following statement: "We believe that Mr. Sunday does much good, and we gladly add our prayers to those of the multitude who are praying that very great good may result in Philadelphia. Nevertheless we cannot endorse Mr. Sunday's theology and methods, and we hear from Unitarian ministers in cities where these revivals have been held that in the long run they have been detrimental to the religious life of these communities."

Church to Be Organized at Labor Temple.

The Labor Temple, where Chas. Stelzle became known to the larger Christian world, is now conducted by Rev. Mr. Day. A petition has been presented to the presbytery of New York to have a church organized in the temple. During the time when the institution was conducted by Mr. Stelzle there was no church organization. The Labor Temple has found employment for 250 men and women since Oct. 1.

Child Labor Sunday Near.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America announce that Jan. 24 is to be observed in the churches as Child Labor Sunday. There is a bill pending in Congress now which will materially aid the toiling children of America, which is called the Palmer-Owen bill. The Federal Council urge Christian people to write their congressmen about this important bill.

Len G. Broughton Still Very Ill.

A special congregational meeting of Christ Church, London, where Rev. Len G. Broughton is minister, was held the latter part of December to consider a program for the church during the minister's continued illness. The medical report prognosticated Dr. Broughton's recovery ultimately but suggested that it would be some time before he was able to work again. He has voluntarily reduced his salary to help the church in this difficult time. Dr. F. B. Meyer, the former pastor, sent word that he would be able to preach on Jan. 10 and Feb. 28. Meanwhile the Clarendon St. Baptist Church of Boston report that negotiations continue with Dr. Broughton, with regard to his return to America, and that they are much encouraged that they will receive a favorable answer.

George Adam Smith Has Son in War.

George Adam Smith is widely known in America for his writings in the field of Old Testament and for his volume of sermons, "The Forgiveness of Sins." He recently received word that his son, Second Lieutenant G. B. Smith, was wounded. He has been with the Third Battalion of Gordon Highlanders. He has a younger brother, Lt. R. D. Smith, in the Indian army.

Union in Canada More Probable.

The union of the Presbyterian, Methodist and Congregational denominations in Canada has been proposed for some years and many difficulties in the achievement of this result have been encountered. The joint committee of the various denominations interested held a meeting in Toronto in December which is the most satisfying of any that have been held to this time. A resolution was adopted once more declaring that no insuperable obstacles existed to prevent the desired union, the vote being 57 to 7, with 2 not voting. The dissenters were all Presbyterians. The basis of union as previously written up was altered in considerable measure at the suggestion of the Presbyterians, a strong paragraph on prayer being added. The plan for the government of the united church was outlined. the national body to be called the General Council, the intermediate provincial bodies to be called conferences, and the district bodies presbyteries. Each of these terms is one in use in the different denominations. The officers of the local church are to be called elders and stewards, another combination of terminology. These together make up an "official board." The union movement when consummated is to be called "The United Church of Canada."

Saloons Close Following Sunday Revival.

One of the results of the "Billy" Sunday revival in Des Moines is that the saloons of the city are to close. The council voted on Dec. 29 that every retail liquor store in the city should close their doors before Feb. 15.

Y. W. C. A. President Dies.

Miss Grace H. Dodge has been the national president of the Y. W. C. A. and she recently died at her home in New York. The funeral was conducted by Dr. William P. Merrill, of the Brick church and Rev. Ira Dodd, of Riverdale Presbyterian Church, the services being private. The flags of the Associations in New York were half-masted during the services.

Half Million Dollars for Training School.

The officers of the Y. M. C. A. Training College of Chicago have recently laid the cornerstone for a half-million dollar plant for the training of Y. M. C. A. workers. This college is within three squares of the University of Chicago and is located at the corner of Fifty-third St. and Drexel Blvd. Robert Weidensall and I. E. Brown founded this school twenty-five years ago and now half of the Y. M. C. A.

workers in the Middle West have studied with them. At the cornerstone-laying, President Davis of Chicago Seminary and President Stuart of Garrett Biblical Institute (Methodist) spoke. John R. Mott, associate secretary of the International Committee, laid the cornerstone and delivered a strong address. He said: "No organization has in such a short time added to it such vast interests in property and money as has the Young Men's Christian Association and I make bold to say that there is no organization in which men and women of wealth believe more earnestly than in this organization. Our material equipment is the visible thing about us and we ourselves are apt to forget the fact that the crowning glory of the Young Men's Christian Association was its spiritual conception. Here lies our danger, and we must have leadership to tide us over, and it is in these leaders, in these schools of prophets, and we hope, of apostles, that we have a right to look to increasingly for the men that will save this organization from these dangers."

The War Revives Religious Spirit.

The question of the effect of the war upon the religious life of the world has brought forth various ideas from religious leaders. In some cases they believe the reaction will be totally bad. In other cases, it is thought that the greater seriousness of the present time with its challenge to deeper thinking, will bring religion to the fore. A letter from Dr. Stalker of Aberdeen, quoted in the Congregationalist, says: "There is a strong religious element in the patriotism and enthusiasim with which the young are enlisting, and the movement is being led by those who have been the leaders in the young people's work in our congregations. Even our students of divinity are on the tiptoe of excitement. There is a widespread spirit of prayer; multitudes of meetings for prayer are being commenced; and many ministers are speaking of revived interest in their congregations." A letter to Dr. W. H. Roberts, of Philadelphia, from Prof. August Lange, of the University of Halle, says: "The churches are full and overflowing as they have not been for decades. Religious sentiment has taken a new lease of life."

Largest Sunday-school in the World.

What is reputed to be the largest Sunday-school in the world is at Brazil, Ind., in a Methodist Church. This school has just re-elected William E. Carpenter to the position of superintendent for the 27th time.

Methodist Schools Get Money.

The General Education Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church the past year promised twelve colleges and universities a total of over a million dollars conditioned upon their seeuring a like amount. The largest gifts were to Ohio Wesleyan, $125,000, and to Baker a similar amount. Northwestern University was given $100,000. Plans are under way to give twelve institutions a total of six millions in the near future.

A Pageant of Methodism.

The Epworth League has put out in pamphlet form a "Pageant of Methodism." This presents in pictorial and dramatic form four episodes in the history of Methodism. In the first, the beginnings of Methodism in England are shown, including scenes in the Wesley home and of street preaching by John Wesley. Episode two presents the beginnings of Methodism in America, centering in the homes and lives of Philip Embury, Barbara Heck, Francis Asbury and Thomas Coke, with a view of John Stewart preaching to the Indians. In episode three, the work of the pioneer preachers is shown, including Solomon Sharp and Peter Cartwright. In episode four, the work of the denomination in its various boards at the present time is presented. This dramatic performance is the work of Miss Emma Robinson, national secretary of the Junior League, Mrs. Nella F. Ford, chief clerk in the Central office of the League, and Mr. J. Howard Armington.

Church Club Hears Editor.

The Congregationalist Club of Boston, recently brought to the city Mr. MacDonald, editor of the Toronto Globe, who spoke on "America's Greatest Aehievement in the Light of Europe's Colossal Failure." The club had 600 men present for the meeting, and among the guests were all the religious editors of the city of Boston, including the Unitarian and the Universalist.

College Presidents Meet.

On the evening of Jan. 14, there were 114 college presidents of America in a meeting at the Hotel Sherman in Chicago. The occasion was a meeting of the boards of education in the various denominations jointly with the Association of American College Presidents. The meetings decided upon an interdenominational campaign in behalf of the Christian colleges of the thirteen co-operating denominations. The plan includes a general interdenominational survey of the field, a united campaign of publicity, a nation-wide series of inspirational conventions, and a follow-up campaign. Each denomination is to work its own plans concerning the several colleges over which it has control, but all are to share in the general features of the work. The evening speakers were Bishop William Fraser McDowell of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Henry Churchill King, president of Oberlin college, and the Rev. Cleland B. McAfee, professor in McCormick Theological seminary. The subject discussed was "The Moral and Religious Phases of Education." The council of church boards elected the following officers for next year: President, the Rev. J. W. Coehran, Philadelphia, of the Presbyterian board; vice president, the Rev. F. W. Paddleford, Boston, of the Baptist Board; secretary, R. D. Kyle, Monmouth, Ill., United Presbyterian board; treasurer, the Rev. Elias Thompson, Boston, Congregational Board.

Cincinnati Presbyterian Leader Changes.

Rev. Dr. Robert Watson has announced that he will accept the call to the Scotch Presbyterian church of New York, expecting to begin his services with that church on Jan. 1, 1915. Dr. Watson has had a downtown field in Cincinnati and goes to one in New York which is equally difficult.

Minister Changes Denominations.

Rev. Dr. Thomas Reed Bridges, who has been pastor of the South Reformed Church of New York, has resigned his pastorate and informed his classes that he wished to be dropped from the rolls as he was entering the fellowship of the Protestant Episcopal church. He has been confirmed by Bishop Greer and has become a candidate for holy orders in the diocese of New York.

Dr. Macfarland for General Secretary.

At the recent meeting of the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, Dr. Chas. S. Macfarland was made general secretary of the organization. He has been doing the work this title indicates for the past two years and his work has shown great grasp of the fundamental religious problems in America. Several important commissions have been organized and the reports of the social service commission in connection with strikes in the mining territory in Michigan and Colorado have been noteworthy. Dr. H. K. Carroll will be associate secretary with an office in Washington.

Increase of Ministerial Students.

Waynesburg College of Pennsylvania reports an increase of 50 per cent in the number of its ministerial students as compared with last year. As the increase in the other classes of students is only 27 per cent, it is seen that there is new interest in choosing the ministry as a life vocation. Many schools report similar increases.

Y. M. C. A. Adopts New Methods.

The Y. M. C. A. is undertaking to make its work effective with 150,000 school boys who are being brought together in life problem classes. This is but one of the interesting ways in which this organization shows it is young enough to continue adjusting itself to its environment. There have been sixty-three new buildings built the past year costing $7,300,000 and there has been a gain in membership of 27,000 members. More than 7,000 members of the association have become church members during the year. There is a definite effort to relate association workers more closely with the church and many of the secretaries in Detroit are teaching Sunday-school classes.

Historic Boston Church is Restored.

Park Street church of Boston is one of the historic institutions of Congregationalism. With the change of neighborhood in the great city, it seemed for a time that the church would have to go down. The building was one of the fine examples of the colonial architecture but it had been painted white over its brick exterior. Nine years ago, Dr. A. Z. Conrad was called to the pastorate of this church. First the interior of the building was redecorated and put in order and then people outside the membership were induced to pay for having the old paint sandblasted off the brick and a fresh surface again exposed. The ministry of Dr. Conrad has been so efficient that 623 people have been received into the church during his pastorate. The basement of the church is rented for small stores, as ground values in this neighborhood are very high, and such rental is in lieu of the endowment that will later come when a fund of $300,000 is realized to perpetuate the church. The able pastor is opening his tenth year with this church under favorable auspices.

Y. M. C. A. Builds in New York.

The first building to be erected by the Y. M. C. A. from the four million dollar fund in New York will be a lodging house costing $400,000 to be located in the Bowery. There will be fifteen cent beds and five cent breakfasts as features of the building.

Here and There

Good Preaching versus Good Hearing.

Good preaching compels good hearing, but would not a sympathetic hearing compel better preaching? We hear a good deal about the eloquent tongue. We ought to hear a good deal more about what Dr. Joseph Parker called the eloquent ear. Hearing like speaking is a fine art. We may station a battalion of forces at the ear-gate that will kill the wisest and best words of any preacher. Listless, indifferent and critical hearing will take the heart out of the best preacher that ever lived. Sometimes a spirit possesses a congregation that seems to say when the preacher rises to speak, "Now is the time for a nap," or "There is nothing here that interests ME." That spirit should be cast out, even if the entire church must betake itself to fasting and prayer.

Churches everywhere are calling for men who can preach. Preachers ought to demand churches that will hear to their own profit. Interest on the part of the people will create enthusiasm in the preacher which, in turn, will be imparted to the hearers. Such interest unlocks the doors of his treasure-house. A live attitude on the part of the congregation will wake up a sleepy preacher. An appreciative audience is equal to a good text: it is half the battle. The preacher in such cases wins the victory before he says a word. The people are with him, not against him, as they always are when they are restless and give every indication of being bored. They go along with the torrent of his thoughts and are refreshed by the hearing as he is by the speaking. While good preaching is always to be demanded and to be cultivated, we must also remember that Jesus said, "Take heed how ye hear." If by our words we shall be justified or condemned, the same law will hold with reference to our hearing.

The tongue is a death-dealing or a life-giving member; so also is the ear.

A Word of Caution in Season.

Don't let us learn everything this year! We may live through 1916 and 1917, and those years will be very dull if we compass all knowledge this year. Let us leave, at least, a few remnants over. If we find ourselves being carried almost irresistibly to the goal of all things worth knowing let us beg some benevolent neighbor to come to our aid. Think of the terrible handicap of knowing everything! We should then be compelled to live in peace. Perish the thought! The only man of our acquaintance who had sighted the "ne plus ultra" of human knowledge was the most disagreeable neighbor we ever knew. He was so learned that he was unbrotherly and almost a barbarian.

When we are sure that we know all things it is time to study the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians.

The Annual Reports.

The annual reports of the churches ought to be read and pondered as they appear in the papers. We have a weakness for facts and figures which record the progress of the work done year after year. But the best part of the pastor's work, and we may say the church's work, can never be reduced to paper—the prayers, the self-denials, the satisfactions, the joys, the sorrows, the vexations, the disappointments, all of which may contribute to the upbuilding of the Kingdom. The work of a pastor, if it be real work, must come up through great tribulations. No record can be made of the heart-struggles, or of the victories won on fields unsurveyed by human sight. The book of Revelation has one fact which runs through all its mysteries—triumph through toil and sorrow. The inner life of Christ was summarized in the two words, "Jesus wept." He was pre-eminently the Man of Sorrows. We may be sure that wherever a good work has been done by the churches, there the sacrificial note will be heard. The road to attainment is neither smooth nor shining. Every tree of life, even in the humblest parish, has its roots in some Gethsemane. The fruit of such trees we may see in one form or another in our annual reports.

Wife-beating as a Religious Exercise.

The following will be of interest to those who are interested in the love of certain types of people for the letter of the Scripture. This is taken from the London Examiner for October 11, 1856:

"A very large number of wife-beating cases have recently been brought before the magistrates of Whitehaven, where there exists a sect of professing Christians, who propagate the opinion that the practice is in accordance with the word of God. The Rev. Geo. Bird, formerly rector of Cumberworth, near Huddersfield, has established himself there, and drawn together a congregation, and within the last few weeks it has transpired he holds the doctrine that it is perfectly scriptural for a man to beat his wife. About six weeks ago, James Scott, a member of Mr. Bird's congregation, was summoned by his wife for brutally beating her, because she refused to attend the same place of worship that he did. When before the magistrates, Mrs. Scott said she had no wish that her husband should be punished, if he would promise not to ill-use her again. When asked by the magistrates whether he would make the requisite promise, he refused, saying, 'Am I to obey the laws of God or the laws of man?' As he would not give the promise, the magistrates committed him to prison for a month, with hard labor. The Rev. Mr. Bird has since delivered a course of lectures on the subject of Scott's conviction. He contends that it is a man's duty to rule his own household; and if his wife refuse to obey his orders, he is justified, according to the law of God, in beating her in order to enforce obedience."

From the above it is evident that Mrs. Scott was a better Christian than her husband. She was willing to let him go unpunished, if he would desert the ranks of the militarists and lead a quiet and peaceful life. This, of course, he refused to do, and the magistrates had no alternative but to send him to jail. He became a martyr for the sake of the truth.

I am inclined to believe that the religion of the Scott family was in the wife's name.

It is more than likely that the singing in the Rev. Mr. Bird's congregation was done by a male chorus. Few women would be likely to take their life in their own hand by becoming members of a church in which a husband was allowed to live with a club in his hand. The men, in all probability, did the singing, while the women, for a certainty, did the weeping. If any women were members they received their spiritual instruction by the method of absent treatment. The women who became members under duress were divided into two classes, those who were under the physician's care, and those who were not. Sunday must have been a day of terror to the women of that parish where the paramount question was, "Will you go to church with me today, or stay at home and nurse your wounds?" Few women could say with gladness on a beautiful Sunday morning, "Let us go unto the house of the Lord." If they went it was to escape the wrath of their husbands, who likely kept themselves in training so as to be able to administer the necessary correction to a recalcitrant wife on a moment's notice. The poor wives exhibited the blackness of their hearts by the black eyes they exhibited on Monday mornings, to the delight of the faithful. A bruised face told of a domestic cyclone which was stayed in its devouring path only by the fist of a saint who received his inspiration from the Rev. Mr. Bird. No one in that congregation ever asked, "Where is Mrs. Blank today?" Everybody knew she was at home doing her best to recover from the effects of a pious threshing at the hands of some Mr. Scott. The entire group must have been experts in carrying first aid to the injured.

As for the Rev. Mr. Bird he may have had ten talents, but it is certain he had ten talons. It is likely that he denounced all who did not agree with his interpretations of Scripture. There is no doubt that he handed out many varieties of properly labeled packages of anathemas for those who did not make a specialty of wife-beating, according to the Scriptures. He was one of the tribe who had no use for the weak-jointed fraternity who are not cock-sure of everything celestial and terrestrial. Those who did not share his hobbies with him were set down as the pests who made the Word of God void by their traditions. He was always summoning the faithful to look well to their guns, that an enemy was lurking near. Unless one measured his peck in the half bushel of this reverend wife-beater, no quarter need be expected, no Godspeed, no welcome into his house. He might meet one who differs on a literary, cultural, or social basis, but not in any Christian way lest his spiritual whiteness should be besmirched. He would wash his hands clean of this whole mess of entangling alliances. He would even die before he would surrender the precious privilege of beating his rebellious wife. What this old world needs is men of flint like the Rev. Mr. Bird.

In our time this Mr. Bird would be looked upon as a bird of prey. He has gone, though unfortunately he did not take his spirit with him. Of course, we would not give our offending wives a black eye because they do not share our views, but we give our neighbor's reputation a black eye, because he does not share our views. To justify ourselves we fall into the arms of a favorite text, just as the Rev. Mr. Bird did. Not ours to maul each other with fists; that is the method of the plebeian. Ours to fling the barbed word that rankles in the wound.

The Rev. Mr. Bird has gone, but he has left a family who, in one way or another, are immortalizing his spirit.

E. B. Barnes.

Our Readers' Opinions

MR BRYAN AND THE PROHIBITION VOTE.

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

Will you permit a little objection to your editorial treatment of Secretary of State Bryan and the vote on the Hobson Resolution? You seem to me to both mistake Mr. Bryan's position and to unjustly impugn his motives.

In the first place he did not make any active opposition to the resolution on the plea of States Rights or any other plea. He merely stated, as he has on other occasions, that, in his opinion, it would forward the cause of an ultimate dry nation more to stick to local and state prohibition for a time.

On the other hand he said "this is a matter of opinion and relates to the policy of national action at this time rather than to the principles involved." Again he said "in the debate over the amendment a good deal was said about the doctrine of local self-government. You need not worry about that. The liquor interests have no more respect for local self-government than they have for Federal action and those who want to abolish the saloons will not allow them to hide behind any such pretext when enough states act favorably to make it likely that a national amendment will be ratified."

Thus it will be seen that the Secretary of State did not even join Southern Congressmen in the States rights plea. In the issue of his Commoner where he first stated his position he devoted thirteen and one-half columns to his battle on the saloon, and this was no exception to other issues. That is much more space than any religious paper published devotes to it. When the old war horse of a political party that has long made alliance with the liquor traffic makes so drastic and uncompromising a battle upon booze it seems to me a little disingenuous to accuse him of policy mongering on so small a basis of facts.

It is interesting also to note that the delegations from dry southern states gave majorities to the negative side of this resolution while such utterly wet northern states as Pennsylvania gave majorities to the affirmative side of the issue. Thus it is evident that the vote on neither side was necessarily a dry vote and that the best dry men voted, not for the saloon but for States Rights in settling the score with the saloon.

AS OTHERS SEE US.

We have several times called the attention of our readers to the battle royal that is on among the Disciples, or, as they are popularly called in this part of the country, the Campbellites. We are unable to see, by the way, why any of our Disciple friends should ever object to that term "Campbellite," for the question now at issue is whether or not the members of this body of Christians will be true to the teachings of Alexander Campbell. Indeed, the more liberal party in this communion insist that the position of their opponents is radically different from that of Mr. Campbell, the founder of this body of Christians and, as a writer in The Christian Century puts it, that it constitutes a "flight toward anti-ism."

Editorially, The Christian Century tells us that "this is the sad fate that has today overtaken the Disciples: To have developed within their own fellowship a body of thought more typical of the precise thing their whole history protests against than can be found elsewhere in Christendom." This body of thought, which constitutes the "flight toward anti-ism," is expressed in the statement that other denominations, Presbyterians, Methodists, Congregationalists, etc., are not churches of Jesus Christ and their members not members of the universal Church of Christ—a statement which can be heard almost any day from the pulpits of "Christian" churches in this section. This exclusive "anti" view is championed by The Christian Standard, while The Christian Century—and by the way, it has the support of a large and very influential following—boldly declares that other evangelical churches are churches of Christ, and that their members are members of the Church of Christ "and therefore not without baptism," even though they may not have been immersed.

Both parties to the controversy agree that there is "no other way into the Church of Christ except by being baptized into it," but The Christian Standard and its followers insist that there can be no baptism but immersion, while The Christian Century takes the opposite view. It holds that immersion is the right and proper form of baptism, but does not hesitate to affirm that "men are in the kingdom of God who have not been immersed," and pertinently asks: "If Presbyterians are members of the Church of Christ, and there is no revealed way of admitting into the Church of Christ save by baptism, when were these Presbyterians baptized and in what did their baptism consist?" It concludes that "the discussion of the baptism question is an academic question," and is equally certain that "the practice of Christian union is not a debatable question." At this point it is clear that The Century and not The Standard is in accord with Alexander Campbell, who said: "I labor to see sectarianism abolished and all Christians of every name united," and who further declared: "So long as any man, woman or child declares his confidence in Jesus of Nazareth as God's own Son, that he was delivered for our offences and raised again for our justification—or, in other words, that Jesus is the Messiah, the Saviour of men—and so long as he exhibits a willingness to obey him in all things, so far as knowledge extends, so long will I receive him as a brother and treat him as such."

It becomes increasingly clear that Alexander Campbell was one of the men who lived ahead of his times. He had a vision of a united Christendom upon a spiritual basis, but he was much harassed by, and in a measure, forced to yield to the views of those who sought to make entrance into the kingdom depend upon a formal act, who sought, as Mr. Campbell himself expressed it, to "make baptism a savior and a passport to heaven." He had a vision of Christian fellowship which, it must be confessed, the Disciples have failed to materialize. But The Christian Century is continually holding before its readers this fine ideal, ever urging that Disciples should welcome all Christians to fellowship, waiving the question of baptism, as is witnessed by the following paragraph from its issue of March 21: "If Presbyterian churches are churches of Christ and Presbyterians are members of the Church of Christ, no man can formulate a reason, satisfactory to the Disciple conscience, why the Disciples should not receive them joyfully into their fellowship. If we say they have been baptized, well and good. If we say they have not been baptized but are nevertheless members of the Church of Christ, then baptism is something entirely different than Disciples have always conceived it. But whether we say they are baptized or not, the single fact that they are members of Christ's Church is sufficient to determine our duty. The fact that they have been received into full fellowship with the Head of the Body leaves no ground whatever for a congregation of members of the Body to withhold fellowship from them. On the contrary, their membership in the Church of Christ creates a positive obligation upon the part of every church of Christ to receive them."

THE DRIFT OF THE WIND

Straws show the drift of the wind; but when it overturns a rock that has stood solidly against it for years, the fact testifies to the uncommon strength of the gale. All sorts of straws lately have shown the drift of the wind toward equal suffrage; but it must be strong indeed when so stubborn a rock of opposition as the editor of the Ladies' Home Journal suddenly weakens. For years there has been nothing too bad for Mr. Bok to say against suffrage and the suffragists. Now he comes out with the following sensible paragraphs:

"It is unwise for a woman to say: 'I don't care about the vote.' She must care. It behooves her to be ready if the ballot is given her, for when it is hers she must be ready. That much is sure, and that much she can do.

"It makes no difference whether a woman wishes that suffrage may come to her or not, this much is vital: that she should get ready for it. A woman should say to herself that it is going to come, and then prepare herself for it. That is, she should begin to open her eyes to the big world, to this big country and to the community in which she lives, and try to find out what they all mean and stand for. Let her make up her mind to take a half hour each day and read a good newspaper; in other words, get 'posted.' And that is what every woman must do. For if the vote comes to the women in her State, she will have to vote in order to offset the vote of some woman who may not be as desirable to the community as she tries to be.

"Suppose the vote doesn't come her way, has she had her pains and spent her time for naught? Not at all. She is the gainer, for, whether she votes or not, every woman should know more about what the great questions of the day mean. There is not the slightest doubt that women would be better companions for the men of their families if they did know. So a woman really gains two or three distinct points by mentally granting that the privilege of suffrage may come to her, and preparing herself for the intelligent exercise of it before it comes."

NO MORE EAVESDROPPING.

Eavesdropping on rural party-telephone lines, common in almost every sparsely settled community where amusement is limited, has been made practically impossible by the invention of an attachment which heralds the fact immediately in case a third person "listens in" on a conversation. The story of this improvement is told by Popular Mechanics. The announcer is composed of a toothed disk which is set in motion by the removal of the receiver from its hook. This device then breaks in with a series of musical notes which informs the persons using the line exactly whose instrument has plugged in. In case the offending telephone's call is one long and two short rings, for instance, a bass and two high-pitched notes will be chimed. The indicator also gauges the length of a conversation and breaks the connection after the line has been open four minutes. A person wishing to talk longer than that may make a new connection by pressing down the indicator lever. A record also is kept of the number of hours the instrument is used during a year.

Ruth 1:7-18. Memory Verses, 16, 17.

Golden Text.—Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God. Ruth 1:16.

American Standard Bible.

Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons. (Used by permission.)

(6) Then she arose with her daughters-in-law, that she might return from the country of Moab: for she had heard in the country of Moab how that Jehovah had visited his people in giving them bread. (7) And she went forth out of the place where she was, and her two daughters-in-law with her; and they went on the way to return unto the land of Judah. (8) And Naomi said unto her two daughters-in-law, Go, return each of you to her mother's house; Jehovah deal kindly with you, as ye have dealt with the dead, and with me. (9) Jehovah grant you that ye may find rest, each of you in the house of her husband. Then she kissed them, and they lifted up their voice, and wept. (10) And they said unto her, Nay, but we will return with thee unto thy people. (11) And Naomi said, Turn again, my daughters: why will ye go with me? have I yet sons in my womb, that they may be your husbands? (12) Turn again, my daughters, go your way; for I am too old to have a husband. If I should say, I have hope, if I should even have a husband tonight, and should also bear sons; (13) would ye therefore tarry till they were grown? would ye therefore stay from having husbands? nay, my daughters; for it grieveth me much for your sakes, for the hand of Jehovah is gone forth against me. (14) And they lifted up their voice, and wept again; and Orpah kissed her mother-in-law; but Ruth clave unto her. (15) And she said, Behold, thy sister-in-law is gone back unto her people, and unto her god; return thou after thy sister-in-law. (16) And Ruth said, Entreat me not to leave thee, and to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God; (17) where thou diest, I will die, and there will I be buried: Jehovah do so to me, and more also, if aught but death part thee and me. (18) And when she saw that she was stedfastly minded to go with her she left off speaking unto her.

Verse by Verse.

BY ASA MCDANIEL.

6. She. Naomi.—Her daughters-in-law. Ruth and Orpah. Moab. Moab occupied the table-land east of the Dead Sea. Its northern boundary varied greatly, extending from the river Arnon to the upper end of the Dead Sea. At that time it was prosperous land. His people. The children of Israel. In giving them bread. The famine, v. 1, had passed and prosperity had again returned for which Jehovah was devoutly given credit.

7. Tha place where she was. The land of Moab which had been Naomi's temporary home during the famine in her native land. They went on their way. Farewells were seldom spoken at home in those Eastern lands. According to the custom Ruth and Orpah accompanied their mother-in-law a short distance. We accompany our friends part way (to the train) on their homeward journey.

8. Naomi said: Go, return. Naomi feels how much they must sacrifice to go with her, for she well knew the attitude of Israel toward people of other nations. Her mothers house. In Eastern countries women occupy apartments separate from those of men, and daughters are most frequently in the care of their mothers. Jehovah deal kindly with you. Simple petition in their behalf. Dealt with the dead. Naomi commends her daughters-in-law for their devotion to her sons. And with me. She also approved of their treatment of herself.

9. That ye may find rest. To find rest is an Oriental form of expression for entering the marriage state. There is no place in the East for an unmarried woman, whether maid or widow, except in her husband's house.

10. We will return with thee. Naomi's life in Moab attracted the daughters-in-law. So greatly were they attracted to her that they were willing to bid farewell to country and kindred rather than say good-bye to her.

11. Have I yet sons. The custom is found in Israel. Gen. 38:26, and the law is found Deut. 25:5-10. Naomi reminded Ruth and Orpah that she had no more sons.

12. Go your way. Naomi would persuade them to return to their respective homes. She recognized better prospects for them in their native land.

13. Would you therefore tarry till they were grown? Naomi shows this position to be improbable. Thus by two lines of argument she tries to persuade her daughters-in-law to return. First the prospects of new family relations in their native land, and second that all hope is gone if they go with her.

14. Wept again. See v. 9. It shows the strong attachment which had grown up between them. Strong ties are the result of true lives. Orpah kissed her. After the last sad kiss of faithful friends she returned to her country. The great duty of the Moabites was "Chemosh." Num. 21:29.

15. Return thou. Naomi tried to use to advantage the argument that Orpah had gone back, therefore Ruth should go.

16. Intreat me not. Ruth's mind was made up. She was determined to go with Naomi to the land of Israel at any cost. Go, lodge, people, God, are all expressions which show Ruth's devotion, and how willing she was to completely sever the home ties to be with Naomi in a strange land.

17. There will I be buried. The choice Ruth made was not an experiment, it was for life.

18. Steadfastly minded. When Naomi saw that Ruth had her mind made up she said no more. Fuller says Ruth was a "fixed star." We need more of them.

A Story of Personal Work

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

Why did Ruth choose the true God? It is not an easy thing to break away from traditional religion. We witness today the reluctance with which people of the established classes in heathen lands yield to our faith. This is a fine lesson in personal work. Ruth was won by an attractive personality. Is there anything wrong about such a method? One of the leading college presidents has been heard to say that he considered it no sin to win men to Christ by winning them to himself first! There is nothing heretical about that. On the other hand it is precisely correct.

Rev. John R. Ewers.

YOUR OWN CASE.

It was undoubtedly because you saw Christianity incarnated in the lives of your father and mother, in your brothers and sisters, in your uncles and aunts, in your neighbors and friends, in your Sunday-school teachers and minister or in some one else whom you greatly admired, that you gave your heart to Christ. May we not go further and maintain the assertion that this becomes the determining motive in every religion the world around. Even Christ won us to God by dwelling in winsome flesh among men.

THE MOTHER-IN-LAW.

Moreover in this case it was the mother-in-law who was attractive, who made religion attractive. We have had our threadbare joke about the proverbial mother-in-law who wore out her welcome. But mother-in-laws are great institutions. They evolve into grandmothers. All mothers are splendid! The heart of this lesson must be found in the broad-minded, sweet-spirited, magnanimous nature of Naomi. Ruth, simple and charming as she was, would never have been heard of but for the noble nature of Naomi. Here is the supreme mother-in-law. Naomi was true to Yahweh. Naomi made His religion attractive. Naomi was so consistent and yet considerate in her religion that she won Ruth.

CHARM OF MANNER.

A celebrated English writer, Mr. Edmond Holmes, has recently given us a book entitled, "What is and What Might Be." In this book which deals with education and which makes a wonderful appeal for "Self-realization" in a natural way, he names the seven marks of an educated person: "Activity, versatility, imaginative sympathy, large and free outlook, self-forgetfulness, charm of manner and joy of living." Now it is of more than passing interest to me to note how Jesus embodied each and all of these virtues. He was intensely active, saying: "My Father worketh even until now and I work." He was versatile. Note the wide range of his interests. All kinds of occupations interested him: caring for sheep, making bread, building houses, gathering grapes, sowing seed, trading in the bazaars. He touched life as a teacher, a reformer, a healer and a friend as well as preacher. Children and scholars, nature and crowds, harlots and homefolks, rich and poor, cultured and ignorant, books and pople—all were objects of his interest. He possessed imaginative sympathy for he had compassion upon them. He put himself in the other man's place. He wept. He laughed. That is a fine phrase: "Imaginative sympathy." He had the large and free outlook. He said, "You have heard but I say." Petty rules did not hold him. "The Sabbath was made for man," he said. He was forgetful of self. "I came not to be ministered unto but to minister," he said. And now, "charm of manner," did he have that? He was a gentleman. He dressed well. He drew all sorts and conditions to him. They trusted him. They loved him. Jesus certainly possessed in superlative degree, "Charm of manner." He won men to God by winning them to himself. Men liked his manner of life. His was the attractive personality. And finally he had as a consequence, "Joy of heart." "My peace I leave with you," he said.

A PLAIN DUTY.

Ruth was won by Naomi's attractive personality. She wanted the same religion. Frequently we hear it said, "Well, if he has religion I want none of it!" Why should you not be attractive? Why should you not cultivate charm of manner? Why should you not be gracious, kindly, mellow, frank, pleasing? You should. It is a sin to be a crab and a grouch.

Out of eight Massachusetts towns that voted recently one went "dry" which has been "wet" for many years., while in almost every other instance the vote for license was considerably reduced.

TOPIC FOR FEBRUARY 3.

Fret Not, Faint Not, Fear Not. John 13:1; Psalm 139:10; 121.

"Woe unto them that are at ease in Zion." "Be not therefore anxious for the morrow." There are those who enjoy but do not serve. They are blind and indifferent to the consequences of their acts. Over against them stand those who are keenly alive to consequences. The latter may think only of what will happen to themselves and so be just as selfish as the former. Even if they are not selfish, they destroy their efficiency by anxiety. The ease of those who do not serve and the anxiety of those who take thought anxiously for themselves are easily confused with the quiet confidence of faith and the foresight of love. The man who believes and loves knows the difference.

HE LOVES THEE.

How far shall we trouble ourselves on account of the evil there is in the world? Last summer two sisters in Northern Illinois killed their brother. The people of the county in which the killing occurred thought the deed was murder. They demanded punishment. To their surprise and disappointment the verdict of the jury was, "Not guilty." The jurymen were denounced. The indignation of the people grew in force the more they talked about the verdict. They felt that the jury had given encouragement to crime. Then it came to the mind of some one that the widow of the murdered man had a mortgage on the little farm he had left her. The people raised money to pay this mortgage and to meet other obligations. If the sisters had been found guilty, the widow would probably have been left to pay her debts the best she could. However that may be, the commendable thing is, that people who were fretting over what they considered an evil, satisfied themselves in part by doing a good deed.

HE HOLDS THEE.

The Homiletic Review gives the following from the Christian Guardian: "During the South-African War this telegram came from Ladysmith: 'A civilian has been sentenced by court martial to a year's imprisonment for causing despondency.' The explanation given was that the man would go along the picket lines, saying discouraging words to the men on duty. He struck no blow for the enemy. He was not disloyal to the country. He was simply a discourager. It was a critical time. The fortunes of the town and its brave garrison were trembling in the balance. Instead of heartening the men on whom the defense depended and making them braver and stronger, he put faintness in their hearts and made them less courageous. The court martial adjudged it a crime to speak disheartening words at such a time. And the court martial was right."

HE KEEPS THEE.

Desire and the doubt that desire will be satisfied give fear. We have to learn what desires should be satisfied and how they should be satisfied. The runner removes all unnecessary clothing. In the race of life we ought to decide early what we need and what we can leave behind us. Then, when we have a pretty good idea of what we must have in order to live a complete life, we shall find that courage is indispensable to a calm state of mind. The only safe person is he who can bear whatever comes to him. The reason disaster overtakes many who have the sense of security because they have wealth and friends is that their sense of security is false. Safety lies in the man himself. And he is safest who rests himself in the eternal goodness. He is independent of the accidents of life, not of the power that makes for righteousness.

THE MEANING OF BAPTISM

By CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON

Editor of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

THE REVIEW AND EXPOSITOR, A BAPTIST QUARTERLY.

By Prof. W. J. McGlothlin, Ph. D., D. D.

The Meaning of Baptism. By Charles Clayton Morrison, Editor The Christian Century. Chicago, Disciples Publication Society.

This is one of the most interesting and significant of recent books on baptism. The author is a member of the Disciples' Church and editor of one of their most important publications. He is therefore an immersionist in principle and practice, and would be supposed to be a follower of Mr. Alexander Campbell, the founder of that sect. And yet he breaks away from what he terms the "immersion dogma" and consciously and vigorously opposes Alexander Campbell. What the author means by "immersion dogma" is not very clear. It is not the "practice" of immersion, for he believes in that. Apparently by "immersion dogma" he means the insistence that the bare physical act of immersion is alone baptism and all there is in baptism. He reiterates the assertion that baptism is not a physical but a moral act, a self commitment, an "initiation" into the church of Christ. It is the act of joining the church, a social act. The idea of a spiritual Church is repudiated; the only church is the visible body of believers into which baptism inducts one. One body of Christians is as truly a church of Christ as any other, and any act called baptism suffices, though immersion is the Biblical and most satisfactory form. He declares in the preface "that the Disciples' plea for Christian unity will continue to be abortive so long as Mr. Campbell's view of baptism persists among them," that "the younger generation of educated Disciple ministers and church leaders are in great confusion of mind on the subject" of baptism, and that he has written to "offer a positive ground upon which those who have grown indifferent to the baptism question may stand." He hopes that he has succeeded "in working out a thesis on baptism which resolves from it all elements of legalism and arbitrariness and at the same time revives it as a preachable subject for the modern minister."

The author writes for his own church and for the Baptists, that is for all who insist that baptism is an immersion in water. This view he repudiates, maintaining the thesis that classic usage does not settle this question. In fact, he seems to claim that the physical act was scarcely in the mind of the first Christians. To them it was a moral and social act, and this significance alone was present to their minds, though they did actually immerse. He seems to think that all who practice immersion see in it nothing but the bare physical act, which is, of course, far from the truth with respect to the Baptists whatever may be true among Disciples. To his thinking there is no symbolism in the act. Its whole significance lies in its initiatory character, and naturally one act is about as good as another. His view leads to the conclusion that any other self-dedicatory act might be used just as well as baptism. And yet he insists that baptism as interpreted by him is absolutely necessary to salvation. At the same time he protests vigorously against the legalistic and sacramentarian views of baptism. His belief that baptism is the social act of self-dedication, inevitably excludes infant baptism, and yet he favors the reception without rebaptism of members baptized in infancy coming from pedo-baptist churches. Baptism as he defines it is absolutely necessary to salvation, and yet those churches that baptize in infancy are true churches of Christ and their members to be received by the Disciples without baptism The book is an attempt at an irenicon between the Disciples and the non-immersing pedobaptists; it is also a serious attempt to get away from and to get the Disciples away from the bare legalistic ceremonialism of Alexander Campbell. It is a return toward spiritual religion. But as is perhaps natural, the book is confused and full of contradictions. For example the legalistic and sacramentarian view of baptism is rejected, but baptism is one of the necessary conditions of salvation; baptism is not a physical but a moral act, and yet it is inseparably connected with a physical act; baptism is not immersion, and yet immersion was the scriptural and is the best act; infant baptism is excluded and is not baptism, but people baptized in infancy are to be received into the churches; one cannot unite himself with God's people except in something called baptism, though it makes little difference what that something is.

The book is a curious congeries of contradictory views, but in so far as it indicates a recession from Mr. Campbell's position on the part of the Disciples it is to be welcomed.

THE CHURCHMAN (EPISCOPAL.)

The writer, who was brought up among the "Disciples of Christ," endeavors to give a rational and Scriptural account of baptism, quite apart from the doctrine and practice of the Church. Immersion, he finds, is not the necessary mode of baptism, though he thinks it was the apostolic practice. The doctrine of regeneration in baptism, as he understands it, is "thoroughly magical and superstitious," and "all such magic as this has been historically rejected by our Protestant Christianity." Yet he admits that it is as old as Justin Martyr, and he might have added it was universally held up to the sixteenth century. He says, quite truly, that Christ came to give life, and that baptism was the form of initiation into the Christian brotherhood. But if the Church is really the Body of Christ, and "as many as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ," it is surely in and through baptism that the new life in Christ is given.

THE EPWORTH HERALD (METHODIST.)

"The Meaning of Baptism," by Rev. Charles Clayton Morrison, is a fresh and vigorous treatment of a much discussed subject. It is a rather remarkable book, coming as it does from the editor of one of the leading Disciples publications in the United States. One does not wonder that some of his own brethren have attacked it, for what the author attempts to do "is to take Alexander Campbell's own New Testament and show that in his interpretation of baptism he was in error, in fundamental and costly error, and that his teaching on this subject misled the movement for Christian unity, of which he was the recognized champion." While not agreeing with all the statements made, it is about the most interesting book on the subject I have seen. The author is master of good, clear English and knows how to express himself. Twenty-two chapters, 222 pages. Disciples Publication Society, Chicago. Price, $1.35.

Disciples Table Talk

Judge Wants More Pastoral Calls.

Judge U. E. Harmon of Tacoma, Wash., spoke before the ministers at the Pacific Northwest Parliament of Disciples of Christ recently and said: "Next to being a great preacher, I regard the personal touch of pastor with his people as of paramount importance. Remember now, I am speaking as a layman. I am a member of your congregation, if you please, and I think I know whereof I speak. You cannot afford to neglect visits to the homes of the people. You ask me at once, 'Do you know that the old custom of the pastor visiting and praying with his people has been abandoned?' Yes, I know it, and more's the pity. Our busy business life has left no time apparently for such things, but be that as it may, nothing can take the place of the pastor's visit to the man at this home."

Will Be Elected Chaplain of Senate.

A. R. Liverett, minister at Jefferson City, Mo., was chaplain of the house of representatives in Missouri last year and at the democratic caucus he was named this year to be the chaplain of the senate. This appointment will be confirmed when the legislature meets.

Shoud a Christian Go to War?

W. A. Moore, pastor of First Church, Tacoma, Wash., lives near the border and the question "Should a Christian Go to War?" is a live one. He discussed the antithesis in a recent sermon, Should one go to war and disregard the commandments, or remain at home, and be called a traitor? Mr. Moore said that it would be right to go to the front as a doctor, chaplain or nurse.

Puts "Labels" on New Converts.

The additions to the University Place church, Des Moines, from the Sunday meetings were so numerous that the pastor, Chas. S. Medbury, has asked all the new members to wear blue buttons for three weeks to distinguish them, that they might be the objects of special care on the part of the congregation.

Visits Four Hundred on New Year's Day.

Following a time honored custom of the First Church, at Fresno, Cal., the ministers, Dr. H .O. Breeden and Roy O. Youtz, and the members of the official board, called on all the four hundred members of the church on New Year's Day. Greetings were left at each home, the card reading "May the New Year find and leave you happy, calm, strong and serene, in possession of true riches—love, joy, and peace. This is our wish for you."

W. C. Bower Opposes Filipino Independence.

W. C. Bower of Transylvania University, who is just back from his world tour, declares that the Filipino is not ready for self-government, though at some future date he may be. The public schools must do their work for two or three generations before self-government is possible.

Minister Closes Successful Pastorate.

Louis D. Riddell has closed an eventful and successful pastorate with First Church, Fayetteville, Ark. He has been with this church two and a half years. Soon after he went on the field the church edifice burned to the ground and it was necessary to raise funds for a new building. Last May this new structure was dedicated. There were seventy-four additions during 1914, and the cash receipts for the year were $8,217.59 for all purposes. Mr. Riddell is going to Johnson City, Tenn.

Central Church of Spokane Prospers.

Central church of Spokane, Wash., had a good year in 1914. They received 156 new members. The pastor officiated at fifty weddings and had delivered twenty-nine funeral discourses. The total receipts of the church for the year were $11,916. There are 889 resident members.

Prosperity Visits Newton, Ia.

The church at Newton, Iowa, of which Ervin F. Leake is pastor, had a good year in 1914. There was a net gain in membership of forty-six and the present membership is 374. Including building fund money, nearly $11,000 was raised during the year and this does not include $1,000 of endowment money given the church by Dr. and Mrs. C. E. Boyd in memory of Mrs. Boyd's father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. David Flowers.

Laymen Conduct Services.

On account of the illness of Dr. Geo. H. Combs, of Independence Blvd. Church of Kansas City, he was not able to fill his mid-week preaching appointments recently. The laymen of the church went right on and furnished lay speakers that kept interesting things happening every evening. The Men and Millions Team visited the church on a recent evening and participated somewhat in the services. "The laymen's movement," said R. H. Miller, "put the layman in the preacher's place and the preacher in the layman's place, partners in the business of Christianity."

Decision Day Services.

Chas. M. Fillmore is holding Decision Day services from January 10 to 17. A card has been printed on which the members are to write the names of prospective members. Good audiences are in attendance.

College Evangelism.

Butler College has engaged E. E. Violett for a series of lectures during the week beginning February 21. A decision week is being planned in connection with this.

In and Around Chicago

Hyde Park Church now holds open board meetings in the church and any member of the church who desires may attend and watch the business. Such a meeting was held January 17.

O. W. Stewart was in Chicago recently with the Flying Squadron. A great mass meeting was held in the First Regiment Armory on January 10 and this veteran fighter of the liquor interests acquitted himself with more than usual credit.

Hon. Oliver W. Stewart, Chicago Disciple, who is acquitting himself well as a member of the "Flying Squadron."

W. E. Byrnes, a blind preacher from Texas, has united with the Hyde Park Church. He was a Baptist but joined the Disciples in Denver under the preaching of G. B. Van Arsdall. He came to Chicago from Carlinville, Ill., and preached at South Chicago on January 10. Though totally blind, he keeps up to date in his thinking and travels about extensively. He often does evangelistic work.

The meeting of the Board of Education of the various denominations which is noted in the columns of the department called "Christian World," was attended by several Disciples. Those seen here were Hill M. Bell, of Drake University; R. E. Hieronymus, of the Illinois educational work; Martin Luther Pierce, of Philipps Bible Institute; G. B. Edwards, of Missouri College of the Bible; R. H. Crossfield, of Transylvania University; J. L. Garvin, of William Woods College; Miner Lee Bates, of Hiram College; and Prof. Harod, of Eureka College.

Angus McKinnon, who was formerly business manager of The Christian Century in Chicago, has returned to the city to live.

The Chicago Federation Council which coordinates many of the union activities of the city, has asked the preachers in view of the present European war to preach a series of sermons on "The Fundamentals of the Christian Faith," during the Lenten season. The Disciples are represented in this organization by H. L. Willett, W. G. Winn, E. J. Davis and E. M. Bowman. The Federation Council held an anti-war mass meeting at Powers Theater January 17, at which there were addresses by Jane Addams, Jenkin Lloyd Jones, John C. Kennedy and others.

Several new men have entered the Disciples Divinity House the winter quarter. Among these is H. E. Jensen; who has been studying at the University of Kansas and ministering to a union church in Kansas. He is specializing in social psychology in Chicago.

The annual meeting of the Jackson Boulevard Church was held recently and W. G. Winn, secretary of the Chicago Christian Missionary Society, was present and spoke. On January 10, there were 10 accessions at Jackson Boulevard, 9 on confession of faith. President J. L. Garvin, president of William Woods College in Missouri, preached in this church on January 17.

Chicago was well represented at the recent state board meeting of the C. W. B. M., held in Springfield, Ill. Mrs. S. J. Russell and Mrs. Austin Hunter represented the Second District.

G. H. Brown went through Chicago last week on his way from Taylorville, Ill., to his new charge at North Tonawanda, N. Y. He was formerly pastor at Austin.

Martin Luther Pierce spoke at Metropolitan Church again on January 17.

The meetings that were held in Morgan Park by J. F. Futcher of Ashland Avenue, have closed and several accessions were reported.

The death of Mrs. Mary E. Saunders, widow of the late C. F. Saunders, which took place last week, removes a beautiful life from the membership of Monroe Street church and recalls to older Chicago Disciples many incidents connected with the earlier days of our work in this city. Mr. and Mrs. Saunders were charter members of the old West Side Church, now Jackson Boulevard, and it was in their house that Monroe Street Church was organized in 1892. Mr. Saunders was a liberal donor to Monroe Street during his life-time and at her death Mrs. Saunders bequeathed to the church a mortgage of $3,500 which she held against the property. She and her husband had been instrumental in organizing the churches of Atchison and Topeka, Kans., and held membership for two or three years in First Church, Los Angeles, Cal., during a period of residence there. The funeral services were held at Monroe Street church, January 12, conducted by C. C. Morrison, her former pastor. Mrs. Saunders used to write for The Christian Century when it was The Christian Oracle, and her articles and verse received just praise. She was active in the state work of the Woman's Missionary Society on Kansas, and was profoundly interested in the progress of the cause in Chicago.

Constructive Pastoral Service.

W. P. Shamhart who has entered a seventh year at Rockwood, Tenn., has proven himself a constructive leader. There have been 350 accessions to the church in the past six years and the membership is now 569. The Bible school has trebled in attendance. The church edifice has been enlarged twice and the congregation has just completed remodeling it, so that there are now 20 rooms for class work in the Bible-school. The last improvement cost ten thousand dollars. A C. W. B. M., a Y. P. S. C. E. and a Junior C. E. Society have been organized during this pastorate. The latter is the largest in the state. A pastor's conference was organized in the town and Mr. Shamhart has been president for five years. He works in the local Commercial Club and is one of the promoters of the Lyceum course each year. He has seen seventeen pastors leave the other four churches of the town. The congregation is loyal and is anxious to keep Mr. Shamhart with them for a continuation of this kind of service.

Foreign Missions through the Eye Gate.

C. F. Stevens of the Beatrice, Neb., church has been sent out by the Foreign Society to deliver missionary addresses with the aid of the stereopticon in outlying churches. The weather has been unfavorable but the results secured have been satisfactory.

An Interesting Church.

The church at Richmond, Ky., is an interesting place these days. Recently, Dr. S. D. Gordon, author of the well-known book, "Quiet Talks on Prayer," spent a week in Richmond and spoke in the Disciples' church. Since E. B. Barnes assumed the pastorate four years ago, a handsome building costing $42,000 has been completed and paid for with the exception of three thousand dollars which is pledged and will be paid during 1915. The Sunday-school averaged 317 during 1914 and they remembered the poor of the community with a giving Christmas. Hugh McLellan preached the C. W. B. M. sermon at this church. He is a former pastor and met with a warm welcome. The evangelistic meetings that recently closed made an appeal for community righteousness and interpreted religion from the social viewpoint. There were 100 added to the church. Herbert Yeuell was the evangelist and Grayston Lewis led the music.

Community Evangelism.

Five churches at Kalispell, Mont., joined recently in a union meeting and the preachers of the community assisted in the preaching. It was agreed that the object of the meeting was to secure better community conditions quite as much as to secure accessions. In the middle of the series, the ministers all joined in insisting that D. B. Titus of the Disciples Church should do all the preaching. Under protest, he accepted this task. There were audiences that overflowed the place of meeting and there were 61 confessions of faith. The community is thoroughly aroused against the vice conditions in the community. C. H. Altheide was the singing evangelist.

Glee Club Visits Sunday-school.

The Sunday-school at Flemingsburg, Ky., had an average attendance of 200 in 1914 and an average collection of eight dollars. They sent for the Transylvania Glee Club recently and an entertainment was given to help the Belgian sufferers. Prof. Delcamp leads the club. The church and school observed a giving Christmas for the poor.

Alumnae in Positions of Leadership.

The Alumnae of Christian College of Columbia, Mo., often marry, as the bulletin of that institution shows, but they do not lose interest in the movements of the day. Mrs. J. K. Rogers is president of the Christian College Alumnae Association of Kansas City. Mrs. G. B. Macfarlane has just closed a successful administration as state regent for the Missouri D. A. R. Mrs. Julia L. Skinner is an official at the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music. Miss Laura Yeater is professor of Latin at the Warrensburg State Normal School, and is also one of the able workers for woman's suffrage in Missouri.

Closes Successful Pastorate.

T. L. Lowe has closed a successful ministry at Fourth Avenue Church at Columbus, O. During the six years he has served, there have been 1098 accessions to the church. The church has become a living link in the foreign society. Over 100 members were given to the new church on the North Side and a fund of eight thousand dollars has been raised already for a new building. The Bible-school attendance averaged 526 last year.

Open House for the Poor.

First Church at Steubenville, O., of which E. H. Wray is pastor, threw open their reception rooms with good reading, good cheer, good meals and glad handshakes to the poor and unfortunate of the city during the Christmas week. The Loyal Men's Class and the Loyal Women's Class were the inaugurators of the movement and they expect to do more of it in the future. They served more than 300 meals during the week. The Reception Committee gave much good advice to the unfortunate.

Members Exchange Good Reading.

A departure is made this year at Okmulgee, Okla., where Robert W. Clymer is pastor. The members are invited to bring to the church any magazine or periodical which has helped them and put it on a reading table with the article marked. Other members take these periodicals away. The device has been received with great enthusiasm by the church members.

Jubilee Singers at First Church.

First church of Los Angeles had the Tuskegee Institute Singers from Booker T. Washington's institution at an evening service on January 10. They gave a program of plantation melodies, negro folk songs and dialect readings. The pastor, R. F. Thrapp, spoke briefly on "Ethiopia's Hands."

Stephen E. Fisher Convalescing.

Stephen E. Fisher, who was taken to the hospital some time since with an internal ulcer, and who was suffering with a generally debilitated condition, is gradually convalescing, though it will be many weeks before he is able to get back into his regular work. Meanwhile the church members are rallying to the cause to keep things going while the well-beloved leader is incapacitated.

A Busy Pastor.

Verle W. Blair of Eureka, Ill., church has been busy the past year as his report indicates. He has made 986 calls, delivered 96 addresses and talks, led 37 other meetings, taught a college course, preached 8 funerals and conducted 3 weddings. At the close of the annual meeting the Social Committee called for a talk from Professor Radford on "Social Times of Yesterday" and the boys in the E. W. Dickinson Class had an old-fashioned "husking bee."

Independence Boulevard Has Winning Team.

Independence Boulevard Church of Kansas City has a winning team at basket ball this winter. This team recently played the Elmwood Athletic Club and won with a score of 32 to 30.

J. M. Philputt Optimistic.

J. M. Philputt spoke at Lenox Avenue Church of New York recently on the present war and religion, answering those who say religion has failed. He said: "We may frame up something and call it Christianity whereas it represents only a fraction of the principles which Jesus taught. Our interpretation is inadequate. Our conception must be broadened and deepened. Christianity has not failed. It has not yet been tried in the quarters where the failure seems apparent. Give it a chance. Let society and governments be brought under its influence, as they now are not, and it will prove itself divinely efficient to do the work which humanity needs. Compare our days with those gone by, compare modern missions with the spirit and methods of the Crusades, compare the Red Cross with the treatment of the sick and unfortunate of the 12th century and you will see how far the world has moved under the influence of the Christ."

Ordain Church Officers.
An ordination service was held at First Church, Springfield, on January 3, at which time the officers of the church were consecrated to their tasks for the coming year by the laying on of hands and prayer. After the ordination, the pastor, Frank Waller Allen, preached a sermon appropriate to the occasion.

Boy Scouts in Michigan Church.
There is a local organization of the Boy Scout movement in the church at Owosso, Mich. There are now forty-three members and the twenty who dropped out the last year did so mostly on account of removal from the city.

Young People Have Sleigh Ride.
The young people at Sioux Falls, So. Dak., church had a sleigh ride on New Year's Eve. They went out into the country to the home of a farmer member and spent the time till the new year was ushered in with games and old fashioned songs.

Pastor Has Numerous Funerals.
Has any pastor among the Disciples been called on more frequently the past year for funerals than Walter M. Jordan of Anaconda, Mont.? He preached 107 funeral sermons during 1914.

Overcoats Disappear With the Old Year.
Central church, at Dallas, Texas, was having a watch night service on New Year's Eve, and while the congregation was at its devotions, an enterprising burglar took a number of hats and overcoats.

Will Build New Edifice.
The Rosemont church, in a suburb of Dallas, Tex., will build a new edifice the coming year which will cost about $10,000. The building is being planned especially for the use of the Sunday-school. One lady in the church will put out a large flower garden and sell flowers for the building fund.

Achievements at Charleroi, Pa.
First Church, of Charleroi, Pa., of which E. N. Duty is minister, held its congregational meeting January 7, 1915, at which time reports were given from every department of the church, and also the election of the church officiary was held. During the year 1914 a new pipe-organ was installed and $2,278.16 was raised for this fund and the organ was dedicated last June free from debt. The amount raised during the year for all purposes was $5,700.06, and for benevolences $556.56. The pastor E. N. Duty began his fourth year with this congregation January 1, 1915. During the year 1914, Mr. Duty preached 109 sermons, delivered ten special addresses; officiated at three weddings and sixteen funerals. There were thirty-one accessions to the church during the year, without any special meetings. The number of additions to the church during the three years of the present pastorate are 173; removals by death, four; and the present membership is 473. Pastoral calls made were 1021. The pastor held a meeting during February, 1914, at Beaver Falls with twenty accessions. The church is supporting D. R. LaRue at Bethany College to the extent of $200 a year in his preparation for missionary work among the French people. Mr. La Rue will be ordained some time this month at Toronto, Ohio, church.

Church Votes Thanks to Newspapers.
The following resolution was passed by the official board of First Church, Wellington, Kans. "Whereas, the newspapers of this city have always been so liberal in the giving of space to the notices of this church at all times, and during the past year, Therefore, be it resolved, that this congregation extend to them the hearty appreciation of this congregation for all the courtesies extended during the past year, and wish for them a prosperous New Year."

Church Feeds the Hunrgy.
Walnut Hills church of Cincinnati is located in a good section of the city but the calls from the poor have been unusually numerous this winter. The church has established a station for feeding the hungry one meal a day during the present stringency.

What the Community Thinks of the Church

Edgar DeWitt Jones, pastor of First Church, Bloomington, Ill., has recently sent out a list of questions to people in different walks of life in Bloomington with self-addressed and stamped envelope for reply. The result of the symposium has been a series of Sunday evening sermons running through six nights, which will interpret the answers given to the questions. The sermon topics for the six Sunday evenings are "What of the Church?" "What of the Sermon?" "What of the Bible?" "What of Prayer?" "What of Amusements?" "What of Bloomington?" "What of the World?"

IS THE CHURCH FULFILLING ITS MISSION?

He sent out in all sixty-four letters with list of twenty-four questions enclosed, together with stamped envelope for reply. Four returned the questions stating various reasons for not answering them; five promised to send answers later, but failed to do so; twenty-seven replied, some in brief, and others at greater length; practically 50 per cent answered the questions. Of the twenty-seven who answered, there are represented one retired farmer, one minister, one miner, two physicians, three lawyers, one dentist, two editors, three merchants, one university president, one banker, one capitalist, two labor leaders, one real estate dealer and one bookkeeper, all men. Six women are represented, two of these wage-earners, four housekeepers. Politically, Republicans, Democrats, Prohibitionists, Socialists and Progressives are represented in the list. Religiously, practically every religious body in the community, including one Friend, or Quaker, and a Christian Scientist. Others not members of any religious body are represented.

Some of the answers given to the questions indicate the temper of the community. The second question was "In your judgment is the modern church fulfilling its mission, and if not, what would you suggest?" A few of the answers were as follows:

"No. It does not interest a sufficient number of adults. There should be a larger per cent of the people studying the Bible. Too many regard religion as most profitable at time of death. More practical religion should be appreciated. Religion should not be experimented and demonstrated at the end of the earth's journey, but should be lived daily. It is not a mask to be worn on Sunday. It should be one's guide every day. The Bible gives many accounts of divine help and such should be expected now. People should realize that God is a source of power and strength in every good desire and that happiness, health and prosperity are commensurate with our reliance upon divine truth."

TOO MUCH FORMALISM.

"No. Less formalism. Shorter opening exercises. More singing of familiar hymns by the congregation. A church building like a tabernacle so all the seats are about equal. Women with their hats off so the men can see the choir and preacher. Also more individual work."

"The modern church is not fulfilling its mission. It is not reaching a very large fraction of the population and I am afraid that a good deal of the actual church-going is perfunctory. I can not well suggest a remedy for this condition. I think the chief trouble is that the church has not addressed itself to modern problems. It has preached a personal religion as it ought; but it has held up motives of self-interest, personal salvation, and so on too much as the motive for the Christian life. Then the church, too, has become a middle or upper class institution, and has largely lost the confidence of the working men and women, especially in the cities."

"Reasonably well; as well perhaps as any other organization is fulfilling its mission. Greater sociability among its members would, I think, tend to weld its members more firmly together. Propinquity often dissipates prejudices and false impressions."

"The modern church is not fulfilling its mission as long as unnecessary poverty, unnecessary suffering and unnecessary sin exist in the world. The ordinary church attendant, to my mind, is satisfied after attending the services of the church. The listening to a sermon is a vapid thing unless it results in the quickening of the heart of the listener to his world responsibility."

TOUCHING A SORE SPOT.

The fourth question was "Is the church of today, in your opinion reaching all classes of society, and if not, what have you to offer?" This question touched the sore spot of our social mal-adjustments and as might have been expected, brought out various reactions from the different sections of the community. These were some of the answers:

"If you mean the church in general, yes. Though too many churches become class institutions by a kind of religio-class selection. It is my belief from observation that the average church is more cosmopolitan than many are ready to believe or admit."

"Perhaps, yes; but not to the extent it should. All mystery should be eliminated from religion. Every one should be able to give a reason for his faith. If religion could be made more practical, it would be more appreciated. If people understood the kingdom of God is here and now, that God is near to them, that the arm of Christ was about them ready to help and support them in their every act, and that they should have Christ with them in all their business dealings, and in all their social situations, and that God was and is sufficient for their every need, divine demonstration would be of daily and hourly occurrence, and they would grow in grace."

"It is not. Not by lowering the standard of Christianity and the church, but preach a positive gospel, and then let every member, pastor and layman go out and constrain them to come in, feed the hungry, clothe the naked, lift up the fallen."

"It misses the top and bottom and you can't get them together in such an out of balance social condition."

"In my opinion the church is not fulfilling its mission or reaching all classes of society. I think the church has one foot in the grave. It needs to be genuinely converted, then it will fulfill its mission and know how to reach all classes of society and help them. I think if the church the world over had been practicing what it preaches this awful war would never have occurred."

"I do not think the church is reaching all classes of society. How to do it is a big problem. How can a church that is closed six days in the week compete with the saloon, the pool hall, the club room, etc., that are open from 7 a. m., to 11 p. m., six days in the week. I predict that the time will come when all churches will open all day long and when mankind will look to the church for the solution of many of the problems of every day life."

CHURCH CATERS TO PROPERTIED CLASSES.

"The church of today is not reaching all classes of society. Its teaching favors too much of individualism and caters, one may almost say, to the propertied classes. The holders of property, especially of land, ought to realize that the foundation of property rights is very different for different classes of property, and that your smug, self-satisfied Christian citizen is often guilty of great injustice to the non-propertied classes. I have no plan to offer for the correction of this other than a free discussion of social questions, and by that I do not mean the liquor question, the white slave question, or the working day for women, etc., but the fundamental economic questions with which our socialistic writers and political organizations are dealing."

Breach of Promise Suit in Church.

The Christian Endeavor Society at Benton, Ill., furnished auspices for a moot court trial which was to hear of the alleged breach of promise of one of its members. A real judge was secured to hear the case and a young woman brought the charge against one of the young men.

Tabernacle Church has Good Year.

The Tabernacle church of Columbus, Ind., made a good record last year. Ten thousand dollars was raised during the year for all purposes. There were seventy-four additions to the church. There was an average attendance of 351 in the Sunday-school. The total resident membership of the church is 1,316. W. H. Book is pastor.

County Organization Studies Churches.

Shelby County, Ill., is organized in its church life and it is reported that there are 17 Disciple churches in the county, with buildings valued at nearly $60,000. There are 1892 members and they pay their pastors annually $6,237. They gained 179 in church membership the past year. The missionary offerings were $359 for foreign missions, $344 for home missions and $251 for benevolence. The total missionary offerings were $1,693, or less than a dollar a member, and the contributions for all kinds of church work were $12,571, which averaged $7 per member.

Farmers' Institute in the Church.

All the books on the country church advocate holding the farmers' meetings in the church. This was done recently at Westboro, O. Though the country was covered with sleet, the church was filled with farmers who discussed agriculture. An address was given on "How to Be Young at Fifty."

El Paso, Texas, Church Makes Growth.

The church at El Paso, Texas, of which Perry J. Rice is pastor, made a good record last year. There were 92 accessions to the church and after thorough revision, the membership roll has 550 names upon it. About four thousand dollars was raised for the local work and a little over a thousand dollars was raised for missions by the church and half as much more by the auxiliary organizations. This church is one of the four largest contributors to missions in the state of Texas. The every-member canvass will be conducted by forty men some time soon.

A Preacher's Report at the Annual Meeting.

The following paragraphs from the annual report of Howard T. Cree, at Atlanta, Ga., to his congregation at Augusta, Ga., where he has ministered for almost eleven years, reveal somewhat his appraisal of his ministry.

"Another annual report! Is it a necessity or is it a waste of time? Will it be a statement of cold facts and lifeless figures or an effort to record an experience? Can anyone report religious and spiritual activities? We may count the eggs in a box, the boards in a house, the dollars in a cash-drawer, but can the work of the minister be tabulated? Oh. yes, one may make certain statements as to the number of pastoral calls, the additions to the membership and the amount of money collected, but these are the simple calculations in arithmetic which any child in the grammar school might make. Who can report the minister's work, his prayer or his power? Surely not the minister; to attempt it would be to violate the sanctity of his own service. A minister's report is a record and reminiscence, a set of figures and a sacred experience. What the year has meant in its furthest reaches must remain unrevealed until the books are opened when each man 'shall be judged out of the things written in the books.' In the formal and visible phases of the work, First Church in Augusta raised in all departments for local expenses, $3,120.36 and for missions and benevolences $1,234.11. This, with $2,000 from the trustees of the endowment, yields a total of $6,454.47 for all purposes. When it is taken into consideration that the per capita contribution of this church of two hundred and fifty members is more than ten dollars for local work and more than five dollars for missions, it will be seen that the record is a good one."

Mrs. R. A. Long Gives Organ to Methodists.

Mrs. R. A. Long was formerly a member of the Methodist Church at Columbus, Kans., and she has recently given them a $2,500 organ conditioned upon their raising their indebtedness in full. The condition was met. R. A. Long has made a similar offer to the Disciples Church of the city and they are preparing to claim his offer.

Commended as Orthodox.

J. F. Williams of Adrian, Mich., recently left his field in Michigan to accept the pastorate at Hicksville, O. The Ministerial Association at Adrian passed resolutions regretting his departure and saying: "Resolved, that we commend him as an orthodox minister, worthy and well qualified for years of noble Christian service in Christ's kingdom and implore the blessing of God to be with him and his excellent wife wherever under the providence of God they may be called."

Men Defeat Women in Attendance Contest.

The Men's Class at Paulding, O., taught by the pastor, and the Women's Class, taught by Dr. J. H. Neeley, have been having an attendance contest. By the terms of the agreement, the losing side should provide a dinner. The women were ahead at first but since the bad weather began, they have fallen behind and were finally defeated. They have made good on the terms of the contest and the men received the dinner promised them.

County Organization Has Paper.

The county organization in Pettis County, Mo., publishes an eight page monthly paper of considerable size which interprets the interests of that group of churches. The January issue is devoted to the interests of education. G. M. Walker is the editor. The paper is called the Pettis County Christian.

President Cramblet Returns to Office.

President Cramblet of Bethany College has sufficiently recovered from his gun shot wounds received at the hands of a workman recently to be in his office again, though he is not yet able to assume full charge of his work. There are two Glee Clubs at Bethany this year, one for young women and one for young men. They are under the instruction of the teacher of vocal music, Chester Roberts.

Large Student Body at Columbia.

The Bible College of Missouri has a considerable body of students preparing at the state university and in the class rooms of the Bible College for religious work. There are twenty-one making ready for the ministry, eleven for the mission fields and eleven for other callings. In addition to this, there are 137 of the students in the university who take advantage of the Bible courses to some extent.

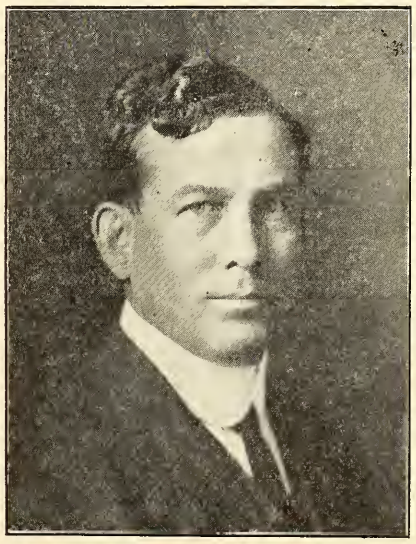
Disciples Stand for Education

What Some of Them Said About Education Day.

"Louis O. Lehman is expected to make address for us Jan. 10th. Last year we gave Eureka $100.00 and I hope we may do so this year." W. H. Cannon, Decatur, Ill.

"I am only preaching once a month while attending Drake and cannot get a very good hold upon my people but will do the best I can for education as well as our general missionary budget. The amount promised is unauthorized by the church but I shall try to reach it. Yours in Christ. T. M. Walton, Des Moines, Ia.

"Our apportionment is $75.00 but we want to make it $100, since the colleges are at the foundation of our work. May great success crown your efforts." W. M. Williams, Benham, Tex.



Professor C. E. Underwood, Treasurer of the Board of Education of the Disciples, who did much to make January 17, Education Day, a notable one among the churches.

"We have re-arranged our budget for the coming year and have placed the Board of Education on the list of beneficiaries. The amount will not be large, but it will be something as a start. If you will send me 150 copies of 'Facts About Our Colleges,' I will distribute them on or before Education Day." W. W. Sniff, New Castle, Pa.

"Members of Mill Creek, have just subscribed $1,500 to Men and Millions Movement. May God bless our united efforts." J. L. Finnell, Wedonia, Ky.

"We accept joint apportionment and give opportunity for additional offerings." John S. Zeran, Hattiesburg, Miss.

"Kirwin is a young congregation. Just built a new church house. Therefore a heavy financial burden for poor people, but will do our best." W. B. F. Robb, Kirwin, Kan.

"We (wife and I) have been pulling hard for Eureka, with some success. Last year had one boy in Eureka (my son), this year three." Geo. T. Smith, Washburn, Ill.

"We wish to help you to the full extent of our ability." A. M. Hootman, Greencastle, Ind.

"We will try to observe the day by bringing the question of Christian Education before the congregation. We will want our offering to go to Wm. Woods College at Fulton, Mo., where we are educating one of the girls of our Church with a view to her entrance upon the foreign mission field when she has completed her training. We will pay not less than $75 to $100. We have been apportioned $40 in the joint apportionment, but as I have said, we shall contribute a much larger sum than that." W. F. Richardson,

"Our missionary work is all on the Budget plan and we are anxious to make it as great as possible. Yours for great things." W. S. Lemmon, Centralia, Wash.

"Glad to co-operate with you. General Convention apportionment to us is $15. That is a beginning at least." E. P. Wise, East Liverpool, O.

"We are trying to organize the loyal movement. I hope we may secure several names and a neat sum for better education." H. O. Crow, New Glasgow, P. E. I., Can.

"This is a great work. I am glad to see the joint apportionment plan." J. C. Welch, Elgin, Tex.

"Have eight young people in E. B. U. Two other ministerial students to attend later. Have eight young preachers preparing. Will make it ten at least for Men and Millions Movement." Geo. C. Ritchey, Newberg, Ore.

"Regret not to give more but our church is just getting 'out of the woods.' Will do better soon." A. F. Roadhouse, San Bernardino, Calif.

"We are glad to see our people coming to the front in this important work. It is gratifying to know that we are getting more system in our distribution of missionary funds." Enoch Smith, Millersburg, O.

"I am a great friend of our colleges and will do all I can for the cause of Christian Education." Bruce Nay, Jefferson, Ga.

"The Broadway Church of Lexington, Ky., will contribute $100 on the budget plan for Christian Education. I will preach an Education sermon January 17, 1915, and will distribute the literature sent. We will also make canvass for students." Mark Collis, Lexington, Ky.

"I have been here but a short time, not yet organized but will consider the educational with other interests of the church." Joel Brown, Meridian, Idaho.

"We wish to have part in all of the missionary enterprises for the year 1915 and may success crown all of your efforts." Chas. M. Ashmore, Rogers, Tex.

"We are glad to help in this work, but do not know how much to promise. We'll do our best." W. G. Hoover, Bladensburg, O.

"I am with you for a most liberal offering for Christian Education. No interest among us is in greater need today than our schools. They are the foundation of all our work. Let these fail and it spells ruin to all our missionary enterprises. Our schools must be sustained." J. H. Bicknell, Bethany, Nebr.

"We have been supporting Kueka College annually in our budget system and will continue to do so. Wish you success." M. M. Amunson, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Every good wish for the success of our Educational work under the direction of our Board of Education." H. R. Ford, Beaumont, Tex.

"The 'Joint Missionary Apportionment' is splendid. We have done little enough for Education." B. H. Cleaver, Shelbina, Mo.

Good Reports from Uniontown, Pa.

The church at Uniontown, Pa., of which Cloyd Goodnight is pastor, had a good year during 1914. The total receipts from all sources were $14,460.21. Of this over $7,000 went to missions. Of the missionary money, $5,000 was spent in the county work. The church had fifty-five additions during the year and the membership is now 1,087.

Church Has Additions Without Revival.

Central church, of Youngstown, Ohio, of which Wm. Dunn Ryan is pastor, had sixty-four accessions to the church by baptism last year and thirty-nine otherwise, though no evangelistic services were held.

Emory Ross in America.

Emory Ross, missionary under the C. W. B. M., in Liberia, is back in America and has spoken in several churches since his return. Announcements are out of his engagement and it is reported he will take a wife back to Africa with him. He brought back from Africa Miss Lulu Smith, an African missionary, who is seriously ill and who may not be able to return.

A School of Methods.

A School of Methods for Bible-school workers was held at Broadway church, Louisville, Ky., January 11-15. Prior to the meetings, Roy K. Roadruck visited practically all of the country schools in Jefferson County. Among the speakers at the school of methods was E. W. Thornton.

Time of National Convention Changed.

The time for the national convention in Los Angeles has been changed again at a recent meeting of the executive and advisory committees of the convention held recently in St. Louis. The time for holding the convention will be July 18 to 25, thus opening the convention on Sunday night and closing the following Sunday night. President Walter M. White and Secretary Graham Frank, will visit Los Angeles soon and confer with the local committee with regard to the convention arrangements.

A New Edifice for Los Angeles.

Los Angeles was the city of the best gains for the Disciples the past fifteen years, and it is keeping right up to its record. The foundation is being laid for a new structure in South Park this winter. This basement will cost $5,400 and will be roofed over to await the funds necessary to complete the structure planned.

Nephew of Missionary Martyr Ordained.

Earle Harry Biddle, of Wellsburg, W. Va., a nephew of Dr. Biddle who gave his life for Africa, was set apart for the ministry by the congregation of which he is a member, on December 27. He graduated from Bethany College in 1914 and has already proven himself a preacher of ability. The young man is a son of the Wellsburg minister, and the father in his charge to the young candidate for the ministry reminded him of the uncle's wish that he should be a foreign missionary.

Church Prepares to Build.

The past year has been one of progress at First Church, Enid, Okla., where A. G. Smith ministers. There were 197 accessions, seventy-seven of them by baptism. The old debts of the church were paid up and the church came near ending the year out of debt in the budget fund. The Sunday-school has become the largest in the city. The church has made a large payment on a lot purchased last spring upon which a new building will be erected. This past year was the banner year of this congregation for missionary contributions.

Commission on Christian Union Issues Tracts.

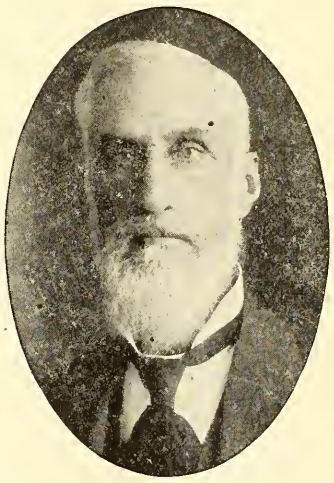
The Commission on Christian Union has issued three tracts recently which are to serve the cause represented by this commission: The first two, "Christian Union: the Task of a Generation," and "The Disciples of Christ and Christian Union," are by Peter Ainslie, president of the Commission, and may be had from "The Seminary House," Baltimore, Md., for 2 cents each, 15 cents a dozen, $1 a hundred. The third, "The Restoration Plea of the Disciples of Christ," is by Frederick D. Kershner, and sells at 3 cents each, 25 cents a dozen, $1.50 a hundred.

Twenty-five Years in New England.

Twenty-five years in New England, where Disciple churches are very few and far between, is the record of A. Jay Teagarden at Danbury, Conn. In his ministry, Mr. Teagarden has seen twenty-eight ministers come and go in the six Protestant churches of the city. He went to Yale when he first began preaching at Danbury and expected to go into foreign missionary work, but as the years passed by, it seemed his duty to be a home missionary. Twenty-five years ago the church at Danbury had 260 members; 1,136 have been received since then and at the present time there are 860 members. The congregation is housed in a $22,000 plant. This church was organized in 1817 and it is stated that the Lord's Supper has not been omitted any Sunday in ninety-seven years.

Aged Pastor Emeritus Has Birthday.

A. B. Jones is pastor emeritus of Liberty, Mo., church and on January 5, he celebrated his eighty-third birthday. Mrs. Jones invited Mr. and Mrs. Graham Frank to the birthday dinner. The occasion brought forth many words of congratulation to the veteran minister.



Rev. A. B. Jones, of Liberty, Mo., who is being congratulated on passing his eighty-third milestone.

Oldest Disciple in America Passes Away.

Mrs. Todd, who has been cared for in the Christian Home at Walla Walla, Wash., has been known as the oldest Disciple in America. She recently passed away in her 105th year. The care of this old Disciple has been a privilege accorded the National Benevolent Association.

Newspaper Man Becomes Minister.

Robert C. Moore, a Drake graduate of the class of 1908, has been engaged for the past three years in the newspaper business at Farmington, Mo., but has decided to give himself henceforth to the preaching of the gospel. He has been preaching some the past year in connection with his business. Mrs. Moore is a soloist and chorus leader and is able to strengthen the work wherever they go.

Achievements at Trumbull, Neb.

Roby Orahood is minister at Trumbull, Neb., and at an annual meeting held recently the following account was given: Accessions, 100; loss by death, 2; balance in treasury, $291.49. The building has been repaired at a cost of about $400. A triple exchange meeting was held. A business meeting was held in the afternoon of December 29.

Progress at Rutland, Ill.

The annual reports have come in from Rutland, Ill., where A. C. Hargis ministers. The following are some of the significant items:

Accessions, fifty-seven; membership less than 200; average church attendance, seventy-six; total raised, $2,500; average Bible-school attendance, 104; average Bible-school offering, $6.15; total Bible-school offering, $320.07; largest Bible-school attendance, 306; largest offering, $25.

Optimism the Note at Washington, Pa.

There is a very optimistic spirit abroad at Washington, Pa., in First Church where Walter Mansell ministers. Mr. Mansell reports 1914 the best year in the history of the church; the church had the largest number of new members, largest amount of money raised, largest audiences and the largest average Bible-school. The "white gifts" Christmas service resulted in $150 in provisions and twenty-one dollars in money.

Many Accessions at Traverse City, Mich.

The year 1914 was characterized by a very marked increase of membership at Traverse City, Mich. The minister, Ford A. Ellis, reports the year as follows: Accessions, 200—by baptism, 147; by letter or statement, fifty-three. Total membership, 443—resident, 421. Raised for all purposes, $2,781.76. Mr. Ellis labored forty-seven weeks, preached seventy-five sermons, delivered nineteen special addresses, made 200 calls, conducted seventeen funerals and officiated at twenty-four weddings.

C. W. B. M. Doubled Last Year.

The church at Corydon, Ia., rejoices in the progress of its C. W. B. M. last year. The minister, C. C. Davis, reports the following facts concerning the work for 1914: The church raised and administered through its budget $120.22 for missions and benevolences; through auxiliaries, including the Bible-school, $390.25 was raised. The C. W. B. M. auxiliary nearly doubled its membership, took four life memberships and raised $188.14. A business meeting and dinner held January 1, was addressed by D. L. Ursnrow and Hon. C. W. Steele.

Eureka Students Evangelize.

During the Christmas vacation, some of the students from Eureka College held a series of evangelistic meetings at Boston Chapel, near Girard, Ill. There was an average attendance of 150 each night and two conversions. The team was composed of Clair Youtz, C. E. Keltner, Chester Jacobs, Homer Turner and Miss Myrtle Youtz, the latter serving as song leader for the company.

Minister Becomes a Catholic.

C. L. Harbord of Kansas City, who for four years has ministered to a rural church at Rich Hill, Mo., recently handed in his resignation to his church and announced that he would unite with the Roman Catholic Church. He has been a very popular man at Rich Hill until this announcement. Mrs. Harbord was born and reared a Catholic and has never left that faith.

J. V. Coombs Is Injured.

J. V. Coombs left Spickard, Mo., after dedicating a church and was soon after mixed up in a railroad wreck. There was a head-on collision between a Rock Island and a Burlington train. Mr. Coombs who had previously lost one hand, received injuries in his crippled arm, his knee and back. He was taken to a hospital and treated. He was soon able to continue his journey to Arkansas City, Ark., where he is to hold a series of evangelistic meetings.

Tabernacle Erected.

The evangelistic meetings held at Savannah, Mo., by R. C. Snodgrass, brother of the pastor, R. E. Snodgrass, have grown too large for the church and a tabernacle has been erected which will hold two thousand people. C. M. Howe is the singer.

Education Day Sermon Brings Results.

F. R. Gillihan preached an effective education day sermon at Altamont, Mo., on "The Tragedy of the Unprepared." Mrs. N. J. Gardner heard the sermon and presented the preacher with a library of four hundred volumes. The pastor was overcome by this kindness and has generously offered to give Canton College half of the books.

Building Up New London, Mo., Church.

The church at New London, Mo., was very much blessed last year. They had seventy accessions and a net gain of sixty-four in membership. The present membership is 515. Alfred Munyon is pastor.

Preacher Gets Bad Check at Wedding.

James Small, of Kansas City, is out of pocket $2.75 on a wedding. A young dentist and a nurse came from Omaha to his house and were married. He was given a check for $25 on an Omaha bank and the check came back to him marked "No account." Mr. Small had to pay $2.75 protest fees. The bridegroom is in jail awaiting trial on charges from a clothing company who say he secured his wife's outfit on credit under false pretenses.

Huntington, Ind., Church Moves Forward.

The church at Huntington, Ind., had a good year in 1914. The total receipts were $15,169.13, and at the end of the year, there was a balance in the various treasuries of $768.82 and every debt against the church paid. This is the first time in years the year has ended so well financially. The pastor reported 141 special addresses and six lectures. He had forty-seven weddings and ministered at forty-five funerals. A parsonage was secured the past year. The church will support T. C. Buck at Lu Chow Fu, in China, and continue meeting all their other missionary apportionments. E. W. Cole, is pastor.

Arrested for Baptizing Converts.

The Commission on Foreign Relations of the American Christian Missionary Society hears from the churches in Poland in spite of the war. A number have been converted but there is no baptistry and the last time the believers tried to baptize in the river, they were arrested, the officers not being able to understand what was happening. On explanations being given, they were released. The Polish Disciples believe that the war may open a way to greatly extend their work. W. Zebrokski is missionary at Warsaw.

Work in Norway Organized.

The thirteen churches of the Disciples in Norway are now co-ordinated through the efforts of August Samuelson of Fredrikstad who is evangelist and secretary. He publishes a paper for these churches called "The Old Path."

Public School Children Give to Missions.

A district school at Kentland, Ind., earned considerable money at a box supper recently and the proceeds were divided among the adjacent churches with instructions to give the money to missionary work. Five dollars was given to the Red Cross.

Methodist Secretary in Disciple Church.

Harry F. Ward is the well-known secretary of social service in the northern branch of the Methodist Episcopal church. He recently gave a very interesting address to the young people of the Disciples church at Kentland, Ind.

Prominent Disciple Dies.

W. A. Wyatt, president of the Juliet Fowler Homes, in Dallas, Texas, for many years chairman of the board of deacons in Central church, took his own life recently in a fit of temporary insanity. There is much mystery connected with his death. He was much beloved by a large circle of friends.

El Paso Disciples Resolve to Go to Church.

First Church, at El Paso, Tex., of which Perry J. Rice is pastor, passed around cards with a New Year's resolution which were signed by large numbers in the congregation. The resolution has the following promise "I am therefore resolved to support the church during the coming year in every possible way, especially by attending the Lord's Day services. I am also resolved to do all in my power to induce others, especially those in any intimate way related to me, to do likewise." The evening service has been changed to a vesper service with good results and the pastor recently preached on "Liberty and Loyalty."

A Year's Work at Youngstown, Ohio.

First Church of Youngstown, Ohio, is the old church of the city and this last year it has shown commendable activity. The accessions last year were sixty and the present membership, 1126. The congregation raised for local work through the church offerings $5,509. The church aside from its auxiliary societies gave to missions $576. L. G. Batman is the pastor.

Reports at El Paso, Tex., Encouraging.

At the annual meeting at First Church, El Paso, Tex., the reports were very encouraging. There were ninety-two accessions last year, nearly all of whom came during the regular services. The total receipts were $6,487.37, of which $1,461.36 was for missions. During the five years of the present pastorate there have been 446 people received into membership, and the present membership is 550. In that time a new church was organized at Austin Park with 100 members. Perry J. Rice is pastor.

Plan of National Convention

The plan of the National Convention to be held at Los Angeles July 18 to 25, has been outlined by the Executive Board of the General Convention. EVANGELISTIC NOTICE.

J. M. Rudy.

John R. Golden, state secretary of the Illinois Christian Missionary Society, writes: "J. M. Rudy approaches very close to the ideal evangelist. He helps the minister solve his problems, and does not leave added problems. He is content to preach the gospel and serve the church and build it up, and does not make a reputation for himself at the expense of the church. He is a man needed in the evangelistic field. He does not have a single questionable method." He should be addressed at Quincy, Illinois.

"J. M. Rudy is an evangelist of his own type. He is not the imitation of anybody. He is unique. He understands a congregation and knows how to adopt his method without losing his message. In his revival meetings he follows a constructive program which presents the great essentials intelligently and effectively. I have heard him with interest and profit.—F. W. Burnham, secretary, American Christian Missionary Society.

Reach the Mind Through the "Eye Gate"

The most progressive pastors and teachers today are finding that the quickest path to the Kingdom of the Mind is by the way of the "Eye-Gate." It has been scientifically demonstrated that pictures get over three times the results obtained by the use of words. Preach a sermon, teach a lesson, by word of mouth; it takes the message a long time to reach the mind, and too often it is lost after getting to its destination.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desire nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Bible Questions Answered by the Best Progressive Scholarship

Printed on India Paper. By printing on the best Bible paper the four large octavo volumes of the original edition are condensed into one. It is a library in one handy volume for the student's desk.

Correlation of Parts. By common consent the book as a work of reference is strikingly accurate and for convenience of use unsurpassed. The real value of the cross-references only now becomes apparent to the reader when at last he can use the whole work as a single volume.

International Character of Work. The work is international, having been written by 96 specialists, of whom exactly one-third wrote in a foreign language. Roughly it may be said that over a third of the writers belong to England, nearly a third to Scotland (13), Ireland (23), or America (12), and a third use German (28), Dutch (3), or French (1). This international character of the work has given the editors a free hand in selecting the scholars to whom to entrust the various subjects. The only rule has been—"the best available."

Un-Sectarian Character. In the next place, the work is un-sectarian. To say of a work which professes to be scientific that in the selection of writers ecclesiastical connection or independence counts nothing is really superfluous. It is interesting and encouraging, however, to note the result—that, as a matter of fact, among its writers in English are Jews, Episcopalians of various schools, Methodists, Congregationalists, Presbyterians, and Baptists, besides others who do not perhaps represent any specific religious communion.

Thoroughly Modern. No work of this kind is more modern or more authoritative than Encyclopedia Biblica. This is not a reprint from wornout plates but a beautiful piece of printing setting forth conceptions of biblical scholarship held in the great theological seminaries at this hour. Every seminary trained preacher of the past decade has used this work and knows its value.

Equal to 24 Ordinary Books. To secure the equivalent of twenty-four ordinary books which would sell at $1.50 each for a total of six dollars has brought the best learning to the door of the humblest man. Ignorance of biblical problems on the part of ministers and Sunday-school teachers has had one cause removed.

An Epoch-Marking Work. As a mere volume printed and published it admittedly marks an epoch in several respects—for example, in the fact that more than a million words were practically all in type at one time. As a piece of editorial workmanship it has few equals in respect of the skill with which the parts have been, not pinned together, but intimately and organically united. As a singularly weighty contribution to the biblical science of the time, its impulse is admitted perhaps most markedly by those who dissent most strongly from the views defended in some of its articles. It will be impossible to understand the movement of thought on biblical subjects during the next quarter of a century without taking account of the "Encyclopedia Biblica."

Primitive Christianity and the Spiritual Life

IN THEIR PURPOSE TO RESTORE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST POSSESS AN IDEAL, WHICH IF TAKEN SPIRITUALLY, IS A THOROUGHLY VALID IDEAL FOR OUR TIMES AND FULL OF SIGNIFICANCE FOR THE RENEWAL OF THE INNER LIFE OF THE MODERN CHURCH.

There is today a decided tendency among Disciples to abandon the restoration ideal. The call to go back to the past to find our models is not attractive to the progressive temper of the present day. The idea of evolution has permeated all our thinking. According to this law we ought to be more competent to project our own program of religion and to state our own faith than any assumed "classic" age could have done for us.

To theoretical unpopularity is added also the sense of practical impossibility. How can you take an institution out of one age and set it down in another age? In order to function in the world of today the primitive Church must adjust its forms to the conditions of today. It cannot remain primitive and be modern at the same time.

Besides, so it is said, we would not want primitive Christianity in the modern world, even if we could get it. The Church is a better Church today in many features of its organization than was the primitive Church. And certainly the ethical deportment of its membership is on a higher level than was the conduct of the membership of the apostolic Church. Standards of morality have greatly improved since then. If the Church at Corinth or Ephesus should be set down in one of our modern communities, it would no doubt scandalize the community. The crass sins against which the apostles continually had to warn the churches are only notorious exceptions now.

All these points made by objectors to the restoration ideal seem to be valid.

The norm of religion is, indeed, ahead of us, not behind us. The living Christ is ever revealing more and more of himself to his Church with the growing centuries.

The primitive Church was not adequately organized to meet the complex needs of our world nor to fully express the growing Christian revelation. Moreover, we find no claim made by the primitive Church or by the Scriptures that the primitive Church was absolute or normative for all time.

And for the Church to feel itself bound down to any such norm in matters of organization or intellectual belief, is to submit itself to the very sort of bondage from which her Lord once for all set the human spirit free.

In the face of all this, then, what becomes of the plea for the restoration of primitive Christianity? Is there anything else left to restore? Is there any good reason why the free spirit of Christ's modern Church should hark back to the beginning days of Christianity? What was there at the first that we do not have now, and in improved form?

This: primitive Christianity was primarily an inner experience. A great, new, revolutionizing Truth had dropped into the soul of each Christian disciple. It opened his eyes upon a changed world. It made all things new. It brought God redeemingly and companionably near. The spiritual order of the world, the invisible order, was the substantial reality; all else was subordinate to that.

The distinguishing quality of primitive Christianity was its innerness. Its outward form was determined by custom and by pragmatic considerations. Its institution was an expression of its inward and resurgent spiritual life.

Later, with the achievement of popular success and political influence, the tide of spiritual life flowed back, while the institution waxed greater, more extensive and more powerful. The earlier gospel, the good news with which Christ had opened up the fountains of life hidden within the souls of his first disciples was obscured by the vast thing the Church had come to be and by the complex body of metaphysical truth of which it conceived itself to be the custodian.

Inner perception of the unseen realities which Christ revealed was supplanted by conformity to the institution.

It tends ever to be thus with a spiritual movement.

The greatest menace to true religion is its own success!

Success calls for organization. Organization crystallizes into an authoritative institution. The interests of the institution absorb attention and devotion and the springs dry up in the inner life.

Then comes a time when men's souls become aware of their own spiritual drought, their need of God. Many will blame the Church. They will say she offers a stone when man asks for bread. They will say she has lost man in the very machinery which she devised to save him. The unspirituality of her work will be widely felt.

Some will say it is a time to start a new religion. Novel cults will thus appear. The claim will be made for them that they possess what the Church lacks.

The present is such a time.

It is the unsatisfactoriness of what the Church offers that is chiefly responsible for the rise and rapid growth of the many popular cults which thrive in modern society. These cults have, many of them at least, this virtue, that they build up an inner world of interest and problem and satisfaction in the soul of the adherent—a mistaken, a grotesque and indeed a perverted inner world it often is, but thereby the void is filled.

Over against those who in cynical and unsocial mood leave the Church to find inner satisfaction in newly manufactured cults stand those who, equally dissatisfied, remain sympathetically within the historic Church and strive in calmness to understand the situation. They see that Christianity is top-heavy with institutionalism. It has fallen a victim to its own success. It has lost its inner contact with its Lord!

What shall the Church do?

The answer is plain: Let the Church make a new beginning with its Lord! Let it reconstruct in terms of its own age and its own thought-life the primitive Christian experience. Let it go back of things as they now are and as they have been in the intervening centuries and open up again the fountains that institutionalism has dried up.

This is not the hour for those who have known Christ to speak apologetically of the restoration ideal. It is rather the hour to affirm with renewed conviction the steadying thesis that the historic and living Christ is perennially adequate to satisfy all the needs of the human soul.

The plea for the restoration of primitive Christianity is thus a plea for immediacy of spiritual insight, for the putting of individual experience ahead of institutional importance, for the freshening and fertilizing of the inner life with a gospel of good news to be inwardly perceived and appropriated, for the construction of such a spiritual order within the soul as Christ carried in his own breast and succeeded in imparting to the first generation of disciples—those who had contact with him in the days of his flesh or with his spirit while it was yet unobscured by the illusions that always go with institutional success.

There are treasures of life in Christ which his followers have not exhausted and never will exhaust. His religion is not an "ancient order of things" fixed and absolute, nor a "deposit of doctrine" given once for all, but in its inherent nature it is an eternally new religion, containing within itself the power of perennial renewal.

The future of Christendom rests with those who have learned with Pastor Charles Wagner that fine art of the spirit: to open and read the New Testament as if it were written only yesterday.

To get immediate contact with the Christ of the gospels and to open one's soul to him that he may plant therein the secret of his own divine life, this is to restore primitive Christianity.

The Light of the World

Does the Failure of European Civilization Mean That Christ Also Has Failed?

BY FREDERICK F. SHANNON.

I AM the light of the world."

Yet many are saying: "The Light of the world is the light that failed." Thinking of the bloody rain now falling in Europe, they exclaim: "The sun has suffered total eclipse; it is not light, but the mailed fist, that triumphs; it is not the Lamb, but the Lion that conquers; it is not Christ, but Cæsar, that is on the throne."

But such expressions are the mere noise of brains in the throes of thought-friction. Chiefest of the lessons we may learn in this school of international agony is this: Civilization is not a synonym for Christianity. Some have confidently assumed their identity, but the brute is now busily gnawing and clawing that assumption to pieces.

No, my friend, Christianity has not failed; it is your efficient, clever, cruel, Christless civilization that has failed, is failing, and must fail, hour by hour. Tomorrow it will utterly fade, and over its heap of charred ruins, bleaching bones, unmarked graves, broken bodies and accusing hands of mothers and little children the Light of the World will arise afresh with healing in His wings.

When our Christless culture, which is a very thin veneer for the blackest barbarism, has been stripped off; when our fragile might and fictitious power have been triumphantly slain by the Spirit of the Lord; when our ambition to reign has been supplanted by our passion to serve; when kings and emperors have had this final bloody breathing spell before laying their crowns and swords and guns at the feet of Christ, then shall we discover newer, deeper, richer meanings in the life and ministry of Him who borrowed the center of the solar system to interpret His nature and character: "I am the light of the world."

CHRIST'S CREATIVE POWER.

One of the primary facts concerning the sun is its creative power. Go where you will, the fertilizing wonder of light confronts you. Look at the sky above you, at the earth beneath you, or search the deeps under the earth, and you are ever in the presence of light's begetting power. The coal miner brings his black diamonds from the bowels of our planet. Yet is he not simply uncovering huge layers of stored-up sunshine? The immense coal fields of China, of America, of the world, are nothing more nor less than condensed sunlight.

Untold ages ago God filled our world-cellar with coal, and every lump taken out of it is a clot of the sun's blood turned black. In spring earth's face is wreathed with a measureless smile of greenery. One spring is a miracle too great to be told; but when you think of all the springs that have been, with their illimitable patches of color, their throb of pregnant power, their whir of wings and their wafture of fragrance, how can you recount the sun's generative capacity?

Why, every little brown seed that has waked to life in the long, long history of the world; every sprig of grass that has climbed out of its tiny grave and become an emerald string for the South wind to finger a resurrection melody on; every tree that has thrown out its branches as so many begging hands to be filled with treasure from the atmosphere; all the animal life that has come and gone, all the animal life that is and is to be—all represent the bloody sweat and aching agony of the sun.

IF THE SUN WERE BLOTTED OUT.

Scholars say that if the sun were suddenly blotted out, there would not be a sign of vegetable and animal life on this globe at the end of seventy-two hours! This floating ocean in the air above us would come down in blinding snow-drifts; rivers, lakes and seas would turn to solid ice; the temperature of the whole atmosphere would drop 260 degrees below the freezing point. Life would be utterly impossible.

The sun, under God's directive mind, helps to build the body in which a Raphael or a Newton lives for a few years; but the undying Newton, the immortal Raphael, neither of these imperial spirits, nor the lowliest human that ever dwelt in a house of clay, pays homage to sun or star. They get their being from behind the veils of force and sense. God breathed His very Self into them and sent them out from the golden homelands of the soul to pioneer among the wilds of sense and time. For a few years they wrought in the fields of the human, then shook themselves free of their enveloping dust, and returned to that God who ever lives and loves, covering Himself with light as with a garment.

"LET THERE BE LIGHT."

Now, as the sun creates all physical life, our Lord creates all spiritual life. "I am the bread of life"—He is the soul's nourishment; "I am the water of life"—He is the soul's perpetual cleanser; "I am the light of life"—He is the soul's illuminator; "I am the light of the world"—He is humanity's germinating power. Thus does Christ's spiritually creative sway suggest the far-off birth of things. "In the beginning—God."

God was old, the Ancient of Days, when the heavens and earth felt the first stir of life in the maiden womb of the universe. Light is God's eldest daughter in the family of physical forces. Old night and chaos were touched to splendor and harmony by the brooding spirit of Deity. "And God said, Let there be light, and there was light;" here we are at the dim beginning of things; God has begun to unfold the universe.

"I am the light of the world;" here we are far advanced in the course of things; God has humanized Himself, limited the Illimitable to the dimensions of the human, and is going about this part of His creation in the form of a man. How could the solar system be without the sun? Is it possible to have a circumference without a senator?

Well, a sunless solar system is the counterpart of a Christless world. Before all things, the Beginning of all things, all things hold together in the Christ of God. The world-creating Word became flesh that He might create a new humanity. "If any man is in Christ, there is a new creation; the old things are passed away; behold, they are become new." For Christ strikes a celestial newness through our terrestrial oldness. The low-flying things give place to the high-up realities. He bridges the gulf of spiritual distance that separates us from God. The forgiver of sin, He is also the giver of the life that is life indeed. Is it too much to say that, apart from Christ, even the God of all hope has no hope for the world?

Evidently God has no other way of saving the world but in and through Christ. He is the fount whence flow the sweetening streams of the higher humanities; He is the Spiritual Sun, out of which come all our immortal radiances. Before Newton, men thought that color was produced by refraction. But, as a memorable series of experiments, Newton showed that refraction simply separates the colors already existing in the white light.

Thus all of our rich human colors lie back, fold upon fold and hue upon hue, in the white light of the Saviour of the World. In Him we touch the unfathomed mysteriousness of our own being; in Him we glimpse the unplumbed deeps in the being of God; and so, in Him, our wandering spiritual tones are gathered up and wrought into unjarring harmonies. He alone unveils the essential worth of the human, giving it unfluctuating value in the mystic markets of eternity.

THE VERSATILITY OF CHRIST.

The creativeness of light is superior only to its marvelous power in putting on various forms and colors. Here is this blood-red rose. Hold it close to your soul-ear, and its crimson lips whisper: "My rich red comes from the fiery red of the sun." But here is another rose. Its petals are hued with a tender goldenness. Hear also its confession of faith: "I, too, believe in the very same sun that gives beauty to my heart-red sister."

Now look up. There goes a tuneful lover on wings. His brook-like madrigal flows refreshingly down out of the air. Yet his song is hardly more sweetly miraculous than is his wondrous back of gray, his delicately formed tail feathers, and his white and blackish wings. But, by way of contrast, a tuft of flashing yellow streaked with jet black is doing bird wonders in a nearby tree. Yet the large white and black trimmed warbler, as well as that small saffron and dark velvet gowned creature, are alike the artistic exhibitions of the sun. Deep in the jungles the tiger burns with a fierce brightness. How did bars of such exquisite softness come to lie down upon that ferocious body? Through the versatility of the very sun that lends to the mane of the lion, the tiger's master, its tawny gold.

Look at these three grapes—one is purple, one is blue-black, one is emerald. Is not each just a variegated globe of sun juice? For light revels in clothing itself in million tinted hues. Light is the secret of all that is fair and beautiful in earth and sea and sky. The thousand featured creation says: "I am what I am because light is what it is."

HOW CHRIST LIGHTS MEN.

But light's versatility in the physical is just a large hint at our Lord's versatility in the spiritual. What true man ever lived that did not own Him Master and King? There is no such thing as human trueness apart from Christ's indwelling the human and expanding it into its possible human largeness and nobility. Life devoid of Christliness is a sun ray sheared off from the sun. What kind of human temperament is there that cannot be mastered into spiritual kingliness by Christ? Verily, He is the Saviour of the men who can't, that they may become of the men who can. The King Man of the Universe imparts royalty to His subjects by virtue of His splendidly creative power and versatility.

SHAKESPEARE AND CHRIST.

Consider this for a little. It is quite generally admitted that Shakespeare is the most opulent and many-sided genius in history. Think of the poet's power to project himself into so many different characters. Now he is a king, now a queen, now a clown, now an Antony, now a Cleopatra, now a Caesar, now a Hamlet, now an Ophelia, now an Iago, now a Romeo, now a Juliet. Is not Shakespeare's overwhelming genius seen in his ability to assume any character? Seemingly he delights in hiding himself behind the overflowing richness of his powers. We know so little of Shakespeare, the man himself is veiled in a kind of perplexing twilight, just because he conceals himself in so many varied human roles. Thinking of his fund of sentiments, maxims and observations; of his influence on science, art, history, politics, physics and philosophy, the critic can only say: "Shakespeare is like a great primeval forest, whence timber shall be cut and used as long as winds blow and leaves are green."

But if Shakespeare, by his affluent genius, recreates in imagination and moves his characters to and fro in the fields of memory, Christ exercises, first hand, creative lordship over all kinds and conditions of souls, and causes them to manifest His dauntless spheres of life.

Here, for example, is John, brother of James, son of Zebedee. Like his father and brother, he is a fisherman; he is one of millions of Jews living in the first century of our era; he is an ambitious, hot tempered, average human being; goodness and badness retire with him every night and get up with him every morning. "But," you say, "we call him St. John; his writings are more familiar, if far less voluminous than Shakespeare's; what, then, is the explanation of this wonderful man?" There is but one answer: St. John is a disciple of Christ, a shining human beam raying out from the Light of the World.

HUMAN NATURE IN THE BIBLE.

A very different man, by the whole diameter of being almost, is that haughty, powerful young pharisee named Saul of Tarsus. His righteousness is as perpendicular as Cleopatra's Needle over in Central Park, and almost as hard. Yet this disciple-slaying Saul not only changes his name, he himself is changed. The substance of his character is transformed; the inmost fiber of his being is recreated; the center of his personality is shifted. What caused it? Who wrought it? If the pillared firmament be not rottenness, nor earth's base built on stubble, Jesus Christ as certainly changed Paul the persecutor into Paul the saint as two and two make four, as the air you breathe strikes health through your cheeks. The universe is no stronger argument for the being of God than are John and Paul for the redemptive versatility of Christ.

Nature grows only one kind of leaf to a tree, though the tree may flaunt hundreds of its kind; but the Tree of Life is green and golden with every variety of age, temperament, strength, weakness, faith, hope, love. All hang there, mellow and beautiful, as they take on an ever-deepening ripeness. William Blake's childhood imagination was so vivid that, playing among the trees of the field, he thought he saw angels in every one.

And do not eyes washed in the silvery waters of Christian faith see something quite as wonderful? Walking in the fields of history, we behold the over-arching, outspreading branches of the Tree of Life. Distinctly visible among those branches are Augustine, Francis, Ignatius, Bernard, Luther, Calvin, Wesley, Edwards, Robertson, Beecher, Brooks, Martineau, Fairbairn, Gladstone and a great multitude no man can number out of all tribes and kingdoms and peoples. There they cluster, in immortal greenness, growing larger, more Christlike, more awestruck, more thrillingly alive, as our poor, distraught human regiments march bleedingly on to the coronation of the Christ in the completion of the worlds.

CHRIST'S INEXHAUSTIBLENESS.

When our Saviour said, "I am the light of the world," He intimated the inexhaustibleness of His nature and resources. Considering the amazing abundance of light, thinkers ask: Where does the sun gets its vast supplies of fuel? What stokes the fires of the sun? The answer now accepted is that given by Helmholtz. He says that the sun's bulk is gradually contracting, the energy thus caused being turned into heat. It is estimated that an annual contraction of 150 feet of the sun's radius would produce its enormous volume of heat and light. But such contraction would not be noticeable by the greatest telescopes for 10,000 years; and then this contraction would have to continue for 10,000,000 years before the sun would be too dead to sustain life throughout its solar empire. Prof. Simon Newcomb estimated that the heat thrown off by the sun every hour is equal to the burning of a quantity of coal that would cover the sun's entire surface to a depth of twenty feet.

Now this boundlessness of sun-energy is a noble symbol, surely, of Christ's inexhaustibleness. The physical sun may ultimately fail; indeed, it is doomed to extinction; but the Light of the World simply cannot fail; neither cosmic winds nor infernal cyclones can quench His light, because His is the vitality of Godhead, the genius of Eternity. Can the unbeginning God have an ending? Having power to lay down His life, He had power to take it again. Forever abroad in the worlds and the centuries, He goes conqueringly on from epoch to epoch. The planets may get untuned, but He remains King of Death and Hades, Alpha and Omega, undestroyed because indestructible, undying because deathless.

ATTAINMENT IN THE OTHER WORLD.

Some very practical thoughts arise out of this great truth of Christ's unfailingness. One is this: The height of life to which earth pilgrims of ancient and modern years have attained in the land that has no need of sun or moon. "At what price" Socrates asked of his judges, who had condemned him to death, "would you not estimate a conference with Orpheus and Musaeus, Hesiod and Homer? I indeed should be willing to die again if this should be true." Well, it must be true, even though to our thing-cursed era, groaning under its weight of iron and stone and stubble, such a thought may be deemed impractical and quite out of place. Yet it is hard to believe that any normal soul can repress a thrill of joy as he thinks of the spiritual stature of the noble dead who have for ages been growing more and more alive. How intensely alive they must be today!

Think of that trinity of the old dispensation—Moses, Elijah and Elisha. Two of them were glad to vacate heaven long enough to meet with Christ on the Mount of Transfiguration. Unto what majestic proportions of manhood all must have attained under the tutelage of the Master in Glory! Dante said that the dying Stephen "made his eyes gates to behold the skies."

If under that deadly rain of stones Stephen's face took on an angelic brightness, how could average mortals dare to look at that face, now that it has been gazing so long into the fountains of

"I know of a land that is sunk in shame,
Of hearts that faint and tire;
And I know of a Name, a Name, a Name,
Can set that land on fire.
Its sound is a brand, its letters flame,
But I know of a Name, a Name, a Name,
Will set this land on fire."

Christianity's Value to India

With Evidence From the Reports of the Census Department of the United Provinces.

BY GEORGE W. BROWN.

THERE are many people who feel that the testimony of missionaries in regard to the value of missions is so prejudiced that it is not to be relied on. There are visitors who come to mission fields, and never go into a mission, church or institution, and when they go home aver that the missionaries are wasting their time. Instead of really going into the question when they are on the mission field, such persons take as gospel truth the statements of the naturally untruthful natives whom they meet, who can speak English and are bitterly hostile to Christianity. Some of their information is derived from almost equally un-Christian merchants from western India.

A Girls' Orphanage, in India.

EVIDENCE FROM THE CENSUS DEPARTMENT.

There is one agency in India, however, which is more reliable. This is the government, and in particular the Census Department. Officials of the government have no hesitancy whatever in criticising missions and their work adversely. On the other hand, many of them are ready to give an impartial verdict in regard to what they know. Here is an illustration, taken from a most reliable source.

In speaking about Christianity in a recent census report for the United Provinces, Mr. E. A. Blunt, India Census Superintendent, makes the following remarks:

"The position of Christianity in India is very similar to the position it occupied in the early centuries of its era in a pagan Europe, at all events as regards its relation to Hinduism, from which it chiefly gains its converts. It is that of a definite, clear-cut religion in opposition to an enormous and unwieldly congeries of divergent beliefs both high and low. Its strength lies in its deftness; the weakness of its opponent in its lack of cohesion. With the example of what it achieved in the past before us, its success in India need not therefore cause surprise. . .

"The Hindu followers of these converts have now to acknowledge not only that they are in many material ways better off than themselves, but that they are also better men. . . Given the right type of Christian, the Hindu will regard him not only with toleration, but with respect and even affection. . . I feel no doubt whatever that the Christian of 1914 is in a much less unhappy condition than he was even ten years ago; and the reason in a large measure I put down to the fact that he himself is a better man. . .

INDIRECT INFLUENCE OF MISSIONS.

"Missions again have a great indirect influence. Through their schools and colleges they influence the lives of their non-Christian pupils to an enormous extent. In one word it is pointed out how many reforms of the present day of a social nature are in a measure traceable to Christian influence; how Christian books, the New Testament, and the Imitation of Christ, are studied by educated Indians, who approve their teachings. . . Christianity, then, whether it affects the well-born youths of our large colleges or the Doms of Gorakhpur, is beginning to have its full effect, partly because of the mere lapse of time, but partly, too, because India is asking for something new. . . And in this state of affairs, it is not surprising that some are led to Christianity, others to Aryanism. Hinduism's hold on the masses has not yet weakened appreciably, but it is beginning not to satisfy the thoughtful: nor will any religion satisfy them that has no articles of faith to offer."

These words surely are matters of encouragement to all friends of Christianity and missionary effort. Christianity wins victories in all classes, but today in India, and in days of old in Palestine, it is the common people who hear Him gladly. The greatest victory is in the uplifting of the poor and the despised low caste man to a plane level with that occupied by those who consider themselves the highest born in the land. And in some parts of India the numbers who are pressing into the kingdom are phenomenal. These instances of mass movements are wonderful and come in places where human calculation has not been able to foretell them. No one knows when and where a new movement of this kind is about to occur. We can only pray and work. And when a movement does take place, in a few years an impartial government official can give a testimony similar to the above.

Is This a "People's War"?

The present European war is often spoken of as a "people's war." It is denied that it is a conflict forced over the heads of the people by the military castes of the fighting nations. Some doubt is cast upon this point of view when one reads such stories as the following, of the friendliness and camaraderie of the English and German soldiers during the truce which in some quarters was declared for Christmas day.

SOME interesting and extremely human stories have come of the unofficial, but nevertheless effective truce on Christmas day between German and English soldiers who confronted each other in trenches only a few yards apart. They all indicate a spirit of friendliness between the soldiers of the opposing lines. These stories lend good cheer in this time of red war.

An officer in the English army writes December 27:

Christmas eve things were very much as usual; it was a glorious afternoon and several aeroplanes were up which were duly shot at by the Germans. I went to pass the time of day with an infantry regiment down the road. The battery was firing, but it was on a particular place which I could not observe.

"OFF DUTY."

About 6 o'clock things went positively dead; there was not a sound. Even our own pet sniper went off duty. As a rule he is relieved at 7:15 and sends what the telephonists call "a good-night kiss" at 9:15.

We sat round a fire all evening, and about 11 o'clock a very excited infantry officer came along and told us that all fighting was off, and the men were fraternizing in between the trenches. We had seen light flashing on the parapets earlier in the evening and there had been a good deal of noise going on. Shouts from the Germans: "You English, why don't you come out?" and our bright knaves had replied with yells of "Waiter," but that had all been a good deal earlier.

I walked down to the trenches with the man; we did not worry about sneaking down a communication trench, we just walked across a couple of fields, jumped over the parapet of our fire trench, and went out beyond our own barbed wire. By that time all the men were back in their trenches and there was nothing much doing. They had lights on the parapets, and there was still a certain amount of noise, but no shooting.

It had been agreed between the soldiers on both sides that there should be no firing until midnight Christmas day.

ON CHRISTMAS MORNING.

We went back to bed about 12:30 a. m., and stood to arms as usual Christmas morning. I had a look around, and as nothing seemed to be doing, went along to see some other people; they confirmed the news of the truce.

It was arranged privately, and started by one of our fellows going across. I think he was rather brave to be the first to do it.

I arranged to go to their trenches after breakfast, as they have a place where they are only about seventy or eighty yards apart. Then the colonel and —— came out to see the fun. They arrived about 11 o'clock, and I was on my way back.

You can hardly imagine it; the only sentries were two unarmed ones to keep our men from staying out beyond the barbed wire. All our fellows were digging in the open and theirs were doing the same. The only thing forbidden was to make any improvement to the barbed wire.

Further, they agreed that if by any mischance a single shot were fired, it was not to be taken as an act of war, and an apology would be accepted; also that firing would not be opened without due warning on both sides.

AMERICAN AS INTERPRETER.

Finally we all walked out and one of their officers came to meet us. We all saluted, shook hands and exchanged cigarettes. Unfortunately they understood no French or English and we could not muster a word of German between us. You will rather gather that conversation languished.

Finally they got a man out of the trenches who had lived for some years in America, and he acted as interpreter. The officers were little more than boys, and one of them had been wounded. They were intensely polite and there was any amount of clicking of heels.

The soldiers all seemed rather young, but they did not seem despondent or underfed. One man informed us that they had been told that Russia had been defeated, and that the war would be over in three weeks.

Tommy Atkins, the English Soldier, Does Not Seem to Have a Grudge at Anyone.

Another begged an officer on our side to send his photograph to his sister, who lives in Liverpool. I know that is true, because the officer showed me the photo.

Seems a strange idea to take a stock of one's photos on active service, but there you are. One thing we did notice was that some of them were shy of uniforms, but that may have been merely owing to the fact that they were in the trenches trying to save their uniforms.

FEAST OF BIRD AND BOTTLE.

The Germans were all for the truce lasting forty-eight hours, but we stuck out for midnight, Christmas.

Then we had lunch—pheasant and partridge, plum pudding and pate de foie gras, washed down by rum and hot water, eaten in a house which really as a house is wasting its time. The upper floor has simply gone, and certainly half one wall of the room they live in.

After lunch I went back to the observation post. The road along there is honestly, as a rule, rather infested with bullets; it seemed so strange to walk along it and never hear the whistling of one. —— brought the sergeant major out in the afternoon and we walked along the front of our trenches for nearly two miles.

The sergeant major has not got over it yet; his remarks were, "It is 'ardly credible," and "I never would 'ave believed it."

A major in the Leicestershire Regiment writes Christmas day:

"Even out here there is a time of peace and good will. I've just spent an hour talking to the German officers and men, who have drawn a line half way between our left trenches and theirs and have all met our men and officers there.

"We have exchanged cigars, cigarets and papers. They are jolly, cheery fellows for the most part, and it seems so silly under the circumstances to be fighting them.

"Last night a select band of officers and men sang carols to them and they did ditto."

ENTER GERMAN TRENCHES.

A major in the Royal Artillery writes Christmas day:

"This has been a strange Christmas! Some of our people actually went into their trenches and stayed there for some time, being entertained by the enemy! All joined together in a sing-song, each side taking it in turn to sing a song, and finally they ended up with 'God Save the King,' in which the Saxons sang most heartily! This is absolutely true. One of our men was given a bottle of wine in which to drink the king's health.

"The — Regiment actually had a football match with the Saxons, who beat them 3-2! These people said they would not shoot our men, but warned them against those on their (Saxons') left.

GERMANS SING "TIPPERARY."

A member of the London Rifle Brigade writes:

"It was agreed in our part of the firing line that there should be no firing and no thought of war on Christmas eve and day, so the Germans sang and played to us several of their own tunes and some of ours, such as 'Home, Sweet Home,' 'Tipperary,' etc., while we did the same for them.

"The singing and playing continued all night, and the next day (Christmas) our fellows paid a visit to the German trenches, and they did likewise. Cigarets, cigars, addresses, etc., were exchanged, and every one, friend and foe, were real good pals.

"One of the German officers took a photo of English and German soldiers arm in arm with exchanged caps and helmets.

"Christmas eve the Germans burned colored lights and candles along the top of their trenches, and Christmas day a football match was played between them and us in front of the trench.

"They even allowed us to bury all our dead lying in front, and some of them, with hats in hand, brought in one of our dead officers from behind their trench, so that we could bury him decently. They were really magnificent in the whole thing and jolly sorts.

"Both sides have started the firing and are already enemies again. Strange it all seems, doesn't it?"

The Two Voices

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

"To what fit end this ceaseless round of toil,
The racking care and turmoil of the day,
Hopes that elude, fond dreams that pass away,
Rewards that with possession spoil?
Each morn some splendid vision gilds the skies;
Each eve some hope, defeated, prostrate lies."

"Dost thou essay to tell the ways of God,
To justify the means His love employs?
Art thou informed how worlds are held in poise?
The blade of grass—how springs it from the sod?
If thou art blind to see how these things be,
Wouldst thou presume to know His way with thee?"

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

THE VALUE OF MATURITY.

IT WAS a complaint of Oliver Wendell Holmes that he had the misfortune to be born in a time when old age was prized, and to grow old in a period when youth was honored. That humorous remark can never be taken very seriously, for there has never been a time when the value of maturity in years and experience was not recognized. Particularly was this true in antiquity. The heroes of the classic age were old men. Both in council and in war they held the first place. Rarely was a young man given an opportunity.

Recent generations, however, have seen this position changed. Young men have been called to places of great responsibility They have become captains of industry, heads of great business corporations, leaders in education and prophets of a new order in the church. No longer can youth complain that it is disprized. The danger is that with the wide margin of opportunity accorded it, there is the constant temptation to stint the preparation needed for life work.

We are so much given to the thought of youth's opportunity and we so much expect to find youth in the forefront of leadership, that it is a surprise to witness the spectacle of the warring nations of Europe in the hands of comparatively old men. Lord Kitchener is sixty-four, Sir John French is sixty-two; General Joffre, the head of the French army, is the same age; Von Moltke, the chief of the German staff, is sixty-six; Von Tirpitz is sixty-three; Count Zeppelin is sixty-six; the Prime Minister of Servia is sixty-five; the Grand Duke Nicholas, the uncle of the czar and the leader of the vast Russian host, is a white-haired veteran, and the monarchs of England, Germany and Russia are well into mature middle life, while King Peter of Servia is nearly seventy and the Emperor of Austria is an octogenarian. Certainly mature age is coming back to its own.

THE QUESTION OF PREPARATION.

NOT long ago we were permitted to see some correspondence between a young man just entering the ministry and a friend in whose judgment he had confidence.

The young man, evidently deeply interested in Christian work and desirous of devoting himself effectively to the service of Christ, had entered a school to pursue studies in biblical and theological fields. He had only limited means, and in order to meet his expenses he secured a preaching position in a small community within reaching distance of the school.

He visited the church over the week ends, and presently located his family there for reasons of economy. He took up his church work with enthusiasm and soon wakened the dormant congregation into new life.

In the meantime his studies seemed less important to him than his church work. He did not always return promptly to the seminary and his class work suffered. But he was so fully convinced that he was following the divine leading, and he was so eager to increase the fruits of his labor with his church that he was not disturbed by the situation. The members of the church which he served were happy in his ministry, and he was beginning to reach the people of the community outside.

At that point he came to the decision that he ought to devote all of his efforts to the church and let his studies go. His joy in the work and the grateful words of his people he took as the voice of God calling him to lose no time in further study, save what he could pursue by himself, but to give his service henceforth directly to the ministry.

This resolution he communicated to his friend and asked for his approval. The reply could not have been other than a disappointment. It emphasized the dangerous risk taken in pursuing the course he was choosing. It urged his reconsideration of what appeared to his friend to be a fatal miscalculation. No doubt was expressed but that he was performing an admirable service to his church, but it was insisted that he was forgetting to measure the life-long consequences of his conduct.

He wished to place at the feet of Christ his life and service. But what kind of a gift was he prepared to make with his present inexperience and lack of equipment, as compared with his value after a thorough course of discipline as preparation? Jesus took thirty years to prepare for something more than three years of public work. Was it not worth while to follow somewhat more fully his plan, rather than completely to reverse the process? And in his case he was apparently unwilling to pay the price of even that short period of educational preparation.

We do not know what this particular young minister may decide to do as the result of this and further correspondence. But we believe that there are many in his position who today stand at the parting of the ways, and must decide the question of a limited or a competent preparation for a life of Christian work. Their testing time is not now, but it will come after fifteen or twenty years. Almost any young man can attain a reasonable success for the first ten years in the ministry. Youth and optimism will carry far. But time will tell the story as to adequate or inadequate foundations. And many a man finds too late that he has missed the chance of most competent service, and has made compromise with his duty to the Lord.

A HANDSOME CALENDAR.

THE Christian Evangelist has issued an attractive calendar for the year 1915. Each monthly page is headed by some well known picture and under each date there is a text of Scripture. The pictures are for the most part well chosen illustrations of biblical scenes, from well known artists. But we are puzzled to find at the top of the January page a reproduction of Sir Frederick Leighton's "Andromache in Captivity," with the revised title "The Captivity of Israel." Somebody must have nodded.

AMERICA AND THE ORIENT.

THERE is a growing feeling throughout America that our attitude toward the nations of the far East, particularly China and Japan, has never been quite generous or fraternal. It is perhaps natural for the Anglo-Saxon to feel himself a little superior to all other races, and especially to races of darker hue. This assumption is by no means assured as a historical fact, because history itself is very young as yet, and the oriental races have never up to this time revealed their large capacities for culture and efficiency. Five hundred years from now the world's opinion may have changed vastly in reference to Anglo-Saxon supremacy.

In the meantime and quite without reference to this subordinate question, the principles of Christianity dictate the propriety of an attitude of generous appreciation and good willl toward our brethren of the Orient. If we have national pride, not less have they; and it is not strange that some of them should feel deeply the attitude of suspicion and reserve which we have maintained toward them, particularly in the matter of immigration.

Our own people are divided in their opinion as to what should be the treatment of the oriental. Some, especially, those on the Pacific Coast, are fearful of an oriental invasion which will depress economic conditions. Others are sensitive to the injustice of our present laws relating to the admission of Asiatic peoples.

In this situation the suggestion of the Federal Council of Churches that the Commission on Relations with Japan urge upon Congress and the people of the United States the importance of adopting an oriental policy based upon a just and equitable regard for the interests of all the nations concerned, seems very wise.

Furthermore, the recommendation is made that the entire immigration problem be taken up at an early date, providing for comprehensive legislation covering all phases of the question, such as the limitation of immigration, and the registration, distribution, employment, education and naturalization of immigrants, in such a way as to conserve American institutions, to protect American labor from dangerous economic competition, and to promote an intelligent and enduring friendliness among the people of all nations.

A GREAT GIFT.

EVERY one interested in the progress of education has been made to rejoice over the princely gift of nearly three million dollars to Oberlin College. In the seventy-five years of its history this is the largest contribution ever received by that school.

The giver was the late Charles M. Hall, formerly a student in the college, and a life-long friend. On a former occasion he had given Oberlin $200,000. He was not widely known outside of Oberlin groups, but was a quiet and successful business man who felt a deep interest in his alma mater and was concerned to leave to her a suitable token of his gratitude.

Years ago when a student, the son of a returned missionary, he heard in the class room the remark of his professor of chemistry that a fortune awaited the man who could discover an inexpensive process of manufacturing aluminum. Apparently he was the only student who paid any attention to the remark. But from that time on he devoted himself to experiments in the laboratory and later in his own home. To him more than to any other one person is due the great industry of the manufacture of aluminum materials which has greatly increased the wealth and happiness of the world.

Mr. Hall's gift to his college is another instance of generous remembrance of education by a man who feels his obligations to the kingdom of God. The list of such gifts during the past year is the proof that men of means are increasingly sensitive to their responsibility as stewards of wealth. No man of fortune, even though that fortune be very modest, can afford to miss the opportunity of perpetuating his influence in the form of generous gifts to education and religion. There are many other institutions as worthy as Oberlin, and with as resourceful alumni.

HENRIETTA T. CARPENTER.

DRAKE University and all who in its history of nearly thirty-five years have had any share in that institution's life, are singularly touched by the passing of Mrs. Henrietta T. Carpenter, widow of the late George T. Carpenter, one of the founders of the university and its first chancellor. Her death took place at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Jennie Carpenter Widman, in Glendora, Cal., and her funeral services were conducted from University Church in Des Moines, Ia.

In the founding of Drake University in 1881 Mrs. Carpenter occupied a unique position, being the wife of the man whose mind conceived the idea and the sister of Gen. F. M. Drake, afterward Governor of Iowa, who furnished the money for its first foundation. In his talk at the funeral Dr. Medbury vividly stated the singularly potent though unofficial part played by Mrs. Carpenter in the heroic days of Drake's beginning:

> As a wife of the man of vision and sister of the man with means to actualize the vision, her word of faith and sanity of judgment without a doubt determined much that was done. Hers to assure her husband that her brother's means could be obtained for sacred service. Hers to claim her brother's faith in the vision of her husband. Hers to speak for heaven as none other could in all the earth to the two men whom God was calling! Behold the handmaiden of the Lord!

At her funeral, testimony was borne to the enriching influences that flowed from her beautiful personality into the lives of a student body that now numbers tens of thousands. To the testimony of Gov. George W. Clarke and many others the editor of The Christian Century adds his own, a similar tribute.

The first year of our college life was spent in Mrs. Carpenter's home. Memories of her mothering concern and kindness have always been among our most precious inner assets. Pulled by the allurements of a certain youthful pastoral and evangelistic success to leave college at the end of one year, it was her wise counsel and wiser tact that turned the decision in favor of more adequate preparation before the life work was undertaken.

She is remembered by us and by a multitude of others for her radiant, human and inspiring personality—one of those personalities that helps us to keep on believing in immortality.

A COLLOQUY AND A QUOTATION.

A CALLER was sitting in the editorial office of The Christian Century reading last week's issue. The editor was opening his mail which had just been delivered. Presently the caller looked up and said:

"I think you are somewhat extreme in this paragraph, aren't you?"

"In what paragraph?"

"This one in which you speak of some among us who limit the very Church of Christ to those who have conformed to the terms of membership which we Disciples have always insisted upon. No one among us ever held such a view."

"Please read the particular paragraph out loud."

The caller read from The Christian Century as follows:

> At first the basis of unity was conceived as being determined by the living fact of unity, so as to include all whom Christ had included. Later the living fact of unity was denied by the dogmatic insistence upon a particular basis of unity. Only those could share in the fellowship who in addition to their being received by Christ submitted also to the terms of this particular basis of unity. So far was this conviction of the absoluteness of the basis of unity carried that many came to limit the very Church of Christ itself to those who conformed to these particular terms of fellowship.

While he was reading, the editor's fingers were perfunctorily opening a copy of one of our other papers that had just been laid on the desk by the postman, and his eye happened to fall upon an article by Rev. J. V. Coombs.

When the caller had finished, the editor began reading aloud. This in part is what he read:

> Some weeks ago I wrote an article, in which I tried to show that those people who are practicing the open-membership plan are deceiving the brotherhood.
> Since then The Christian Century gave us an "Open Questionaire." The editor asked: "Did the Berkeley Church do wrong in receiving the unimmersed? Did the California Convention do right in rejecting the Loken delegates? and what shall we do now?"
> To my amazement, about forty big preachers said Berkeley did right, and of course all of them declared that the California Convention did wrong.
> The main argument made by these departing brethren (this phrase probably refers to the Berkeley church) to sustain their action is this: "These other churches are churches of Christ, and the people in them are Christians." Take this argument away, and their entire defense is gone. I deny that these other so-called churches are churches of Christ. Because an assembly of individuals claims to be a church does not make them a church of Christ.
> Here is a Methodist church. The members claim that they are members of the M. E. Church. Within that congregation may be many Christians, and these obedient believers who have been adopted into the family of God constitute the church of Christ. There may be five hundred Methodists in that congregation who have never been adopted, hence are not children of God. They are not a church of Christ. If the three hundred children of God by adoption withdraw from this congregation of eight hundred, the church of Christ has gone out and left a Methodist church behind, but this assembly is not a church of Christ. Hence these eight hundred Methodists, as such, though Christian in general intent, do not constitute a church of Christ.

"I never imagined that kind of thing could be said by a Disciple of Christ," remarked the caller. "It is an awful perversion of a glorious plea," he added after a thoughtful pause.

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

University Preachers in Chicago.

Notable men are engaged to preach at the University of Chicago during February. The names include those of President Ozora S. Davis of Chicago Theological Seminary; Professor Hugh Black, of Union Theological Seminary, New York; Rev. George W. Truett, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Dallas, Texas.

Peace Sunday in the Sunday-schools.

The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America has sent out to ministers and churches a Sunday-school programme for Peace Sunday to be observed by the churches of the country on February 14. It was arranged by Prof. Norman E. Richardson, of Boston University, and consists of aymns, Scripture readings, prayers, responsive readings and essays by pupils.

"Find-Your-Church Sunday."

"Go-to-Church Sunday" is to be displaced by "Find-Your-Church Sunday" or by "Come-to-Church Sunday" in the next concerted effort to be made by the Chicago Church federation, if the committee appointed to consider the subject is endorsed.

Comparative Religions at the University.

The Haskell Lectures at the University of Chicago will be given on January 29 and February 2, 3, and 5 by Masaharu Anesaki, professor of the philosophy of religion in the Imperial University of Tokyo, who, during the last year, has been exchange professor in Harvard University. Professor Anesaki, who is himself a liberal Buddhist, will deliver four lectures on the general subject of "Buddhism and Its Influence on Japanese Thought and Life." The subjects of the individual lectures are as follows: I. "Buddhism: Its Fundamental Tenets." II. "Buddhism: Its Development." III. "Buddhist Influence upon the Japanese." IV. "Buddhism in Modern Japan, Especially in Relation to Christianity." Professor Anesaki will also deliver an illustrated lecture on Japanese art on the afternoon of February 1 in Leon Mandel Assembly Hall.

Baptist Deficit Eliminated.

Several of the leading denominations have been carrying serious deficits in their missionary treasuries. A year ago the Baptist home and foreign mission boards and their publication society found themselves confronted with debts which aggregated $279,000. A committee was chosen to wipe out the debt with Rev. Charles L. White as chairman. With the aid of $100,000, of Rockfeller's money, the entire indebtedness was wiped out in 1914.

Advertising Missions to Tourists.

The Interdenominational Committee representing the foreign mission boards of the various denominations of North America have issued a very attractive booklet which is to be a Baedeker for the tourists who visit South America. The booklet shows where the mission work is being done and is written up in interesting style and has over forty very attractive illustrations. A year ago a similar booklet was issued for Asia. The purpose of this enterprise is to remove the excuse of tourists who travel abroad and return saying they saw no mission work and that missions is an inconsiderable force in foreign lands. The booklet further directs the tourist where to find religious worship in the English language throughout South America, so that the tourist himself may not lack religious inspiration while he is away from home. There are chapters on "Criticizing Missions," "Financing Missions," and "Latin America," among others. The booklet is for free distribution to travelers in Latin America, and may be had of the various denominational boards.

school Association, is dead at Tate Springs, Tenn., according to a report from there. Dr. Hamill was one of the outstanding figures at the International Sunday-school convention in this city last summer, being elected at that time to the presidency of the association. For several decades Dr. Hamill has been a leader in Sunday-school promotion, being an active exponent of the teacher-training idea. He was sixty-five years of age at the time of his death.

Message from German Churchmen.

The Protestant Christians of Germany have sent another long letter to Christians abroad signed by the same men as the previous communication was. Among the names attached are those of Rudolf Eucken, the philosopher, and Adolf Harnack, the historian and theologian. These Christians represent Germany as being in danger from Russia and subject to a system of espionage from England. They declare their militarism to be no worse than England's "navyism." They charge England with having brought savage hordes to fight against Christians, dissolving the historic solidarity of the culture nations of the west. They charge that Belgium herself broke the neutrality on which her political existence was dependent and forfeited all rights accruing to her therefrom. These churchmen assert that Bernhardi's book is little known in Germany, and that similar books have been written by English writers. Speaking of the government, they say: "No one has taught us more emphatically that even the government exists under divine authority and must justify its power by the pursuance of moral purposes, than has Heinrich von Treitschke; no one has condemned more than he the wanton breach of treaty or unscrupulous carrying on of war. The present war would never have arisen had England's politics been carried on in the spirit of Treitschke. In spite of the reply received from the forty-two gentlemen, we do not abandon the confident hope that a day will come when the English Christians will make earnest efforts that their government no longer follow the path which has led to this war." The hope for peace is expressed in the following words: "In the hardships of this war, we recognize the just judgment of the holy God upon the Christian people and we will not close our hearts to His sacred voice. Let it be our earnest prayer that the day may be granted in which a purified and renewed Christianity may again live in honorable peace, the wounds of the war healed, and that we may be allowed by humble service to overcome the scandals and wrongs now being practised against that duty placed by God upon us all, toward non-Christian humanity. He can and will, if we allow this chastisement to bring us to repentance, employ the same to further the coming of His kingdom."

Dr. Cadman at Sunday Evening Club.

Dr. S. Parkes Cadman was the speaker on January 24 at the Sunday Evening Club of Chicago, which meets in Orchestra Hall. He spoke on the subject, "The Bequest of Christ." "The great bequest of Christ to men," said Dr. Cadman, "is peace. 'My peace I give unto you,' he said. This is not the peace of sloth nor inertia, but that peace which finds lodgment in the soul center of a man though storms rage without. It is that peace within which the flame of an external hell cannot consume. Let there be no mistake. This peace does not manifest itself in inaction, nor in self-complacency. There is no greater bane to the church than the member who occupies his pew with the same serenity he would find in his lot in the cemetery. That sort of a man mistakes a state of coma for a state of peace. Let him consider the early disciples of Christ. Only one of them died in his bed. The others were cast to the beast and to the flame yet they died praising God."

Episcopal Church Where Pilgrims Landed.

A beautiful new edifice was recently dedicated for Christ church at Plymouth, Mass. The Lord Bishop of Winchester, England, was present and made an address. The structure is Gothic with an open timber roof. There was a crowded church for the midnight eucharist on Christmas Eve.

Baptists a Numerous Body.

The popular impression of the numerical strength of the various religious bodies is often very erroneous. Among the denominations of America that have made most significant growth in the past hundred years are the Baptists. This body of Christians are also strongly represented in many other sections of the world. There are 6,846,286 Baptists in the world parish of that great denomination, according to the latest figures. They worship in 62,053 churches, and under the leadership of 41,698 ordained ministers. North America contains 5,989,863 of the throng, and 53,941 churches. Europe has 5,200 churches and 616,763 members; Asia has 2,291 churches with 180,541 members; Africa has 103 churches with 17,121 members; South America has 189 churches with 12,307 members; Australasia has 329 churches with 29,691 members.

A Preacher's Preacher.

The efforts of Dr. Charles E. Jefferson of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York City, in behalf of peace, are no less notable than the fine work he is constantly doing in behalf of his fellow ministers. His works should be in every minister's library. Every volume he has published seems to be the best. At any rate, it is difficult to say which is the best. His volume of sermons entitled "Doctrine and Deed" will rejoice the heart of the lover of good practical expositions. These are sermons that reveal the power of the preacher. They seem to inspire. But any of his volumes will more than repay the purchaser.

Universalist Ministers Meet.

The ministers of the Middle West of the Universalist denomination met in the St. Paul's Church of Chicago, January 5 and 6. No names of speakers were published in advance, but only themes, and visiting ministers were expected to come prepared to discuss these. Among the subjects considered were Evangelism, Aim of the Ministry, Work with Young People, Useful Aspects of New Thought, Keeping One's Self Enthusiastic. The time limit on the speakers was fixed after the ministers came together.

Unitarian Ministers Object to Revivalist.

The ministerial association of Worcester, Mass., sent a communication to each of the denominational groups of the city inquiring the attitudes of the ministers toward the project of having Rev. "Billy" Sunday come to town. Among the replies received was one from the Unitarian ministers: "The Worcester Association, made up of the Unitarian ministers of this city and county of Worcester, in answer to the request of the Ministerial Association of Worcester as to the advisability of inviting Rev. William A. Sunday to conduct a religious campaign in the city, would express its emphatic and unanimous disapprobation of such a plan. Mr. Sunday's ideas of religion are so crude, irrational and revolting to the thoughtful, and his treatment of sacred things is so irreverent and profane, his methods so lacking in dignity and sobriety, his speech so vulgar and intemperate, that in our deliberate opinion his coming to Worcester would be an insult to our common intelligence, and a calamity to the cause of a spiritual religion."

Cumberland Presbyterian Statistics.

There has been considerable interest in the question of Cumberland Presbyterian statistics. It was claimed by some that more than a hundred thousand people were not willing to go into the merger of that denomination with the northern Presbyterians. According to recently published statistics there were 58,943 of the unaffiliated Cumberland Presbyterians in 1912 and 52,823 in 1914. Of the latter number, nearly twenty thousand are in the state of Tennessee. This would indicate that the unwillingness to unite is chiefly in the state in which the movement was born.

British Soldiers Read the Bible.

There is a remarkable revival of Bible reading among the British soldiers where they are quartered in their winter camps in England. Ten thousand men on Salisbury plain have joined the Pocket Testament League and have agreed to carry a testament with them and to read a chapter each day. This movement began through the labors of Charles M. Alexander in connection with the Y. M. C. A. Specially bound testaments with a waterproof cover, wighing only two and a quarter ounces, were presented to each soldier who wished to join.

W. E. Biederwolf In Successful Revival.

Rev. W. E. Biederwolf is in the midst of a series of evangelistic services at Alton, Ill. Over four hundred came forward on the first gospel invitation.

Colonel Roosevelt Speaks for Churches.

The New York Federation of churches is very active this winter in relieving unemployed of the city and caring for those in want and destitution. They recently arranged to have Colonel Roosevelt deliver a lecture on South America in the Metropolitan opera house. The audience attending this lecture quite filled the theater.

Preachers at the University of Chicago.

The university preachers for the month of January at the University of Chicago are eminent men. Bishop James J. McConnell, of Denver, Colo., who was former president of DePauw University, was the preacher on Jan. 10 and 17. Dr. S. Parks Cadman, of Brooklyn, spoke on Jan. 24, and on Jan. 31, Dr. Nehemiah Boynton, of Brooklyn, will be the speaker.

Dan Batey's Mission Makes Report.

One of the characters among Chicago mission workers is Dan Batey, who conducts a mission at 710 Wells street on the north side. Mr. Batey was once a construction engineer but had fallen to the rank of the "down and outs." He was converted in the Bible Rescue Mission on West Madison street and soon after opened a mission on the north side. In ten months his mission has had a total attendance of 59,702; there have been 927 "hopeful conversions"; persons fed free were 55,320; free lodgings furnished were 49,585; men who received clothing from the mission were 7,296. His report presents the testimonies of a number of men who were among the outcasts and have been reclaimed for useful living and for religion.

Dr. Eliot Attributes War to Churches.

Dr. Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard University, spoke at Philadelphia recently and said the ineffectiveness of religion in stopping the present war was due to the churches and not to essential Christianity. Dr. Eliot charges this condition to the authoritative feature of religion as exploited and insisted upon by the churches. Their own government is autocratic, they compel certain fixed beliefs and certain determined interpretations of the scriptures. These include the continued worship of the warlike Jehovah, the God of battles, Lord of hosts, successful invader and glorious conquerer showing no mercy to His enemies. From the story of the fall of man to the supreme human sacrifice, the teachings of church doctrine have made the church the supporter of autocracy, kings, military discipline and militancy. The hymns are militant. They tell of war, of combat, and the Christian life is pictured as a conflict from the oldest to that most popular of evanglistic war songs "Onward Christian Soldiers," with its musical setting which has all the swing and ardor of a real battle song.

Religious Education Forces Meet.

The twelfth annual convention of the Religious Education Association will be held at Buffalo, N. Y., March 3-7, 1915. The general theme of the convention will be "The Rights of the Child." Among the well-known speakers at this coming convention will be Bishop Charles D. Williams, Bishop Francis J. McConnell, Dr. Henry F. Cope, Dr. Walter Rauschenbusch, Rabbi Abram Simon, Rev. Charles Stelzle, Prof. Graham Taylor, Dr. George A. Coe, Dr. William B. Forbush, Dr. Charles F. Thwing and Dr. S. Z. Batten. There will be an important exhibit setting forth advanced methods in religious education. The organization thus states its purposes: "The three-fold purpose of the Religious Education Association is: to inspire the educational forces of our country with the religious ideal; to inspire the religious forces of our country with the educational ideal; and to keep before the public mind the idea of religious education, and the sense of its need and value."

Country Church Institutes.

The Home Missions Council, an interdenominational organization of recent origin for co-ordinating the home mission work of the country, will hold Country Church Institutes in various parts of N. York, Penn., and Ohio during January and February. The speakers will be national secretaries of Home Missions and men who know the conditions at first hand. Rev. Ward Platt, D. D., Rev. L. C. Barnes, D. D., and Mr. J. E. McAfee will attend all these institutes.

Religious Work at Exposition.

The exposition at San Francisco will open Feb. 20 and close Dec. 4. The Federal Council, of the Churches of Christ in America have appointed a committee of a hundred to attend to the religious phases of the exposition. It is proposed to raise a hundred thousand dollars and 20,000 churches are being asked to give five dollars each in order to provide the funds.

Federation Recommends Studies of Peace.

The Commission on Christian Education of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America are recommending to all the churches that they use the Josiah Strong lessons called "The Gospel of the Kingdom" which at the present time are offering studies in war and peace.

The Visitor

THIS is the time of year when the the churches are casting up accounts, tabulating the work done during the preceding twelve months, weighing gains and losses and prayerfully taking up the task again for another season. In the years of his own pastoral responsibilities the Visitor used to magnify the annual meeting in his own mind as an event of unique opportunity and purpose. The church liked to give an entire evening to it, beginning with a congregational dinner and followed by the reports and speeches. This custom seems to be in general use among the churches, if one may judge from the inspiring reports appearing in the Table Talk pages of The Christian Century.

It was the Visitor's good fortune to attend the annual meeting of Central Church, Detroit, on Monday evening, Jan. 11. I had been in that city on the Sunday previous, speaking for the pastor, Rev. C. J. Tanner, in the morning and at the Y. M. C. A. in the afternoon. A fine congregation filled the church. Tokens of progress and hope were in plain evidence both in the service of worship and in the Sunday school. This was reassuring to the Visitor who had heard much about Pastor Tanner's policy of organizing new churches in the residential districts of Detroit at the expense of the mother church down town.

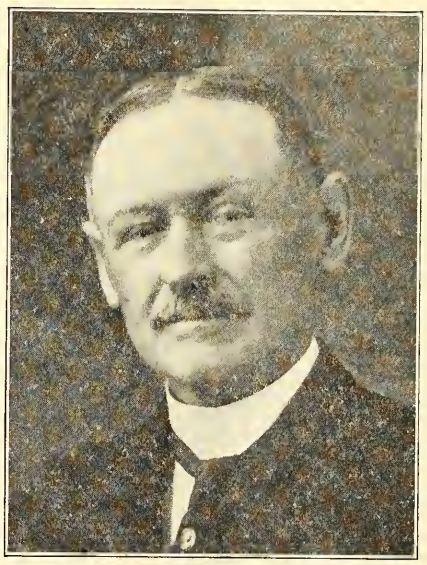
A DOWN TOWN CHURCH.

Until very recently Central Church was the only congregation of Disciples in the city, excepting the Plum street congregation of our non-coöperating brethren. Mr. Tanner's people came from the four corners of the city, some of them more than ten miles, to attend the services. The neighborhood round about Central Church was rapidly being changed from a substantial residential section to one of a more ephemeral character. The church never felt the need of holding on to all its members, as it did a half dozen years ago. But in the face of this Mr. Tanner took the lead in a policy of city mission work that has resulted in the giving up of three sets of his members to form the nuclei of as many congregations in the newer residence districts.

Notwithstanding such congregational unselfishness—or perhaps partly on account of it—the mother church has been more than holding its own in a changing neighborhood and under all the difficulties inhering in a typical "down town" situation. The congregations are uniformly large in the morning, though the problem of the evening service is keenly felt. The Sunday school is vigorous. The Visitor attended the men's class taught by Mr. Wellington Logan, Executive Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., who is a member of Central and an active participant in all its good work. His message to the gallery full of men that morning was vital and urgent and convincing. There also I met again Rev. F. W. Norton, former pastor of Butler College Church in Indianapolis, and before that, I believe, a pastor and leader of our work in the state of New York. Mr. Norton has been working at other tasks than the ministry since going to Detroit, until his health should be recovered. This goal has now been fully attained, if one can judge of appearances, and it is to be hoped that we shall see this capable pastor at his proper life work soon again.

A NOTABLE RECORD.

The Visitor did not get to hear the entire program of the annual meeting on Monday evening but what I did hear interested me greatly. A short history of the work of the Disciples in Detroit was being read by Miss Caroline E. Campbell, an accomplished communicant of this congregation, as I entered the assembly. I was much impressed by both the facts recited and the interesting, "homey" way in which they were told. Every congregation needs to feel the impact of its own past upon its present task. We need the inspiration of the invisible church, the sense of being surrounded with a great cloud of witnesses who have themselves wrought and entered into their reward, but who watch eagerly all our successes and failures and share them with us.



Rev. C. J. Tanner.

At the close of Miss Campbell's reading the congregation voted to have the story printed and put into the home of each present and future member of the church. The full dignity of the church's task does not appear when one takes merely a cross-section of its local and present activities. Only when one sees it in the perspective of years do the sublimity and idealism of its work stand out. To give to a new convert a copy of the Word of God, the divine story of the Church universal, and a copy of a humanly told story of the particular local church—what could be more appropriate?

FAMOUS MEN AS PASTORS.

The Visitor was much interested in the great names connected with Detroit Disciple history. There was Isaac Errett who in 1863 was called from Ionia, Mich., as pastor and who served this church until he removed to Cincinnati to become editor of the Christian Standard. There was Alvin I. Hobbs, the Visitor's first theological teacher, in whose burial service at Des Moines, Ia., twenty years ago, I participated. There was W. T. Moore who, the record tells us, was successful in bringing about a union of the two churches then existing in the city, a union which broke again soon after Dr. Moore's wise and strong hand was withdrawn by his resignation. The line of cleavage between the conservative and the progressive groups in the church could not, apparently, be obliterated and the present Plum street church was organized on a basis of non-coöperation in organized missionary work and opposition to the use of the organ in public worship. This congregation, one of the few such still remaining in the North, is yet substantial and vigorous and possesses as fine a church edifice, perhaps, as any of the non-coöperating congregations in the country.

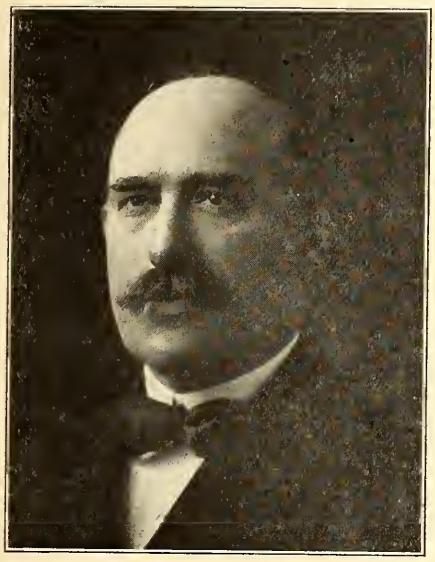
The inability of the two groups to work together in the same city is a sad irony on the plea for Christian unity which both of them make.

The recollection lingers in the minds of many members of Central Church of the visit paid by Gen. James A. Garfield, who was later President of the United States. Gen. Garfield preached a sermon and it is clearly recalled that he preached from the text, "Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ."

A VERSATILE AND UNSELFISH LAYMAN.

Throughout the record of this church the names of the Grays and the Campbells and the Linns and the Hawleys are continually recurring, names still represented in the membership by the second and third generations. One man in whose gracious home the Visitor was entertained at dinner seems to symbolize for his own younger generation the loyalty of those who belong to the older day. This is Mr. Phillip H. Gray. His father, Mr. John S. Gray, was an active and burden-bearing leader in the Detroit church in the brief period of its union and afterward in the Plum street church up to the time of his death a few years since. His mother and brothers are still devoted supporters at Plum street. With the tenderest feeling in his heart toward the Plum street congregation in which he was reared, Mr. Phillip Gray some ten or a dozen years ago united with Central Church where he has rendered a many-sided service to the cause of Christ. He is a man whose religious personality the Visitor's pencil would dearly love to sketch on this page, but that must be deferred for another occasion, either when I can get his consent or when I do not commit the indiscretion of telling him in advance my wish and then having to promise under drastic penalty not to carry it out! It must suffice now simply to set down the fact that this man carries the ideals of Christian service into all the departments of his life. He is the president of Detroit's great Y. M. C. A., a participant in every community enterprise of public progress, the chairman of the finance committee of Central Church, a teacher in the Sunday school, the tenor singer and choirmaster of the quartette choir, and his relation to his pastor was indicated by the fact that when I was about to enter the pastor's study he took out his own ring of keys and let me in!

Of the pastor himself, I will quote the sincere word spoken by Miss Campbell at the close of her historical sketch: "He has put the church on a firm business basis, impressing upon us most earnestly that churches must be as prompt and systematic in meeting their bills as business firms or private individuals should be. He has emphasized missionary activities until our churches in Detroit gave more per capita for missions than any other denomination in the city. He has brought honor on our church in his election to the presidency of the Pastors' Union of the city. And best of all he is the fearless advocate of every good cause whether it be that of temperance, equal suffrage or civic righteousness. Besides all this, he is the sane adviser, the sympathetic friend, the considerate shepherd of his flock. In all of his work he is most ably supported by Mrs. Tanner. He grows, as all should do, with the years; and his influence is as a shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." C. C. M.



Mr. Phillip H. Gray.

POWERLESS PROFESSION.

A Book Review.

By R. P. Shepherd.

What is the matter with us?

Why are such vast tracts of each human life such dreary and unfruitful wastes? Why do home life, church life, community life, seem to drop so often into barren thinking and a desert-like conscience? What is the cause of such frightful religious indifference?

We pray no more as families in the home. We go to church, the preacher prays for us. We go to Sunday-school and the superintendent or teacher prays for us. We go to prayer-meeting and find it, usually, a talk meeting, and too often even that is second-hand talk, clippings from papers or verse references from the Bible, no spontaneity, no individuality and refreshing breath of spiritual vitality. What is the root cause of this practical prayerlessness? Is the time yet come to check the influences which tend increasingly to make personal and group Christianity an unpraying religion?

If there is any one theme which is inseparable from Christian meditation and practise it surely is that of finding the proper place of prayer in conduct and profession. The cause of most of our spiritual disorders will be found to be lack of attention to the highest exercise of the soul in communion with the invisible God. All profession of faith or practice of works is powerless except the whole life be rooted in personal contact with the only God.

We, all of us, have need of guidance to pray, to pray intelligently, acceptably, fruitfully. No one can be a guide to us unless he knows. He must know God as he is revealed in Jesus Christ. He must know, by careful study, the place of prayer in the One perfect life. He must know, by sharp experience, the place of prayer in the life which is being led on to perfection. He must know, by quick and wide sympathy, the place of prayer in the life of his fellow travelers.

Those who have had the personal spiritual guidance of James M. Campbell, or have enjoyed the even higher privilege of close personal companionship with him, his congregations and friends, will find in his latest book,* The Place of Prayer in the Christian Religion, some of the ripest and best fruit of his life. His unusual familiarity with the Scriptures makes it possible for him to weave into rich fabric every reference to prayer which is found in the New Testament. His experiences with life, with men and with God make it possible for him to put his guidance into familiar and living terms.

The work deserves to be studied by groups in every home and church group in the land, for it, more than any other modern message, is calculated to transform powerless profession into world-conquering passion empowered by true prayer. Each of the nineteen chapters is a spiritual stimulus and tonic. The 303 pages are so many incentives to new life in God with him.

beauty flowing from the Christ? Stephen's face must be like a ruby smitten by the sun, or, as the old song suggests, there must be more than a garden in his face; something of the ultimate beauty, born of the very life of God, must have passed into his countenance.

Ruskin called Dante the central man of all the world; and Carlyle held that "Dante is world-great, not because he is world-wide, but because he is world-deep." But there are those who think that Dante's world-greatness is due neither to his world-wideness nor to his world-deepness, but to his heaven-highness. A kind of supernatural loftiness, a strain of celestial sublimity, characterizes this man who gave voice to ten dumb centuries. But do you not think that the august man has grown tremendously during his 600 years' absence from the earth? Who shall say what grander dimensions are his, with his nearer, clearer vision of that Love which moves "the sun in heaven and all the stars?"

CHRIST IN THE EARTH LIFE OF MAN.

A further consideration is the encouragement which Christ's fathomless Saviorhood gives to men and women now on the earth, right here in the thick of things, when the planet seems staggering under its weight of woe and sin and injustice. Emerson once said that the man never lived who could feed us ever. And he is grandly right—no mere man can be the Bread of Life to the souls of men. Some of these ages, those belated thinkers, professing to be advanced, will wake up to the fact that they are some centuries behind the times. We are only truly up with the times as we are livingly in with the eternities.

No—a thousand times no—no mere man can feed us; but God manifest in the flesh; God strengthening our weakness; God stooping to our lowliness and lifting us to the high still places in Christ—such a God verily feeds all who will have His food. Imparting to blind mortal eyes the loveliness that is immortal, He makes life suddenly sweet by opening it to His Unsearchable riches. In His presence hunger and thirst vanish utterly away, save as they make the soul more capacious for His food and drink. Giving to men a distinct heavenliness of temper, He makes them assuredly aware that, however dark the night, the shadow-draped hills but conceal a brighter dawn. "I am the light of the world"—the light of all worlds; the light that never goes out, but burns glowingly on and on, until heaven's light and earth's darkness shall kiss each other in the white radiance of eternity.

What a glorious commentary on this passage is Mrs. Alice Meynell's poem, "Christ in the Universe," than which Albert Cock, in the British Review, said a greater poem had not been written in the last hundred years:

With the ambiguous earth
His dealings have been told us; these abide;
The signal to a maid, the human birth,
The lesson, and the Young Man crucified.

But not a star of all
The unimaginable stars has heard
How He administered this terrestrial ball;
Our race have kept their Lord's entrusted word.

Of those earth-visiting feet
None knows the secret, cherished, perilous—
The terrible, shamefast, frightened, whispered, sweet
Heart-shattering secret of His way with us.

No planet knows that this
Our wayside planet, carrying land and wave,
Love and life multiplied, and pain and bliss,
Bears as chief treasure one forsaken grave.

Nor in our little day,
May His devices with the heavens be guessed.
His pilgrimage to thread the Milky Way,
Or His bestowals there be manifest.

But in the eternities
Doubtless we shall compare together, hear
A million alien gospels, in what guise
He walked the Pleiades, the Lyre, the Bear.

Oh, be prepared, my soul,
To read the inconceivable, to scan
The million forms of God those stars enroll,
When in our turn we show to them—a man.

Every man under British arms on land or at sea had a plum pudding for Christmas Day dinner. Forty thousand dollars' worth of plum puddings were sent to the men at the front in the war in Europe.

SAMUEL CALLED TO BE A PROPHET.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR FEBRUARY 14.

1 Sam. 3:1-13, 19, 20. Memory Verses, 8, 9. Golden Text.—Speak, Jehovah, for thy servant heareth. I Sam. 3:9.

American Standard Bible.

Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons. (Used by permission.)

And the child Samuel ministered unto Jehovah before Eli. And the word of Jehovah was precious in those days; there was no frequent vision. (2) And it came to pass at that time, when Eli was laid down in his place (now his eyes had begun to wax dim, so that he could not see), (3) and the lamp of God was not yet gone out, and Samuel was laid down to sleep, in the temple of Jehovah, where the ark of God was; (4) that Jehovah called Samuel: and he said, Here am I. (5) And he ran unto Eli, and said, Here am I; for thou calledst me. And he said, I called not; lie down again. And he went and lay down. (6) And Jehovah called yet again, Samuel. And Samuel arose and went to Eli, and said, Here am I; for thou calledst me. And he answered, I called not, my son; lie down again. (7) Now Samuel did not yet know Jehovah, neither was the word of Jehovah yet revealed unto him. (8) And Jehovah called Samuel again the third time. And he arose and went to Eli, and said, Here am I; for thou calledst me. And Eli perceived that Jehovah had called the child. (9) Therefore Eli said unto Samuel, Go, lie down: and it shall be, if he call thee, that thou shalt say, Speak, Jehovah; for thy servant heareth. So Samuel went and lay down in his place.

(10) And Jehovah came, and stood, and called as at other times, Samuel, Samuel. Then Samuel said, Speak; for thy servant heareth. (11) And Jehovah said to Samuel, Behold, I will do a thing in Israel, at which both the ears of every one that heareth it shall tingle. (12) In that day I will perform against Eli all that I have spoken concerning his house, from the beginning even unto the end. (13) For I have told him that I will judge his house for ever, for the iniquity which he knew because his sons did bring a curse upon themselves, and he restrained them not.

(19) And Samuel grew, and Jehovah was with him, and did let none of his words fall to the ground. (20) And all Israel from Dan even to Beersheba knew that Samuel was established to be a prophet of Jehovah.

Verse by Verse.

BY ASA MCDANIEL.

1. The child Samuel. Samuel means "Ask of God." Read the first two chapters of Samuel. He is the hero of the story and not the author of the book.—Ministered unto Jehovah. Minister means servant. It was the duty of Samuel to help Eli in the service of the sanctuary. His duties, however, were varied, one of which was to open the doors of the temple. v. 15.—The word of Jehovah was precious in those days. Precious, in the original, means rare. The priests and the people had departed from Jehovah, hence they received no message.—Frequent visions. Hebrew, widely spread. RVm. The prophets were rare in Israel's life at this time.

2. It came to pass in that time. It was during the period of this scarcity of revelation.—Eli was laid down in his place. He slept near the sanctuary, and had retired for the night.

3. The lamp of God was not yet gone out. The sacred lamp was lighted at sunset and kept burning all night. Ex. 27:20, 21; Lev. 24:1-4.—In the temple of Jehovah. The Hebrew word translated "temple" means dwelling place and is so translated when referring to rulers.—Where the ark of God was. Samuel slept in the apartment in which the Ark stood, and near that of Eli.

4. Jehovah called Samuel. Samuel awoke to the consciousness of his holy task as a prophet of God.—Here am I. A common form of Hebrew answer when one's name is called. Compare Gen. 22:1, 11; Isa. 6:8.

5. He ran to Eli. Samuel thought the call came from Eli. Note his alacrity to obey the aged priest. He is bidden to return to his place.

6. Jehovah called yet again. Jehovah called again with the same result as before. Samuel's readiness to obey should teach us the same virtue.

7. Samuel did not yet know Jehovah, and the word of Jehovah had not yet been revealed to him. The remark is added to explain how it was that he did not recognize the voice of Jehovah.

8. Eli perceived that Jehovah had called the child. The third call convinced Eli that Jehovah was calling Samuel, and the aged priest gave him instructions accordingly.

9. Speak Jehovah; for thy servant heareth. When God calls this is the most fitting response to make. He calls all, but we are not always willing to heed the call.

10. Jehovah came, and stood. The voice became to Samuel the vision and when the call came again, Samuel replied as he had been instructed to do by Eli.

11. I will do a thing in Israel. The impending defeat of Israel by the Philistines described in the fourth chapter.—The ears * * * shall tingle. An expression describing the effects upon the people when they receive the news of calamity.

12. In that day. The time when the house of Eli will be completely overthrown.—I will perform * * * concerning his house. See I Sam. 2:27-36.—Beginning even unto the end. Proverbial way of saying I will do it thoroughly.

13. Judge his house. Punish his house.—The iniquity which he knew. Eli was not ignorant of his son's wickedness, and had he honored his office he would not have allowed them to remain in office. The interests of his family could not have outweighed the claims of God.

19. Samuel grew and Jehovah was with him. A very common Old Testament expression. See Gen. 21:22; 28:15; 39:2; Ex. 3:12; Josh. 1:5; Judges 6:16; I Sam. 16:18. Compare also Luke 2:52.—Did let none of his words fall to the ground. That is, he confirmed them so that they were not useless.

20. Dan even to Beersheba. The phrase denotes the total extent of Israel. Dan was at the extreme north and Beersheba at the extreme south.—A prophet of Jehovah. One who speaks for Jehovah. A moral leader of his people.

Dedicating a Child

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

What would you do for your child? I was in a home the other evening when a little boy was dying. Nurses moved softly about. The doctor was exhausting the last resource of his profession. The leading specialist in the city had come and gone, leaving no word of hope, but saying rather bluntly, "In two hours your child will be dead." "You have done all that you could," I said, brokenly, to the father. It was a moment when something must be said and there was so little of comfort that one could say. "Yes," he replied, "but I would slave all of my life for that little fellow if I could only keep him with me." He spoke the truth. There is nothing we would not do for our children. We would spend money like chaff. We would toil cheerfully by the year nor account it aught but joy. But are we willing that our children should develop to their utmost? Are we willing that God shall have his way with them? Have we ever courageously given them entirely to God to use as missionaries, as preachers or to use in any way he pleases to upbuild His kingdom?

Rev. John R. Ewers.

HANNAH AND SAMUEL.

Here is a mother who wanted a son. God gave Samuel to her. She gave Samuel to God. It is a beautiful story. And when she gave him to God she assured his eternal greatness. Samuel dedicated to money-making or cattle-raising would have been a mere nobody. He would have perished with all the other Sams. It is our relation to God that immortalizes us. She took her boy to the church and he grew up in it. The richer our experience the deeper our conviction that the most powerful influence in the world is the home. Church and school have a desperate time overcoming the influence of a poor home. Here is a lesson for the women's class. What are the mothers doing to train their children religiously and to lead them into the church? It is a very timely question. Thousands of children are damned in their homes. They have no chance. There is no honesty, modesty, industry, truth or virtue in their homes—how can they amount to anything? Foolish mothers seem bent upon ruining their children in the upper classes. Foolish fathers seem determined to do everything possible to make their sons worthless!

SAMUEL HEARS GOD.

It is wonderful, the way in which God calls the children! A mother talked with me yesterday about her nine-year-old little girl who wanted to become a Christian. Here was Samuel about ten or twelve living in a temple and he heard God calling him. Can you hear that childish voice answering three times in the silent night, "Here I am, Lord?" He was ready. He had been made ready. He was in the right place. He was in the right mood. He heard. He answered. The Almighty God spoke to that little lad and the lad heard and answered. Samuel always heard. When he was old he wrote in a book that sage advice about teaching children the word of God: "When you walk in the way, when you sit in your house, when evening shadows gather, when the morning light breaks, teach, teach, teach your children the word of God." Thus did the old man honor his mother. When he was old he did not depart from the straight paths.

A HARD DUTY.

The very first duty laid upon the shoulders of the lad was enough to stagger a mature man. He had to go and tell Eli, his master, his teacher, that punishment awaited him. "But not a word fell to the ground." Something of that sturdy, thorough-going-ness communicated to him by his mother made it possible for him to do his duty without compromise.

PRACTICAL ANGLE.

Fathers and mothers should lead their children to the house of God. When Sunday morning comes the father is to say, "Come" not "Go." There is no sight much more encouraging than to see the streets filled with parents leading their boys and girls to Sunday-school. The man goes to the Men's class, the woman goes to the Women's class, while the children go to their classes. Then all meet for worship.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR FEBRUARY 10.

The Strength of Jesus. Mark 1:1-28.

A man's strength depends upon the number and intensity of his desires and their organization. He who has a few intense desires is strong but he who has many intense desires is stronger. Both may be weakened by conflicting desires. To have many or few feeble desires is to be weak. The strong man knows what he wants and he knows that he wants it. He will stake his reputation and his life on the effort to get what he thinks he ought to have. His word has power.

The Appeal of Jesus.

It is a favorite occupation of weak persons to criticise their town, their church, the institution that gives them employment and a living, and their friends. The strong man has a better occupation. He makes an appeal to the backward town, the discouraged church, and the careless friend. He sees the possibilities in all and he knows how to make vivid to others what is vivid to him. Gregory of Neo-Caesarea found in his native town only seventeen Christians on his return to it after Origen had led him into the light. He so transformed the place by his labors that men called him "Thaumaturgus" (wonder-worker). The strength of Jesus is shown in his appeal to all sorts and conditions of men.

Treatment of Evil Men.

R. E. Speer quotes a lawyer as saying to a graduating class: "When a man has proved himself a thorough-paced scoundrel, treat him like one, affront him, oppose him, risk something, risk all, to break down his influence, to terminate his career; do this and you will feel a happiness inside you that is royal and you will be one among a thousand." If we have not the strength to oppose scoundrels, we are too weak to be of much use in this world. In religious organizations, in political parties, in social circles the scoundrel makes his appearance and he will have his way if he can. If he does not, it will be because good men will not stand aside for him. But there is danger for the man who specializes on rascals. He becomes harsh, narrow, intolerant, selfish, and often he loses the ability to distinguish between right and wrong. The way of Jesus is better. He came to save men, even the worst of them. His opposition to the bad in men was subordinated to his purpose that men should know how good they might be.

Meeting Temptation.

"The other philosophers," writes Seneca, "deal with us gently and coaxingly, just as our accustomed family physicians usually do with our bodies, treating them not by the best and shortest method, but by that which we allow them to employ; whereas the Stoics adopt a manly course, and do not care about its appearing attractive to those who are entering upon it, but that it should as quickly as possible take us out of the world, and lead us to that lofty eminence which is so far beyond the scope of any missile that it is above the reach of Fortune herself." Jesus does not put the emphasis where the Stoic does, but he does call for men to be heroic in meeting temptation. He set the example. The cry of the multitude and the subtle diplomacy of the ruler never deceived him and never led him astray. To please or to displease was not the first consideration. There was a duty to perform and the whole life was dedicated to the performance. The strong man scorns the easy task. Difficulty invites him. Danger, when it is along the path of duty, stimulates him. The task of Jesus was supremely great. He rejoiced to do it and to call men to follow him into difficulty and danger connected with so great a work.

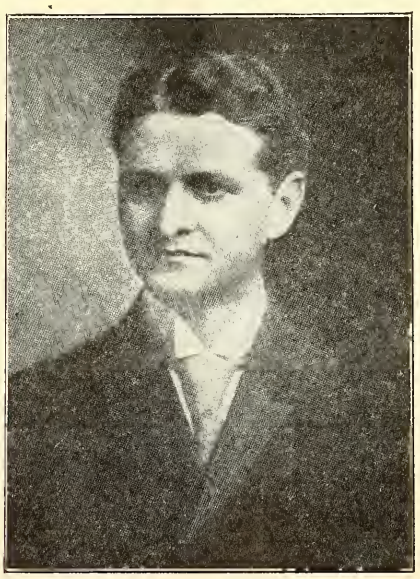
Disciples Table Talk

Franklin Circle, Cleveland, for Social Service.

Franklin Circle Church, Cleveland, O., where W. F. Rothenburger is in his seventh year of ministry added to their second annual every-member canvass a budget of $30,000 for a modern Bible School and Community House and for the repairing of their pipe organ. A committee on plans spent two months studying other plants, and on Sunday morning, December 27, presented to the congregation the result of their labors with the use of a stereopticon. The plans were enthusiastically adopted and the official board authorized to proceed with the structure as soon as a certain amount could be secured in good pledges. After the morning service on Sunday, January 10, the seventy men who had been selected to make the canvass were guests of the church at the Young Men's Christian Association where the teams received final instructions and assignments. One of the most effective features of the preparation was a demonstration on "How to do it" by three of the committeemen. Mr. A. R. Teachout had already presented the church with a lot adjoining the present building and the men started out with assurance and enthusiasm. The office wore the appearance of an election center from 6 till 8 o'clock in the evening where reports were received. On the following Wednesday evening the prayer meeting was turned into an experience meeting by the men who did the canvassing, and the final reports showed a surprising result. The required amount to begin the building had been overreached, the missionary budget which included the support of the station of sixteen native workers at Nantungchow, China, was so nearly reached that the final reports are expected to cover the balance, and the current expense budget will be provided for. The new plant will be joined to the present building with four adequate entrances on two floors, and besides providing modern equipment for a thoroughly graded and departmentalized school it will include a gymnasium, bowling alleys, shower baths, offices, a friendship room, game rooms, club rooms, kitchen, moving picture apparatus, baptistery, assembly room and custodian's quarters. The work of building will be begun at an early date.



Rev. W. F. Rothenburger, of Franklin Circle Church, Cleveland, Whose Congregation Will Build a Modern Sunday-school and Community House.

Successful Pastor at Houston, Tex.

W. S. Lockhart has been at Houston, Tex., for four and a half years. In that time the Central church has had 800 additions, the church has been made a Living Link in the Foreign, Home, State and C. W. B. M. boards besides being a regular contributor to the local charity and to other missionary interests.

Matron of Orphans' Home Resigns.

Miss Addie Bell, who was matron of the Christian Orphans' Home of Louisville during the past year, has resigned. The board of directors are facing a difficult task in finding some one to fill this place. They wish a widow and mother between the ages of thirty-five and fifty.

Dr. and Mrs. Dye Go to the Philippines.

Since the way was not open for Dr. and Mrs. Royal J. Dye to return to the African field where they came to be so well-known to Disciples, they will be sent out by the Foreign society to the Philippines where they will be stationed at Aparri. In case Mrs. Dye can stand the climate, this will present another opportunity for the talents of these devoted workers.

Leslie W. Morgan at the City Temple.

Leslie W. Morgan, pastor of one of the churches in London, was invited to conduct a mid-day prayer meeting at the City Temple on Dec. 16. This church is the one presided over by R. J. Campbell of "The New Theology" fame. These mid-day meetings are arranged by the National Free Church Council, and while they are not largely attended they have proven of great help to those who could attend.

Disciple Soldier Killed in War.

The Christian Monthly, the medium of communication of the English churches, has been publishing the names of all the Disciple soldiers in the British service at this time in the great world war. Word has been received that Corporal A. R. Banton of Hornsey church was killed in action in the battle of the Aisne on Sept. 15.

Success at Beaver Falls, Pa.

First church at Beaver Falls, Pa., progressed during 1914. The total receipts for the year were $5,031.75 and the disbursements, $4,770.20. There were 163 accessions to the membership which is now 506. The pastor, C. M. Smail, made 1,320 calls. The total attendance for the year at the Sunday-school was 11,234. The church has established a mission.

Church in a Hard Field.

First Church, Birmingham, Ala., is not only a down-town church with all the usual down-town problems, but its membership is widely scattered over the fifty square miles of the Greater Birmingham District. To minister to this membership the second service of the day is held at five o'clock; and in order to reach those who will not attend the regular services of the day, a third preaching service has been held at a down-town theater at eight o'clock. The best features of the year's work in 1914 have been its larger social service and its increased missionary interest. There were 51 additions. The missionary offerings were $1,809.00.

Annual Report from Long Beach, Cal.

First church, at Long Beach, Cal., of which James N. Crutcher is pastor, has issued its annual report. During the past year the church raised $6,448.07 on its budget fund and $2,026.24 for its missionary fund. All of the auxiliary societies presented interesting and illuminating reports.

New Pastorate Brings Progress.

Last September, South Lawrence church of Wichita, Kans., called G. J. Chapman to their field. Since that time 35 have been added to the membership of the church at the regular services and the pastor will hold some special evangelistic services shortly. The fiscal year has just closed with all obligations met in full and a thousand dollars in the building fund. The membership of the church is 455 and the Sunday-school attendance continues around the three hundred mark.

Prosperity at Anderson, Ind.

On Wednesday evening, Jan. 13, Central Church of Anderson, Ind., held their annual meeting. The report shows all bills paid and money in every department of the church. During the year they raised for all purposes $9,253.96. Out of this amount they gave $2,600 to missions and benevolences. They have three living-links in India. Mrs. Springer who went out from this church at her own charges wishes the local church to have the credit for the amount of her salary. This added to the $2,600 given gives them $3,300 for missions and benevolenees. They have had 140 added to the church at the regular services and the spiritual tone of the church is higher than at any time during the present pastorate. J. Boyd Jones is now in the fifth year of his pastorate. The last year has been by far the best since he came. They had A. C. Smither of St. Louis to give the chief address. The Bible school averaged 701 for the year and they have the goal at 800 for this year. Eighty of the people who united with the church came from the Bible school last year.

Church Has Great Growth.

The year 1914 was a most prosperous one for the Valparaiso. Ind., Church. At the annual meeting, held Dec. 30, reports from all departments of the church indicated steady substantial growth. There were 351 additions to the membership during the year and the offerings amounted to $8,000. The audiences are large. The church conducts, each Sunday, five Sunday-schools, four in the country with officers and teachers supplied by the Valparaiso Church. Four young men are preparing for the ministry. Two of these are already doing effective work. Pres. H. B. Brown has sufficiently recovered so as to be able to attend both services on Sunday. Claude E. Hill is in his sixth year with this church which is united and happy in its work. Pres. Miner Lee Bates of Hiram and Dr. R. H. Crossfield of Transylvania were present and made addresses at the annual meeting.

Union Avenue, St. Louis, Reduces Debt.

The annual meeting of the Union Avenue church of St. Louis, Mo., was held recently and a large audience listened to interesting and significant reports. The total receipts last year of the church were reported to be $24,554.66. The building debt was reduced during the year by $3,400, the debt now standing at $88,000. B. A. Abbott, in his annual report, said he had made 530 pastoral visits, a part of the 3,825 visits made by the church organization during the year. He said he was anxious for his congregation, now numbering 774 resident members, to add to its singing repertoire. He urged the use of the telephone as an adjunct in calling, saying that one of the Sunday-school classes during the year had made 400 calls over the telephone for the good of the church.

Judge Lobingier Presides Over Saturday Club.

Judge C. S. Lobingier, formerly of Chicago, and a member of Hyde Park Church, now judge of the U. S. Court for China, and stationed at Shanghai, was chairman of the Saturday Club at a recent important meeting held on November 21. In his introductory remarks, Judge Lobingier said: "We are fortunate in having with us today a group of speakers representing various phases of the New Era in the Far East and especially in China. One of them is prepared to outline relative to China's part the great enterprise which the New Year will see materialize on the other side of the ocean. Another will tell us of one of the old industries of China and how it flourishes under the new regime. These topics relate to the material side of the new Far Eastern movement, a very important side when properly supplemented but quite insufficient in itself without the moral and spiritual phase which alone makes possible the highest civilization. The third who, by a fortunate coincidence, happens to be in our midst on this occasion, bears a message regarding this latter phase and it is peculiarly fitting that Mr. Sherwood Eddy, Asiatic secretary for the International Y. M. C. A., should be the bearer of that message, for during nearly twenty years he has been associated with the Far East and with the work of John R. Mott, who, it is well known, was at one time President Wilson's choice as American Minister to China.

Dr. Garvin May Leave William Woods.

It is reported by a Fulton newspaper that Dr. Joseph L. Garvin, president of William Woods College, at Fulton, told the Board of Managers at the November meeting that he would not ask for re-election as president of the school for the next scholastic year, 1915-16. It will be remembered that Mr. Garvin resigned the pastorate of one of our churches in Seattle, Wash., to accept the presidency of William Woods College. His work as pastor of the largest congregation of the Christian Church in Seattle was so successful and constructive in its nature, that he was unanimously chosen by the board to head William Woods. During his incumbency as president the entire college has been refurnished, hardwood floors laid throughout the building, complete equipment of Knabe pianos provided for the conservatory and numerous other improvements made to the physical property of the college. In addition to this William Woods has been fully accredited as a junior college by the University of Missouri. W. E. Jameson, president of the College Board, is reported as speaking of Dr. Garvin in the following complimentary terms: "Speaking for myself and other members of the Board, I can say that Dr. Garvin leaves William Woods College with the warmest regard of every member and the severing of his relation with the college is voluntary on his part. Dr. Garvin has energy and dynamic power far above the average man. As to his administrative and executive powers the present condition and standing of the school speak better than I could voice it." It is rumored that Dr. Garvin will continue in educational work, probably in some university or as head of a large co-educational institution.

Dr. J. L. Garvin, who it is rumored will resign the presidency of William Woods College.

Church Prints Pastor's Sermons.

Linwood Boulevard church, Kansas City, of which Burris A. Jenkins is pastor, has arranged to print their pastor's sermons in leaflet form which are sold for five cents each. Dr. D D. Campbell, 727 Skukert Bldg., Kansas City, is chairman of the committee that has in charge the work of extending their pastor's ministry. The following sermons have already been printed, "Inspiration," "The Creation," "The Atonement," "The Future Life," "The Incarnation," "The Church on Trial," "All that is Within Me," "Never Man so Spake," and "He that Shall Come."

Report From Terre Haute, Ind.

First Church at Terre Haute, Ind., has had a busy year in that city where the government is prosecuting the local politicians. The church has received $16,707.01 in cash during the year of which $1,893.92 went into the campaign of the Fife Evangelistic Company. The church had 485 additions during the year and now has an estimated membership of 1651. About seven hundred dollars was put into missionary work.

The Best Things the Pastor Said.

The Loyal Daughters' Class at Central Church, Buffalo, N. Y., where B. S. Ferrall is pastor, had a social evening recently and there were talks by three members of the class on "The Best Pulpit Utterances of the Past Month." The pastor made an address on "The Things that Count."

A Much Used Baptistry.

First Church of Vincennes, Ind., where E. F. Daugherty is pastor, has a much used baptistry. The Presbyterians of McKinley Avenue Church used it recently as did the North Vincennes Methodist Church. And then First Church is using it all the time anyway, so many are being inducted into the church at Vincennes. First Church has called Mrs. Adah Torrey Henderson of St. Louis to be pastoral helper.

Pastor Refuses Salary Increase.

First Church of Frankfort, Ky., on a recent evening at a business meeting adopted a budget which provided for a raise of salary for the pastor, Roger T. Nooe. The pastor thanked the congregation for the action taken but declined to avail himself of the increase offered.

W. R. Burton Victim of Amnesia.

W. R. Burton, whose mysterious disappearance from Fairmont, Minn., has been noted, was picked up unconscious in New York City, at Fifth Avenue and 42nd Street, Sunday afternoon, January 10, 1915. Regaining consciousness at the hospital after an operation, he was restored from a case of amnesia. He disappeared from Fairmont, December 15, 1914, and in the interim had enlisted in the navy at Key West, Fla., as a musician. He was assigned to the training ship "Maine," came to New York aboard the "Ozark." He is at the Navy Hospital regaining his health and strength. Steps are being taken to secure his release from the service in the navy.

Annual Report of Brooklyn Church.

Sterling Place Church of Brooklyn, N. Y., of which M. M. Ammunson is pastor, issues a very interesting annual report. The pastor made 26 special addresses, addressed 34 Y. M. C. A. shop meetings and made 618 calls. There were 38 additions to the church and the total receipts for the year were $6,799.46. In five years of the present pastorate, there have been 152 additions, a ten thousand dollar mortgage wiped out, improvements on the building of $2,500 and a total amount raised for the budget and missions of $42,000.

"Everybody-at-Church" Sunday.

Central Church of Richmond, Ind., reports having an "Everybody-at-Church" Sunday on January 17, at which there was an attendance of 915. This was a hundred more than any church in the city had, it is reported. W. R. Motley is the pastor.

Sister of Governor Drake Dies.

Paid tributes by the governor of Iowa, by the trustees, faculty and students of Drake University and by a host of friends, funeral services for Mrs. Henrietta T. Carpenter were held at the University Place Church of Christ recently. The remains were interred in Woodland Cemetery by the side of her husband, George T. Carpenter, the first chancellor of Drake University. Many of the former students and teachers of Drake University were present in honor of the woman who established the first home in what is known at this time as University Place and from which home the present university had its growth. Following the prayer by Prof. A. M. Haggard, Governor George W. Clarke paid the tribute of a man, who, as a boy, had spent a year in the Carpenter home and had known Mrs. Carpenter in the most intimate associations. Governor Clarke declared that he believed Mrs. Carpenter one of the most noble women, not only because she was kind to him but because she was kind to everyone and that no higher tribute could be paid than to say that a person is good and kind. He told of her influence on his own life and how, when his son left for school, he had the privilege of sending him to the Carpenter home, knowing as he did that "a boy could not go far wrong who came in daily touch with a woman like Mrs. Carpenter." In the absence of President Hill M. Bell in Chicago, Prof. C. O. Denny of the Drake faculty, read resolutions of respect from the trustees and faculty of Drake and spoke of the place Mrs. Carpenter had in the life of the school. Dr. Medbury spoke the closing words of appreciation, speaking especially of the place the deceased had in the life of the University Church and some of the philanthropies she had been instrumental in starting in the city of Des Moines, notably the Children's Home at Twenty-first and High Streets. Mrs. Carpenter was a sister of Governor Drake.

Religious Education Conference at Drake.

A religious education conference will be held at Drake University February 1-4, 1915. Those present will be the professors of religious education among the Disciples of Christ, the officers and departmental superintendents of the National Bible-school Department of the A. C. M. S. and the members of the National Field Workers' Association. Among the speakers for the conference will be Walter S. Athearn, C. E. Underwood, W. C. Bower, H. Newton Miller, Miss Grace Jones, J. P. Rowlison, W. E. Frazee, Robert M. Hopkins, Myron C. Settle, Walter M. White, C. W. Dean and Garry L. Cook. There will be a debate on the subject, "Resolved, That the Sunday morning unified program should be generally adopted." Frank James of Atlanta, Ga., affirms, and L. C. Oberlies, of Lincoln, Neb., denies. There will be an address giving a summary of the courses now offered in Disciple colleges on religious education and another paper will deal with the question whether different colleges should specialize upon different phases of the work or whether each college should undertake to cover the whole field.

In and Around Chicago

Irving Park Church, where W. G. Winn ministers, has already enclosed the addition to their building where the primary department of the Sunday-school will have quarters. This improvement is to cost a thousand dollars. The gymnasium of the building is to be changed into quarters suited for another type of social activity and the building will be kept open all day for various kinds of social life in the community.

Asa McDaniel, who has been the efficient minister at Harvey for several years, has resigned to take effect on May first. During his pastorate he has studied part of the time at the University of Chicago and he has steadily grown in his intellectual life, and at the same time has kept close to the realities in his parish relationships. He has not yet accepted a call to any church.

Secretary Grant K. Lewis, who will speak at the Quarterly Assembly of Chicago Disciples.

Among the new students for the winter quarter at the Disciples Divinity House is a son of Professor Pearson of Hiram College. During this quarter, the Disciples of the university have an assembly in Haskell Building on Thursday evening.

The auxiliaries of the C. W. B. M. of Memorial Church and Hyde Park Church, held a joint meeting at Memorial Church on a recent afternoon, with very profitable fellowship.

Announcements are out for the new book of sermons by E. S. Ames, which are being published by Houghton, Mifflin and Company. These sermons were delivered at Harvard University while Dr. Ames was university preacher there on two different years. They present in sermon form the results of the investigations in religion that were given the public in part in "The Psychology of Religious Experience." The title of the new volume of sermons is "The Higher Individualism." There is already considerable advance demand for the book. Eight sermons are printed in a volume listed at a dollar and ten cents net.

W. G. Baker, pastor at Batavia, read a paper before the Ministerial Association on January 25 on "The Institutional Church."

C. C. Morrison was invited by the Sunday-school union of the Disciple churches of Cleveland to address these workers on Thursday evening, January 28.

H. L. Willett is scheduled to speak before the great Y. M. C. A. religious meeting at Detroit on the afternoon of January 31. This is the largest association in the world. In the morning of that day he is the preacher at Westminster Presbyterian Church.

Grant K. Lewis, secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society, has been added to the list of the speakers that will appear on the program at the Quarterly Assembly of the Chicago Disciples held under the auspices of the Chicago Christian Missionary Society. The meeting is at the First M. E. Church, in the loop, at the corner of Washington and Clark Streets. The other speakers are Basil S. Keusseff, Dr. P. L. Prentis and O. F. Jordan. The program is a symposium on the theme "Better Quarters for the Russian Mission." The churches will be asked to make pledges to the work of the society at this meeting.

Stephen J. Corey and W. C. Bower, who have recently returned from a round-the-world missionary tour, in which they have made detailed study of missionary problems, will speak before the Chicago ministers at the City Club, 315 Plymouth Court, from ten to twelve on Monday, February 8. Mr. Corey will preach at Evanston on Sunday morning, February 7, and at Irving Park Church on the evening of that day. On the evening of February 8, the students and instructors of the Disciples Divinity House will give a dinner to Mr. Corey and hear more of his travels and experiences.

Evanston Church is interested in church attendance. The ushers' report of last year is used for a standard and each month this year, the effort will be made to excel last year's attendance record at morning service. During January the gain was thirty per cent. No special devices are used except the announcement of this interest in the calendar of the church.

Evanston church ladies are arranging for the third annual Lincoln dinner which this year will be held on the evening of February 11. There will be toasts on Lincoln around the dinner table.

Progress at Oskaloosa, Ia.
The annual meeting was held recently in Oskaloosa, Ia., church where Chas. S. Earley is pastor. The pastor's report was first in order, showing that during his ministry at this place, 130 sermons had been preached; board and committee meetings attended, 76; calls made, 575; letters and cards sent out, 1,025. There have been 149 additions to the membership of the church. Eight thousand dollars was raised for all purposes, of which $800 was given to missions. The church is reported to be in a most harmonious condition and plans are being made for a very aggressive campaign in the new year.

Fife Brothers Union Meeting Quits.
The Fife Brothers' Evangelistic company were to have held a union meeting in North Yakima, Wash., but after the plans had been completed the enterprise was abandoned for lack of interest on the part of several of the leading churches. Dr. I. N. McCash of Spokane University, has been engaged to lead an evangelistic effort at First church in February.

Canton, Ill., Church Goes Forward.
The church at Canton, Ill., was organized in 1890 with 42 charter members. It has 630 members at the present time. The church has an attendance campaign ahead in which they will undertake to secure a morning audience of 75 per cent of the church membership. The statistical facts of the year are encouraging. The report of the church clerk showed a net gain in membership of 35. The treasurer's report showed receipts in the general and missionary funds of $1,891.44. The trustees reported having received $167.21. In the Bible school there was an average attendance of 213, and receipts of $327.45.

Pastor's Wife Killed in Auto Accident.
Mrs. Zulla Center, wife of the pastor at Atlanta, Kans., was killed in an auto accident en route to Winfield recently. The car was speeding down hill and went into the ditch pinning the unfortunate victim under the car. The other occupants of the car were seriously injured but none of them fatally. Mr. Center had not gone with the party on account of another engagement. The frightful accident has cast a great gloom upon the church at Atlanta.

Grant K. Lewis at Home Mission Meeting.
The Home Missions Council is a very significant organization of recent years in which the great leaders of home mission work of the various denominations come together for counsel. Grant K. Lewis, secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society, was in New York City the second week in attendance at the annual meeting.

Good Report at Indianapolis Church.
Downey avenue church at Indianapolis made a good record last year. There were 104 new members received into the church and the money received during the year was $9,809.05. Twenty thousand dollars was received for a new building. The pastor is C. H. Winders.

Indiana State Service Efficient.
The state board of Indiana has five district evangelistis traveling about in automobiles given the society by an Indiana layman, and these men have a good report for 1914. They organized 5 new churches, reestablished 7 old churches, held 67 different series of evangelistic meetings and during the year added 1,054 to the church membership of the state. These district evangelists are: B. F. Martin, Guy I. Hoover, T. J. Legg, Melnotte Miller and Fred R. Davies. C. W. Cauble is state secretary and he conducts an office for the routine business of the churches and directs the activities in the state. He reported the total raised last year for Indiana missions to be $15,493.71. Garry L. Cook is also maintained for the Sunday-school work of the state. He visited 91 churches during the year, and made 289 addresses.

Pastor Gets Subject from Sunday-school
Wm. Dunn Ryan at Central church, Youngstown, O., asked the young men's class in the Sunday-school to propound him sixteen questions which were answered at a recent Sunday evening service The following Sunday evening there was a sermon on "Questions Young Women are Asking."

Unique Methods at Richmond, Ind.
The prayer-meeting will be taken care of by special groups at Richmond, Ind., in Central church where W. R. Motley ministers. One month a Sunday-school class becomes responsible; another month the C. W. B. M. and Aid Society assume charge; during May the official board will conduct the prayer-meeting. The city of 30,000 population is divided into eight districts by the church and two deacons serve in each district to look after the church members of each district. This church claims to have the largest average attendance in church and Sunday-school of any congregation in the county. The motto of the church is "Talk Pray, Work, Pay."

A. L. Ward Takes to the Road.
A. L. Ward has been appointed by the Foreign Christian Missionary Society to lecture through Indiana with a stereopticon illustrating the work of the foreign society. He has a number of very interesting pictures and a good lecture.

School of Methods at St. Paul.
A school of methods was held at St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 11-15, under the auspices of the Bible-school department of the American Christian Missionary Society. Last year thirty such schools were held which enrolled over 4,700 pupils and represented 700 schools.

Minister Has Dangerous Illness.
J. O. Shelburne is critically ill at his home in Lancaster, Tex. The physician diagnoses his trouble as diabetes. He was formerly pastor of Central church at Dallas.

Massachusetts Church Has a Good Report.
Main Street church at Haverhill, Mass., had its annual meeting recently at which the annual reports were presented in connection with a dinner of the congregation. Covers were laid for a hundred and the dinner was served to members only and without cost to them. More new members were admitted into the church during 1914 than ever before in its history, the offerings and collections for home and foreign field were almost double those of 1913. The current weekly offerings were also in better proportion than heretofore. The Ladies' Aid Society reported a gain of $75 more than the largest amount which had previously been recorded in the annals of the church, and from the Sunday-school and other departments came similiarly worded communications.

Church Establishes a Reading Room.
Seventh church, Indianapolis, of which Clay Trusty is pastor, has established a reading room with the best periodicals on file for the use of the people of the church. The church has a branch of the public library.

Baby Show at the Church.
The Farmers' Institute met at Oskaloosa, Ia., recently and part of the sessions was in the Disciples church. Among the events in this edifice was the baby show in connection with the institute. Forty-six advance entries were made and the babies were judged not for their looks alone but for the skill shown by their mothers in rearing them.

Interesting Service at Canton, O.
The Uniformed Rank of the Knights of Pythias attended the church at Canton, O., on the morning of Jan. 10 and listened to a sermon by P. H. Welshimer. Six people were received into the fellowship of the church that morning.

Odd Fellows Attend Revival.
The Odd Fellows' Lodge at Girard, O., are appreciative of the effort of the local pastor, B. F. Leach, and on a recent evening they assembled at the lodge hall and went to the revival services at the church in a body.

War and Premillenarianism.
T. W. Bellingham spoke in his church at Benton Harbor, Mich., recently on "The Present War and Scriptural Prophecy." Among other things he said, "Therefore, if we find at the end of the present war the diplomats agree to a changed appearance to the map of Europe and we see ten kingdoms, mostly within the boundaries of which I have spoken, then we will know by the fulfilment of prophecy, the dispensation is drawing to its close." The sermon was based on the book of Daniel and was an interpretation much like that of the Adventists.

Presbyterian Preaches and Disciple Sings.
There are union meetings in the churches of Winamac, Ind., this month, and the Presbyterian preacher, Rev. Mr. Andrews, of the Presbyterian church, is doing the preaching while G. P. Crawford of the Disciples' church leads the singing.

School of Instruction.
The county organization of church recently held a school of instruction at Woodbine, Ia., in which George H. Nichol of Nevada, Don W. Crewdson of Missouri Valley, and M. O. Sansbury of Logan, delivered lectures. There were morning, afternoon and evening sessions.

News from the Foreign Society

The receipts for December amounted to $11,183, a gain over the corresponding month last year of $2,822. There was also a gain of 19 contributing churches. And there was a gain of $1,473.12 in the annuity gifts, and a gain of $1,608.95 in personal offerings.

The commission to the mission fields submitted a report to the executive committee that required two days to present. It was illuminating and inspiring. Secretary Stephen J. Corey spoke at Norwood, O., church, Sunday night, January 10, to a very large crowd for even that church which is quite used to a large attendance. His address was devoted to a delineation of the situation in the Far East.

B. L. Kershner, under date of December 7, says: "The progress of our work in the islands is scarcely less than startling, to one who coolly considers the facts of the case. There were 62 baptisms in the Tagalog district alone during the month of November. The number of copies of the Tagalog paper put in circulation this month will reach 12,000. School and medical work are in proportion."

E. A. Johnston, Congo, Africa, speaking of the ability of the natives to sing, says: "One is always touched when the teachers march up to the back path singing 'Bringing in the Sheaves.' If that song is not improved upon it is at least unusually well preserved both in words, and sentiment, and singableness in this language."

O. F. Bareus, Shanghai, China, reports eleven baptisms at a recent service.

R. A. Doan remained in China at the urgent request of the missionaries to help in some important evangelistic work.

Mrs. M. B. Madden reports seven baptisms at Osaka, Japan—four in the Osaka church and three in the new church at Tamadi. At both places there are earnest inquirers. The night school, opened only in October, has nearly fifty students and more have promised to enter at the end of the term.

Herbert Smith, of Lotumbe, Africa, reports the country quiet. The war has affected the missionaries but little. The state officers are doing their duty and things seem to be moving smoothly. Mail is being received regularly. The friends of the missionaries should not stop writing to the Congo.

E. P. Gish writes from Nanking, China, that the language school is fine and the new missionaries enjoy the study immensely. They have a very much more profound respect for the pioneers who went out and tackled the language without any one to help them in any way.

L. O. Bricker Discusses Divorce.

There were 750 divorce cases last year in the county where L. O. Bricker, of Atlanta, Ga., lives. This fact was the occasion of a sermon. "I expect to direct attention to the Georgia laws of marriage and divorce," said Dr. Bricker, "and I shall have no hesitaney in calling Georgia's laws on this vital matter the most slipshod and archaic and thoroughly inadequate of any state in the union. My principal plea will be to the people—for divorce, under any circumstances of law, is attributable in almost every instance to some wrong in married life. I will plead for more care in marriage; more thought and prudence. And I will plead for more honesty and patience and forbearance in married life—that, after all, is the true remedy for the so-called divorce evil."

Aeropolis Club at Columbia Meets.

The Aeropolis Club of Columbia University is composed of the teachers and students of that institution and Union Theological Seminary. At a recent meeting, Guy Inman spoke on the opportunities for religious work in the Spanish speaking countries of America. The club has an enrollment of forty. Prof. R. R. Hill is the president and is called the George Washington of the club. George B. Stewart is the Thomas Jefferson of the fellowship and it is said that they are looking for some one to be the Theodore Roosevelt.

Two Hundred and Fifty Read the Bible.

Uhrichsville, Ohio, church has enlisted 250 of its people in Bible reading recently. The weekly parish paper lays out the reading each week and indicates what use is to be made of the various scriptures.

State University Men Preach.

Gospel teams have gone out from the state university in Kentucky to churches of various denominations to hold evangelistic services. These men have been trained in the university Y. M. C. A. Marcus C. Redwine, a member of this team, supported by his fellow workers, spoke at Falmouth, Ky., church on a recent evening on "How to Deal with Temptation."

Twenty-three Years in Lexington, Ky.

On the first Sunday in the year, Mark Collis began his twenty-fourth year with the Broadway church of Lexington, Ky. At the morning service he reviewed the experiences of that period and the growth of the church. Mr. Collis came from Australia nearly forty years ago. This congregation has built another church, now maintains still another and supports a teacher on the foreign field. The aim for the near future is to double the Sunday-school and the auxiliary societies.

Advance of Norwood Church, Cincinnati.

Norwood church of Cincinnati made good growth last year under the leadership of C. R. Stauffer. The receipts showed a total of $12,221 of which $1,487 went to missions. The pastor married seventeen couples and conducted twenty-three funerals. There were 181 accessions, ninety-eight being inducted into the church by baptism. The net membership gain was 151 for the year.

President Todd Buys Parsonage.

E. M. Todd, president of Canton College, at Canton, Mo., was formerly pastor of the church and the Ladies' Aid Society built a parsonage for his use. The president did not like to move out of the very pleasant quarters in which he was comfortably installed so he negotiated the purchase of the property from the church.

A Second Anniversary.

Central Church of Richmond, Ind., of which W. R. Motley is pastor, celebrated its second anniversary Sunday, January 10, 1915. There were 502 in Sunday-school, 502 in church service and one of the largest audiences in the history of the church at the evening hour. During the day an offering of $500 was made and 32 came forward to take membership with the church, 9 by statement and 23 making the good confession. During the year 325 were added to the church, 400 to the Sunday-school and $5,000 was raised for all purposes. At present the church membership is 562 and the Sunday-school enrollment is 600.

Cincinnati Has Good Year.

Claire L. Waite in summing up 1914 for the Disciples churches of Cincinnati gave a very encouraging report. "The Disciples churches in Greater Cincinnati number 24 congregations. During 1914 they erected three new church buildings, and made larger gains in membership than for several years. They gained one new congregation, Oakley Church, A. M. Harvuot, minister. Its rapidly growing membership of 120 own their own lot and chapel. Norwood Church, under the efficient leadership of C. R. Stauffer, has paid $35,000 into the first section of their new building, and gained 179 members during the year. The Bible-school enrollment of 1,200 is the largest among the Greater Cincinnati Christian Bible Schools. Madison Avenue Church, Covington, celebrated the tenth year of the successful pastorate of Joseph W. Hagin. Henry H. Webb brought new life to the First Church, Covington. H. H. Moore, of Carrollton, Ky., has begun his pastorate with the Richmond Street Church with commendable enthusiasm. Columbia Church, under the energetic leadership of E. C. Booso, has had the best year in its history, 100 new members having been added to the roll. Progress has been made by Evanston, Walnut Hills, Central and most of the other congregations."

C. W. B. M. Has Country Meeting.

The C. W. B. M. at Greeley, Colo., held their January meeting at a beautiful country home of one of the members. They arranged to observe C. W. B. M. Day soon by having Mrs. Flint of Denver address them. Mrs. Flint is putting ten thousand dollars a year into missionary work.

Small Church With Large Gains.

East church of Toledo, Ohio, is one of the smaller churches of the city but there were forty-three additions the past year which is one fourth of the membership. There was a Bible-school annex built during the year. The money raised for all purposes was over $2,200. G. C. Neil is pastor.

Successful Pastor Resigns.

The church at Carthage, Ill., was successful last year and reports the money raised as $4,350 of which $900 went to the missionary causes. There have been seven added to the church the past two Sundays. The pastor A. L. Cole has resigned on account of his health.

Kansas City Church Revives Members.

A telegram from the secretary of Linwood Boulevard Church, Kansas City, states that fourteen accessions to the congregation were made in the first Sunday's services of the laymen's revival just beginning. Dr. B. A. Jenkins, pastor, is preaching. This is ample evidence that this is not a revival of the usual sort. An especial effort is being made to revive the church members.

Great Church Grows in Twenty Years.

Central church of Youngstown, Ohio, was reminded by its bulletin on the morning of January 3, that just twenty years had elapsed since the organization of their church. They began with 103 members and at the present time they report 1,023 members and on the last Sunday of the old year, there were 547 in the Sunday-school. This church now supports two missionaries on the foreign field, W. H. Erskine in Japan and S. G. Rothermel in India, the latter under the C. W. B. M. The church is making plans for a more aggressive work in the new year under the leadership of its pastor, Wm. Dunn Ryan.

Minister Disappears.

W. R. Burton, who has been the minister at Fairmont, Minn., has left home and no one knows his whereabouts. It is thought by some that he was suffering from some nervous ailment. Officials of the local church are communicating with his relatives in an effort to find him. His wife and little son have left for Boise, Idaho, where they will live with relatives.

Loses His Wallet.

Campbell Jobes of Bethany, W. Va., lost a wallet containing $548 in checks and thirty-nine dollars in bills while on a journey recently. Mr. Jobes is a retired minister and a trusteee of Bethany College and was en route from Washington, Pa., to Wheeling, W. Va. Efforts to locate the wallet have been unavailing and it is not known whether the loss was due to the light fingered gentry or not.

Governor Names Dr. Powell.

Governor McCreary, of Kentucky, has appointed Dr. E. L. Powell as chairman of the Kentucky Committee of Mercy. Dr. Powell has already called his committee together and they are planning an aggressive campaign. The Kentucky Committee of Mercy is a part of a national organization of the same name which has as its aim the coordination of the various activities that already are engaged in sending help to the women and children made destitute by the European war. Some thirty-five or forty people constitute the Kentucky Committee. The National Committee is headed by Senator Elihu Root, of New York, and the organization has the indorsement, it is said, of President Wilson. The Kentucky Committee intends looking over the ground and forming some plan of action.

More than a Thousand New Members.

A total of 1,265 persons have been received into full membership in the twelve churches of Des Moines since the close of the Sunday revival. According to the Christian Call, the weekly issued by University church, the following accessions have been received: Central, 373; University, 276; Capitol Hill, 150; Grant Park, 130; Park Avenue, 75; Highland Park, 58; Chesterfield, 66; Clifton Heights, 15; Ninth and Shaw, 27; Valley Junction, 13; Mondamin, 38; Grandview, 44.

Facts About North Yakima Church.

The annual meeting of First church, North Yakima, Wash., was held on the evening of Jan. 7, 1915. There was a total of $9,977.48 raised for all purposes and $762.77 was raised for missions. The church debt was reduced by $800 and it is expected that it will all be paid within the next two years. There were 102 additions to the church and a loss of membership of 114. There is a total membership of 1,082 with 765 living within the city limits. W. F. Turner is pastor.

Reports from Spokane, Wash.

Central church of Spokane, Wash., where J. E. Davis is pastor, publishes reports showing that this church received 156 new members during 1914 and that the resident membership is now 889. The money received in the budget fund was $4,797.89; for missions, $958.78 and for the building fund $2,535.79. The officers were ordained with special responsive service on Jan. 3.

Son of Alexander Procter Dies.

Rowland T. Procter, county surveyor at Independence, Mo., died recently following three years of illness. He was a son of Alexander Procter, who was for fifty years pastor of the Independence Church. L. J. Marshall, of Kansas City, officiated at the funeral services. Mr. Procter left a married daughter, but no sons.

Farmers Have Banquet in Church.

More than a hundred farmers have been holding a meeting in Greeley, Colo., discussing farming and insurance, the latter being of the mutual sort. They had a banquet in the Disciples Church which was served by the ladies of the church.

Drake Glee Club on the Road.

The glee club of Drake University of Des Moines, has been in demand this winter. They gave an entertainment at Colfax, Ia., recently. The solo work of Roy Campbell, Tolbert MacRae and Ralph Cook was specially complimented.

Pastor Closes Successful Pastorate.

L. I. Mercer is closing a successful pastorate at Lancaster, O. He had an attack of typhoid fever a while ago and has not recovered his health properly since. He has been at Lancaster for two years and the church has increased from 100 members to 304.

Aged Minister Dies.

W. A. Meloan died at Elsbury, Mo., the day after Christmas. He was more than seventy years of age and was a civil war veteran. He had been prevented from getting his diploma from the State University of Missouri by the school closing for the civil war. He joined the union army and reached the rank of lieutenant. In days gone by Mr. Meloan was a valued preacher of the Illinois churches, and held a pastorate at Rushville, Ill.

Missing Pastor is Found.

W. R. Burton of Fairmont, Minn., who was recently reported as missing, has been found and he is now in a sanitarium in Iowa, under the care of his brother who conducts the institution. The work of planning and building a new church, perfecting the gymnasium, and countless other tasks has broken down his health and subjected him to too great a mental strain.

Basket Dinner on New Year's Day.

The church at Van Wert, Ia., had a basket dinner on New Year's Day and at this function they received the reports of the past year. The total money received during the year was $15,597.64, part of which was raised for the building fund. The average attendance in the Bible-school was 125.

Successful Year at Wichita.

The report of the Central church for 1914 is one of the best in the history of that congregation. The pastor, Walter Scott Priest, delivered sermons and addresses to the number of 111. There were 190 persons received into the church, of whom 76 were on profession of faith. In all departments the sum of $10,606.67 was raised, of which $2,915.26 were paid for missions. In addition to this one family in the church gives $600 to keep the steamer "Oregon" in commission on the Congo river, Africa; three other families are paying on their subscription of $5,000 each to Phillips University at Enid, Okla., so that about $6,515.26 went for missions, benevolences and education. The church gave more for others than it did for itself. The pastor officiated at 64 weddings and conducted 46 funeral services, only seven of the persons buried being members of the Central church. The congregation is perfectly united and harmonious and the pastor is three months in the sixth year of his service with the congregation.

Convention in Southwestern Texas.

The southwestern district of Texas met in San Antonio in Central church the first week in January. Percy Cross, an evangelist, spoke on "Opportunity." C. M. Barnes, of Fowlerton, spoke on "Fellowship." He is district secretary and he presented an interesting report on the conditions in his part of the state. Hugh McLellan, pastor of the church that was host to the convention, advised the delegates to hear "The Messiah" while in the city.

Pastor Goes on Lecture Platform.

Claud F. Witty, former pastor at Plum Street church in Detroit, who resigned recently with rumors afloat that he was criticised by his church for his connection last year with Louis Patmont, has gone on the lecture platform. He will speak in local option contests in Minnesota this coming year.

The Waterloo, Ia., Report.

One hundred and one names have been added to the roll at Waterloo, Ia., church during 1914, while death and removals from the city have removed eleven names, leaving a net gain of 90 for the year. There are now 388 names on the roll, of which 334 are resident members. During the past 21 months the roll shows a net gain of 132 names. The treasurer's report showed that $2,627.46 was raised for the current expenses and paying off debt on the building. All current bills were reported paid and a balance of $17.74 on hand. The various auxiliary societies of the church raised $1,041.17, of which $235.03 was given to missions. The total amount raised by church and all societies was $3,668.63.

Young People on 'Possum Hunt.

A novel form of social was devised for the young men of First church, Coffeyville, Kans. They went 'possum hunting and were not able to find this elusive animal. Many hours were spent in hunting the interurban car, as the party got lost.

Pastor Returns to His Pulpit.

J. H. McWhirter has been ill in a hospital at Wichita, Kans., for three months but went back to his pulpit again in January at Anthony, Kans. He will preach only once a day for a time until his strength fully returns.

W. W. Dowling Recovers From Fall.

W. W. Dowling, veteran writer of Sunday-school literature, fell down stairs at his home recently and it was thought he was seriously injured. It turns out, however, that he was not hurt so much as was feared and he is about again. He has passed his seventy-fifth birthday.

Gives Financial Record of the Members.

The church at Texarkana, Tex., has issued a membership directory of a very unusual sort this winter. It not only contains the names and addresses of the members but after each name is the amount given to the church and to missions during the past year. The report has stood in lieu of much financial exhortation this winter. There are 320 members and they gave on their budget last year $3,380.52. The offerings to missions were $541.42.

Bible Questions Answered by the Best Progressive Scholarship

Printed on India Paper. By printing on the best Bible paper the four large octavo volumes of the original edition are condensed into one. It is a library in one handy volume for the student's desk.

Correlation of Parts. By common consent the book as a work of reference is strikingly accurate and for convenience of use unsurpassed. The real value of the cross-references only now becomes apparent to the reader when at last he can use the whole work as a single volume.

International Character of Work. The work is international, having been written by 96 specialists, of whom exactly one-third wrote in a foreign language. Roughly it may be said that over a third of the writers belong to England, nearly a third to Scotland (13), Ireland (23), or America (12), and a third use German (28), Dutch (3), or French (1). This international character of the work has given the editors a free hand in selecting the scholars to whom to entrust the various subjects. The only rule has been—"the best available."

Un-Sectarian Character. In the next place, the work is un-sectarian. To say of a work which professes to be scientific that in the selection of writers ecclesiastical connection or independence counts nothing is really superfluous. It is interesting and encouraging, however, to note the result—that, as a matter of fact, among its writers in English are Jews, Episcopalians of various schools, Methodists, Congregationalists, Presbyterians, and Baptists, besides others who do not perhaps represent any specific religious communion.

Thoroughly Modern. No work of this kind is more modern or more authoritative than Encyclopedia Biblica. This is not a reprint from wornout plates but a beautiful piece of printing setting forth conceptions of biblical scholarship held in the great theological seminaries at this hour. Every seminary trained preacher of the past decade has used this work and knows its value.

Equal to 24 Ordinary Books. To secure the equivalent of twenty-four ordinary books which would sell at $1.50 each for a total of six dollars has brought the best learning to the door of the humblest man. Ignorance of biblical problems on the part of ministers and Sunday-school teachers has had one cause removed.

An Epoch-Marking Work. As a mere volume printed and published it admittedly marks an epoch in several respects—for example, in the fact that more than a million words were practically all in type at one time. As a piece of editorial workmanship it has few equals in respect of the skill with which the parts have been, not pinned together, but intimately and organically united. As a singularly weighty contribution to the biblical science of the time, its impulse is admitted perhaps most markedly by those who dissent most strongly from the views defended in some of its articles. It will be impossible to understand the movement of thought on biblical subjects during the next quarter of a century without taking account of the "Encyclopedia Biblica."

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desire nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

The Supremacy of Christ and the Spiritual Life

OF PROFOUND SIGNIFICANCE TO THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST IN THEIR TASK OF CONSTRUCTING AN INNER WORLD OF SPIRITUAL LIFE IS THEIR HISTORIC PROPOSE TO MAKE CHRIST THEIR SUPREME AUTHORITY, HIS MIND THEIR SUPREME REVELATION, AND HIS WILL THEIR SUPREME LAW.

From the beginning the Disciples have set the supremacy of Christ in the forefront of the ideals they hoped to realize.

Their thinking ran in about this logical order:

1. The denominational order of things in Christendom is sinful. Christ's Church should be one.

2. The way to unity is to go back to the apostolic Church and restore the unity that their prevailed.

3. The principle of unity in the apostolic Church was personal attachment to Jesus Christ and allegiance to him. He was all and in all. It was his spirit that quickened their hearts; it was his words they treasured as revelations from God; it was in his person that the Father was unveiled; his unfinished work became their program, and the hope of seeing him again comforted and inspired them in times of distress and in the hour of death.

But such relationship to Jesus is, obviously, a spiritual relationship. It lifts the whole problem of unity into the sphere of the moral and spiritual, for it is in this sphere and only in this sphere that Jesus assumed authority. Not only did he not claim authority in any other sphere, but the apostolic Church at no time appealed to his authority to define its action in any other sphere. Guided by his spirit the primitive disciples developed their own thought-life and their own organization.

Time and again their discussions and contentions would have been easily composed if they could have appealed to some authoritative instruction of their Lord. But we do not find them doing so.

Their Master had not fastened upon them a particular theology—he was in bigger business than that. He had not drawn up for them the plans and specifications for organizing the Church—his mission was to create in his disciples a Life that could be trusted to work out its own forms of organization.

It is by the clear apprehension of the moral nature of Christ's authority that we Disciples of Christ should be enabled both to avoid the errors of our past and to discover a depth and seriousness of meaning in our familiar ideal which few if any of our teachers have interpreted to us, and of which, certainly, our own souls have not been vividly aware.

The outstanding error of our Disciples history consists in this, that we have rushed into an institutional application of our principles without first establishing them in our inner spiritual life. This, as we have seen, is true of our ideal of Christian unity and of our ideal of restoring primitive Christianity—both of them spiritual principles primarily, whose outward realization and value depend upon their being first taken as structural principles of a personal inner life of the soul.

The same error has befallen us in our application of this principle of Christ's supreme authority. We have utilized it to give dynamic to our arguments for certain externals of religion—the polity of the Church, the administration of the Lord's Supper and the mode of baptism. But all these, and all such, are matters upon which we have not the slightest record that the authority of Christ registered itself. On the contrary, from the record, taken as a whole, it would seem to be clear that it was our Lord's divine purpose to leave all such considerations to the free, unconstrained outworking of the Christian experience guided by the Holy Spirit.

It was clearly his purpose that the disciples to whom he had imparted his life-secret should constitute a social fellowship, an organic body, a Church. But he gave no legislation for the conduct of such a Church.

It was clearly his will, as expressed in his parting Commission, that his Church should impart his life-secret to all mankind and baptize, that is, induct into the fellowship of their body, all who accepted their teaching. He commanded baptism, but he did not interest himself in the particular physical mode by which this baptism should be administered.

And as to the Lord's Supper, he showed his disciples how they might, if they were prompted with love for him, keep tryst with his spirit by eating bread and drinking wine in memory of him whenever they were gathered together. A beautiful and almost unique feature of the Lord's Supper is that it rests not upon the foundation of a command of Jesus, but upon a singularly delicate suggestion of his, to which the Church has responded, of her own initiative, with a rite increasing in meaning and beauty and helpfulness as the day of her Lord's appearing draws nigh.

It needs to be reaffirmed constantly, and with boldness, and in clean-cut, unambiguous words, that the realm in which Christ manifests his authority is not the theological or scientific realm, nor the ecclesiastical or institutional realm, but the realm of the moral and spiritual life.

In the realm of the moral and spiritual life he is supreme.

He is the Lord of the conscience!

Where conscience conflicts with his will, his revelation, there is unrest of soul until his will is accepted, and when his will is accepted conscience and all the inner life are transformed.

* * *

Have the Disciples of Christ ever adequately realized that in pleading for the supremacy of Christ in Christendom they were dealing with a principle that struck so deep into personal life? That in committing themselves peculiarly to his sole authority they could not meet their Lord without shame unless they brought with them a spiritual and ethical character superior to those other Christians who, by hypothesis, do not make Christ supreme?

It is a glorious plea, this ideal of Christ's supremacy.

But it is an immeasurably solemn responsibility for those who proclaim it!

Do we Disciples make Christ supreme in our lives and in our fellowship in any sense in which Methodists, Presbyterians and others do not? Have we discovered and put into practice a spiritual law of his which others have disregarded?

Do the Disciples take the moral insights of Jesus more seriously than does the rest of Christendom? Do we represent a more spiritual principle than others? Are we described by the world as the Friends are described, as Tolstoi is described, as many leaders of modern social ideals are described—as those who are with distinctive purposefulness endeavoring to put into practice the laws by which Christ lived?

Is there any peculiar affinity between the Disciples' movement and, say, Miss Jane Addams? She is striving to obey Christ, to live up to his laws of personal and social well-being. She takes Christ's ethics radically. Does she, do we, feel any parallelism of purpose?

As a people have we had an authoritative solving word to say in the conflict of labor and capital?

Has our century of loyalty to his authority developed within us such a character that we are looked to in the present world-crisis for a commanding word of peace?

These questions are not asked with intent to bring reproach upon us, but to suggest the way that lies open to us, whatever our past failure, if we are in earnest to make Christ supreme in our lives and in the world.

This ideal of ours is a profound spiritual ideal. It has to do with theological doctrine and ecclesiastical order only in a secondary sense, if at all. But it applies directly to our inner life, the sphere of character and insight and motive and satisfaction of soul.

The world is impatient with the bickering of those who claim Christ's authority for this and that device of Church organization and ritual.

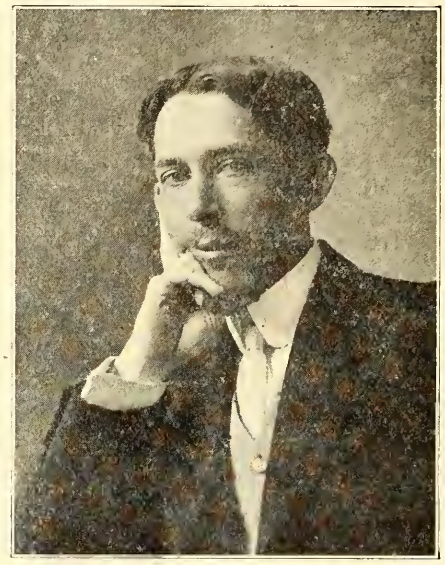
But the triumph of Christ waits until he shall find a people to realize the Disciples' historic ideal of making him supreme in their lives.

Mission Scouting in South America

BY S. G. INMAN.

In the statement concerning "The Commission on Latin America" of the Disciples of Christ, published on The Woman's Page a few weeks ago, mention was made of the South American trip of S. G. Inman. Mr. Inman kept a careful diary of his long journey which will probably be published in book form at an early date. In the meantime, this brief account will be of interest, especially to the members and friends of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

SAILING from New York the latter part of February, 1914, under the spell of the wonderful St. Louis meeting of the Men and Millions Movement, I had two weeks in the little island of Porto Rico, one of the most fertile and thickly populated places on the globe. Here one finds Uncle Sam in the laboratory, working out the Colonial problem. While one who has lived with the Latins a long time rather feels like quoting to our uncle the caution of Kipling about the man who tried "to hustle the East," as he sees how the government is pouring out its resources to teach the people English, and speed them on their road to development; yet he certainly cannot but be astounded at the progress of the island since 1898, and feel all kinds of thrills of patriotism when he sees the great work of our public schools, sanitary commissions, and agricultural experts.



Mr. S. G. Inman

THE WORK AT PORTO RICO.

Our own body of workers in Porto Rico are carrying their part of this program of progress in a most admirable way. I never saw a group who were more anxious to give themselves entirely to this work. While I was there, they went over the program of activities in a most careful and scientific way, inviting the experience of experts from the outside, to see if these activities, especially that of our orphanages, could be made to serve better in the rapidly changing environment. It is a great thing to see our workers taking from the government, the public schools, other missionaries, and wherever they could find it, help for making everything expended count for the most.

One can not help noticing the wonderful change as he goes from American Porto Rico to English Jamaica. In the one, white duck is the prevalent dress, for its comfort; in the other the clothes are black, for that is dignified. In Porto Rico they were going through a brief period of "hard times" but every one was optimistic. In Jamaica the "hard times" was chronic and no one expected much better for the future. I was much surprised to hear many of the leading citizens, not Americans, but English or of English extraction, speak of how desirable would be annexation to the United States, the newer country, and the one that takes all their exports.

IN JAMAICA.

Our work in Jamaica, while small, stands well among the people. Our church in the city of Kingston is on a prominent street, and well attended by a good class of people. Our chapels in the country districts are splendid buildings, which say to the community in no uncertain tones that we are there as a permanent force for righteousness. Our missionaries told me that our native men are superior in education to those of any other church there. The work among ignorant, superstitious negroes is exceedingly difficult, and the industrial school, which they have been calling for, and other equipment which will aid the people in solving their awful economic problems, should be promptly furnished.

From Jamaica, I went over to see what James Bryce calls "the most wonderful liberty man ever took with Nature." Much has been written about the canal, but nothing ever will be written that can give one an adequate idea of this greatest of the world's achievements. You must see it, to get its message. An American comes away from it a living, breathing Fourth of July. There is only one thing that saddens, and that is to think that after we have done such wonderful material things for the zone and for the whole little Republic of Panama, from killing her mosquitoes to organizing her a strong financial system, yet we have done practically nothing for the spiritual life of the Spanish speaking population, nearly half a million people. In Panama City there is one Methodist church where services and a little school are held in Spanish, with two American ordained missionaries and one Spaniard. These workers hold services also in a rented building in Colon—a work just begun. And this is all, for the whole Spanish speaking population of the republic, including the part controlled by the United States. When one thinks of the constant procession of the world's people that will be going through here, he remains appalled at this neglect of the Christian Church.

TOWARD THE SOUTHERN CROSS.

As the good ship "Huasco" turned her nose toward the Southern Cross, and we found ourselves out in the great Pacific, it seemed as if we were bidding goodbye to all that was dear, and striking out for an unknown land. But in the city of Lima, standing on the main plaza, watching the exciting groups discussing the latest turn in the revolution, and beholding on one side the great cathedral in which the bones of Pizarro rest, and on the other the portico from which San Martin declared the death of Spanish rule in America—here we were as much at home, as in good old Mexico itself. And to add still more to the home feeling, there was the good old southern hospitality dispensed me by our United States minister, the Hon. Benton McMillen (alumnus of Transylvania, ex-Governor of Tennessee and loyal Disciple) and his charming wife and daughter. The missionaries of the South American Evangelical Union and the Methodist Episcopal Church, the two bodies working in Peru were most cordial, not only in assisting me in my study of conditions, but urging us to come to this great needy field, and help them cover the two-thirds of this great nation that has not yet heard the simple gospel. No country I have visited has seemed to be so lacking in leadership, in every department of life, political, educational, spiritual, as Peru, and the more one studies the question, the more hopeless it seems, without we give them the one and only thing powerful enough to remake a people like this—the gospel of Christ.

MISSION WORK IN CHILE.

The contrast in getting into Chile is very great. Here one finds a hardy people, determination in their faces, and purpose in their movement. They are proud indeed of their war record (which certainly is a good one) of their army and navy, of their growing dominance of the Pacific, and their political stability. The peon or "roto" as he is called here, has little of the brow-beaten, hopeless expression so common among the lower classes in Mexico, nor are the church doors and railway stations crowded with beggars. Yet Chile has her political and economic problems, and while I was there the rumblings of a "bread war" were heard. The Roman Church, while losing power as a spiritual force, is gaining daily as a political force. It is of course the State Church and receives about one million dollars, Chilian, annually from the government for its support.

The Presbyterians and Methodists have strong work in Chile, and yet outside the big cities, Santiago, Valparaiso, Concepcion, etc., the field has hardly been touched. Caste is very strong, and as missionary work began with the lower classes, it has not been able to get a hold of the more educated, yet the "Instituto Ingles," where I was entertained in Santiago, has its patronage from the very best families of Chile. While it is a Presbyterian school, it is practically self-supporting, and though requiring all the pupils to take Bible study and attend the devotional hour, it does not press the pupils to become church members. The school is a moralizing force in a wide circle that extends into Bolivia, from where a large number of its young men come.

A RARE EXPERIENCE.

A trip over the Trans-Andean railroad from the Pacific to the Atlantic is one of those rare experiences which leaves a lifetime impression. For a whole day one is up above the clouds climbing around the sides of peaks from four to eight thousand feet higher than Mount Blanc. The snow and glacier covered peaks of Tipungato and Aconcagua (24,000 ft.) are the sublimest sights one sees outside of the Himalayas.

It takes twenty-four hours on a fast express to go across Argentina, from the foot of the Andes to Buenos Aires. It is much like going through the prairies of Kansas, with wheat fields and wind mills everywhere. In Chile I had been principally interested in people; here I found everything tended to direct my attention to things.

Buenos Aires is to South America what New York is to North America. In spite of all I had read and heard of its immenseness, and many marvelous features, I was astounded to find such a city as has been built here by a new country out of distinctly Latin elements. It immediately inspires one with more confidence in the future of Latin America.

THE GREAT NEED THE MORAL NEED.

But as this ends the fifth half of my journey, I will end this letter here, only adding that everywhere on the trip, as I have addressed all kinds of audiences, union meetings of the missionaries, educational institutions, etc., in Spanish and English as well as in private talks, and have told the story of the Men and Millions Movement of the Disciples of Christ, and of our intention to do more of our part toward the development of these great countries, my reception has been most hearty. In interviews with representative men of the educational, political and literary world, in all these countries, the impression is ever increased that the greatest need is the moral need, and that efforts made to this end, with social service used as the point of contact, will receive in this Latin world a hundredfold, and in the world to come life eternal. Let our great brotherhood measure up to these wonderful opportunities!

The Changing Order

A Letter From the Commission of the Foreign Society.

BY STEPHEN J. COREY.

THE other day, we were walking through the streets of Chuchow with Dr. Osgood and Mr. Dannenberg, our missionaries there. They took us to the great Confucian temple, which for centuries has been the chief center of reverence and worship in the city. The place covers a large area and is a very interesting succession of outer courts, inner courts and shrines. We were struck with the apparent condition of decay, which characterized the whole place. The temple was deserted and, on feast days (the missionaries tell us), few people came.

On crossing the large inner court, just before the Holy of Holies, we noticed some very familiar looking chalk lines on the ground. On asking Dr. Osgood the meaning of them, he stated that he had been laying out a tennis court here for the use of the officials of the city, and that they had suggested this as the best place. The wall of the outer temple court formed one backstop, and the sacred shrine of Confucius the other. Here the chief officials of the city and the leading men of the town exercised their bodies in modern tennis, in the cool of the day.

AT THE SHRINE OF CONFUCIUS.

We went into the temple, or shrine, to Confucius, and saw the sacred tablet to his memory, before which incense had burned for centuries. On the tablet were inscribed the words, "The Great Holy One, The Supreme Teacher, Confucius." The shrine was dirty, the walls in decay, and the various memorials to the great sage covered with cobwebs. After we had observed this shrine, we went further into another court, at the end of which was a large hall, where in olden days the teachers lectured on the divine merits of Confucius. This is now in disuse, and, for a number of years, there have been no Confucian lecturers here. We noticed that the walls of this hall were covered with great placards, on which Chinese characters were inscribed, and on two of the sides were many colored Sunday-school picture scrolls, with Chinese printing at the bottom. Our missionaries informed us that in this hall was held our Chinese Christian Convention of last year. The banners on the wall were gospel mottoes and Christian hymns in Chinese. In this hall, which has echoed with the teachings of Confucius for centuries, and where thousands of people have been taught to worship him, our Christian convention held its sessions for days; and all of this at the invitation of the leading Chinese of the city.

EDUCATION VERSUS IDOLATRY.

The other day, we were journeying inland, in a thickly populated district, to study conditions among the people and look out possibilities for new work. One houseboat stopped at a little village along the bank of the canal and we walked through the streets of this quaint place, our missionary speaking to the people of Christianity and distributing picture tracts to those who came to listen. We wandered through the village and out through the country, between the fields of rice and beans. In the distance we saw a temple and decided to visit it and study its peculiarities. In reaching the sacred building we found that it was a Buddhist temple of some pretensions, which had been standing for some hundreds of years. We entered the place and found our way around the huge outer court, which had been erected to keep out the evil spirits. On crossing the inner court and approaching the central part of the temple, which in these places is ordinarily given over to the large shrine of Buddha and his gilded image, we found that strange changes had taken place. This large central room had been converted into a modern schoolhouse with cement floor and comfortable desks and large American windows had been placed in the sides. Within was a country school of forty boys, with a Chinese teacher giving them instructions in geography and other branches of modern learning. Here was a schoolroom of alert, bright-faced Chinese children, with their little piles of modern schoolbooks on each desk.

IDOLS MAKE WAY FOR SCHOOLS.

Our missionary asked the teacher about the idols which had formerly occupied this room. He smiled and took us to a little alcove at the side. Here we found the huge image of Buddha sitting on a low platform and huddled all about it in a crowded group the various idols of the temple. They had been crowded into this minor place, in the temple once erected for their sole benefit, in order that the modern school might have room in the building. We learned that all over this province, a similar thing had been done with the Buddhist temples.

A few days after our experience in the country temple, we were visiting the institutions of a great Chinese Confucianist who is trying to help his country. His name is Chang Chien, and he is a leader in President Shi Kai's cabinet. His home is in Nantungchow, where we have a mission, and it is of his work in this city of which I speak.

CHINA SEEKING HELP.

We were taken first to a girls' normal school, constructed with the money of this rich man, who owns great cotton mills in this center. We found he had taken one of the leading Buddhist temples of the city and entirely transformed its once sacred buildings in order to make this training school for women teachers for China. He had spent $20,000 in remodeling the old buildings and erecting new ones in this great temple compound. Here he has 250 young Chinese women, who are being trained in school methods, from the kindergarten up to the high school. His purpose is to train in this institution the leaders for the new modern schools throughout his province. He is calling on the mission schools to furnish him instructors and teachers to carry out this plan.

In another part of the city, he has constructed a similar normal school for young men, and it accommodates 480 teachers whom he is training for their task.

A CHINESE ORPHANAGE.

Five miles from the city, he has built a great orphanage, which has over 500 orphans in it, and he has asked our mission to put one of our missionaries in charge, while he pays the expenses. He has said that we might teach Christianity in the school, but we are helpless to take advantage of his offer because of our lack of workers.

In another part of the city, he has built a large hospital and has urged that our mission doctor direct it. At present we have no doctor for our own hospital in this great city because of our lack of money. We have a young physician under appointment for this place, who has just come to China, but he must study the language a year before he can do the work in our institution.

In this whole district the field is wide open; there are 6,000,000 people and at present we only have three missionaries to carry on the work. A strong educational man, who understands pedagogy and the modern school system, could direct the educational development of this whole section. This public-spirited man of great wealth and high ideals longs for us to help him, for his struggle is a difficult one. And this field is but typical of other great districts in China.

WHAT IT MEANS

What does it mean that the temple of Confucius in Chuchow is practically abandoned; that the inner court is turned into a tennis ground and that our mission convention was held in the sacred Confucian lecture-hall? It does not mean that the people of Chuchow are all turning to Christianity, for they are not; it does not mean that their lives are any better than they were before, for they are not; but it does mean that the moorings of the past are broken; that the sacredness of their aged institutions has, for the time at least, largely passed away; it does mean that the people are drifting, that they are unattached, that they know not whither they are going, and with the doubt which has arisen in their minds concerning their own religions, they are fast moving toward a position of doubt in everything.

AN OPEN DOOR.

What does it mean that the gods of the Buddhist temples have been displaced with modern schoolrooms and that the idols have been huddled in a corner to give place to the teaching of physiology and geography? It does not mean that the ignorance and superstition of the Chinese people have been overturned in a night; it does not mean that the teachings of Christ have gripped their hearts; but it does mean that they are open, as never before, for the truth; that the church of Jesus Christ has the greatest responsibility of its history resting upon it. China is wide open; the barriers are broken down; the people are eager to learn; the church can take possession, if she will. If, in this hour of transition, we do not accept our responsibility and send these people sufficient teachers and preachers, ere long the door will be closed again, the more ignorant will return with renewed zeal to their idols and superstition; the more learned, with their moorings broken, will drift into atheism, as have the great multitude of educated in Japan.

AMERICA'S OPPORTUNITY.

This great sickening war in Europe is affecting even China. The chief topic of conversation out here is this war among Christian nations. America, with its peaceful intentions and fair dealing with the East, stands out as the ideal of the Chinese. They intertwine their new republican flag with ours; they say we are on the other side of the Pacific—sister nations; they look to us for teaching, for direction, for inspiration. We have a tremendous advantage, in this time of discord and bloodshed. They listen with eagerness to what America has to teach them; our missionaries are in high favor; the hour has struck for the American church to take swift advantage of this opening of the Orient. What we do in the next ten years will mean more than the work of the succeeding one hundred years. China looks to America; America has the gospel; this is the psychological moment and God calls us to the task with tremendous emphasis.

How "The Congo" Came to be Written

Perhaps the most remarkable poem written by an American last year was the one entitled "The Congo," by Vachel Lindsay. Reviews of this work have already been printed in The Christian Century. The following excerpt from a letter written by Mr. Lindsay to a friend will afford the reader an enlightening glimpse into a modern poet's workshop. It will be of especial interest to Disciples because of the presence of Dr. Burnham and R. Ray Eldred in the background of the story.

WELL, I was in the national-theme mood, and on a Sunday in October Rev. F. W. Burnham was preaching here in Springfield in my old home church. He spoke, in passing, but with deep emotion, of the departure from this world of his old schoolmate, R. Ray Eldred, a former fellow student in Eureka College, Illinois. Eldred had died while a missionary in Africa—one of the heroes of our denomination. It may not be to the point, but Eldred's children were a little later adopted by Dr. H. T. Morrison and his wife, members of our congregation.

As it happens, I believe in missions. My sister and brother-in-law are medical missionaries in China.

THE DROWNING OF ELDRED.

It was the second sermon in which Burnham had mentioned Eldred. This time he particularized, spoke of the death by drowning of the missionary while attempting to swim a branch of the Congo, weakened by fever and hardship and overconfident of his power to breast the tide.

"Congo, Congo, Congo, Congo, Congo. Congo," I said to myself. The word began to haunt. It echoed with the war drums and cannibal yells of Africa. It seemed the perfection of tone color.

I had a new poem! I thought it over, walking home. It was all sketched, including the principal refrains, before one in the afternoon, and time for Sunday dinner. It took me two months at least to write it, and another month to learn to recite it.

But that Sunday morning it was outlined in substance as you read it today. In addition, before night I had a list of colors for my palette—gobs of yellow, red and black paint. Here is my color list:

I had browsed through Stanley's "Darkest Africa" when a boy. There was stamped on the back, if you remember, a great black solid silhouette of Africa, with one gleaming river crawling through, the Congo that Stanley had explored. I wanted to give that silhouette. And I wanted to give the word Congo such a setting that it would convey the same weird thrill I had felt over Stanley's discovery of the Pigmies and of the Mountains of the Moon. Both the race and the mountains had been thought legendary before his time.

I had seen the dances of the Dahomey Amazons at the Chicago fair when I was a boy. I wanted to reiterate the word Congo, and get some Dahomey into it. Among my notes were songs used by Williams and Walker before Walker died. Do you remember "In my castle on the River Nile I'm going to live in elegant style, baboon butler to guard the door, diamond carpet on the floor?" Then there was a song "My Zulu Babe," where Williams as the buck and Walker as the lady used to appear in black tights and brief ostrich-feathered skirts and go prancing in and out of the stage jungle in a mock wooing. They magically conveyed the voodoo power of Africa. The whole white audience turned into jungle savages and yelled with a sort of gorilla delight.

"MUMBO JUMBO WILL HOO-DOO YOU."

It was the Africa of the romantic negro's imagination, a scrap of black grand opera, if not the actual Africa. Did I put all these things into my poem? No. But some of these things helped, with their implications, whispers, echoes. I hoped to imply Joseph Conrad's fatalistic atmosphere in his story "Heart of Darkness." I reached for the spiritual African fever he shows us there, that is sure death to the soul. In my devices and settings for such phrases as "Mumbo Jumbo will hoodoo you," I often had him consciously in mind.

Way back in 1908 I had attempted several magazine articles, just after the Springfield anti-Negro riots. Those riots shook my young soul then as much as the war in Europe has done. It was my first revelation of the savagery of the white man. On the word of one white liar, who afterwards confessed, a whole Negro street was burned and many black people killed, and there were two brutal lynchings of innocent Negroes in three days, the second while the town was full of state militia. My magazine articles about this were very properly rejected. But I wanted to do better in

FROM "THE CONGO."

"Then along that river, a thousand miles
The vine-snared trees fell down in files.
Pioneer angels cleared the way
For a Congo paradise, for babes at play,
For sacred capitals, for temples clean.
Gone were the skull-faced witch-men lean.
There, where the wild ghost-gods had wailed
A million boats of the angels sailed
With oars of silver, and prows of blue
And silken pennants that the sun shone through.
'Twas a land transfigured, 'twas a new creation.
Oh, a singing wind swept the negro nation
And on through the backwoods clearing flew:—
'Mumbo-Jumbo is dead in the jungle.
Never again will he hoo-doo you.
Never again will he hoo-doo you.'"

rhyme. I wanted to bear such testimony as I could as to what was learned in that dreadful time and vindicate those studies.

What might be called the intellectual outline of the poem: The Basic Savagery of the Negro, His High Spirits and Minstrelsy and the Hope of His Religion, is the result of the long interviews in preparing those articles. Just after the riots I had talked with our two colored lawyers interminably, and I had asked a list of questions of a select group of ten colored preachers, and compiled results. And I had interviewed endless "prominent citizens" among the whites. Their answers to the same questions were in startling contrast to the first compilation.

A SPRINGFIELD LECTURE.

The next winter one of my lectures for the Springfield Y. M. C. A. was "The Negro: his contribution to our citizenship; sorrow-songs, minstrelsy, vaudeville, folklore and oratory."

One of the studies I made at that time has recently appeared in the Negro magazine, the Crisis, in the issue of November, 1914. It is called "The Golden-faced People." Then I had in my list some of the things "Uncle Tom's Cabin" meant, and the emancipation proclamation. I had in mind the affair of Coatesville, Pa., and the other burnings alive of Negroes, some of them guilty Negroes, many of them innocent. I put in my list the songs of Stephen Collins Foster. I put in the list my memories of "The Souls of Black Folk," that beautiful tragic book by the black leader W. E. B. Du Bois. I might add, for the other side of the picture, that I had seen on Eleventh avenue, New York, north from Fifty-ninth street, many saloons where the Negroes seemed eight feet high and the degraded white men who waited upon them about four feet high, and they all drank liquor not served from the bar, but from barrels piled high against the wall in gloomy grandeur. Going through a score of these barrel-houses in one evening, on behalf of a certain religious institution, I accumulated a jungle impression that remains with me yet, and shall remain for many a day to come.

JOSEPH CONRAD'S INFLUENCE.

Perhaps no one thing influenced me more than the story I have before mentioned, Joseph Conrad's "Heart of Darkness." I wanted to reiterate the word Congo, and the several refrains in a way that would echo stories like that. I wanted to suggest the terror, the reeking swamp fever, the forest splendor, the black-lacquered loveliness, and above all, the eternal fatality of Africa that Conrad has written down with so sure a hand.

I do not mean to say, now that I have done, that I recorded all these things in rhyme. But every time I rewrote the "Congo," I reached down toward them.

Not a Fable and Not in Slang

BY EDGAR DeWITT JONES

HE WAS just twenty-five years old when he was graduated from the seminary and accorded with special honors the degree of "Bachelor of Theology." He was brilliant of mind, golden of speech, good of heart, and fair to look upon.

In law he would have graced and adorned the profession and as a corporation attorney he could have bartered his talents for gold in a steady stream.

In politics he might have been congressman, governor or United States senator, who knows?

In medicine or surgery he might have become a physician or surgeon of renown, with fees as famous as his skill.

In commerce his gifts might have commissioned him a captain of industry with a private yacht and a summer home among the Thousand Islands and a winter residence in Florida.

As it was he gave his all, which was a lot, to the church and the cure of souls. He took a charge at $1,200 per annum and made good. In four years he transformed that church from a fourth rate organization to the first and best in town.

Then he went to a church in a city at $3,000 a year with an expense budget three times the size of the village living.

He married, not wealthily but wisely and well, and four children came to crown his home. He was what is known as a popular preacher, everybody liked him, many loved him. His parish was as princely as his heart and that was royally wide. He served all classes and answered all calls for the very love of God and man.

He was so busy, this good man was, looking after other people's business, that he had no time to look after his own and alas! no one else was looking out for him or his family.

There were millionaires in this minister's congregation but in proportion to possessions he was the most generous giver of them all.

His salary came to $5,000, but excepting a modest insurance policy he saved no money for the good reason that there was none to save. He lived in comfort and midst refinement, yet as close to starvation as the average day laborer of the lowliest walk.

Then suddenly when scarcely forty-five, like lightning from a cloudless sky, he was stricken low, helpless and invalided for life.

His church, shocked, at first bore with him lying low upon their bounty, then called a special meeting of the officers to consider his case. The members of the board rode to the meeting in their touring cars, passed a resolution of sympathy, voted him $250, and called his successor.

There were some sad hearts in that city because of the quenching of the light of this bright particular star. Yet there were also those who once praised his golden speech and helped to wear his constitution to a ragged edge, who said, "How improvident he was," and one even made bold to quote most unctuously I Timothy 5:8: "But if any provideth not for his own and specially for those of his own house he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel."

The family, with the helpless invalid, moved to a side street and into a smaller house. The oldest son and daughter were taken from the university in the midst of their college careers in order to assume the task of family support and right royally they met the emergency. Since their return from college however these two young persons have not seemed particularly interested in church work. One critic observing this sagely remarked that it was usually so with ministers' children.

On warm and pleasant days the uncomplaining wife wheels her wreck of brilliance and power along the shaded streets and wide avenues where the limousines and electrics pass in steady and splendid procession. Not infrequently she stops and rests herself on the great square where stands in Gothic goodness the structure to which her husband gave his all. And sometimes she gazes in curious silence upon the electric sign over the entrance to the auditorium where in letters that shine white by day and flare forth with yellowish brilliancy by night, are the words: "CHURCH OF CHRIST."

A Prayer for the Church

O GOD, we pray for thy Church, which is set today amid the perplexities of a changing order, and face to face with a great new task. When we compare her with other human institutions we rejoice, for there is none like her. But when we judge her by the mind of her Master we bow in pity and contrition. * * * Baptize her afresh in the life-giving Spirit of Jesus. Grant her a new birth though it be with the travail of repentance and humiliation. Bestow upon her a readier responsiveness to duty, a swifter compassion with suffering, and an utter loyalty to the will of God. Help her to proclaim boldly the coming of the kingdom and the doom of all who resist it. Fill her with the prophet's scorn of tyranny and with a Christ-like tenderness for the heavy-laden. * * * Give her faith to espouse the cause of the people, and in their hands that grope after freedom and light to recognize the bleeding hands of the Christ. Bid her cease from seeking her own life lest she lose it. Make her valiant to give up her life to humanity, that like her crucified Lord she may mount by the path of the cross to a higher glory.

THE SPIRIT OF UNITY.

WITH growing emphasis the ideals of Christian unity are being stressed. Not alone in speech upon the theme, but in the actual facing of religious conditions under a divided Church, and in the effort to remedy those conditions is the assurance given.

One of the commonplaces of the present time is the gathering of the men of different churches in general brotherhood or community meetings for the discussion of civic, ethical and religious problems connected with the welfare of the community, as well as for social enoyment.

Every such meeting makes upon its participants the impression that a closer fellowship among all Christian men would be of enormous advantage in promoting the work of the Kingdom of God. It is not difficult to convince people that by united action the men of a community can drive out the saloon, clean out the Augean stables of municipal corruption, suppress the traffic in virtue, and safeguard youth and inexperience. Not less evident is it that the more impressive ideals of Christianity, the elevation of the home, the promotion of religious education, and the enrichment of the spiritual life would even more definitely profit from unity.

When men stop to consider the uneconomical conditions under which church work is carried on, with the necessary overlapping and duplication involved in the rival activities of churches, they cannot fail to see the error and pathos of the situation. After years of simultaneous effort on the part of competing congregations in a town, it is too often true that here has been little if any progress made in the realization of the ideals cherished by our Lord. If these churches were united and their number reduced to the actual needs of the community, there would be a great lessening of friction, a far greater impress upon the community, and enough money saved from waste to build gradually but surely a noble edifice, the equal of any cathedral, for the common use of the Church of God and as a monument to the religious life of the place.

JEWISH RELIEF WORK IN PALESTINE.

THE Jewish interests in the Holy Land are very numerous. There are the old groups of Jews, mostly gathered in places like Jerusalem, Hebron, Nablus and Tiberias, and representing the refugee Spanish Jews of the middle ages and the later Russian Jews escaped from the pale. These are the regular pensioners of Jewish funds.

Then there are the newer industrial colonies, Zionist or otherwise, scattered over the country and located in good farming sections. Still further there are Jews who have gone to Palestine, especially Jerusalem, to engage in business, and who are coming rapidly to own the best of the real estate in the larger places.

This Jewish population comprises only a small section of the total people of Palestine, but it represents the most resourceful class in Europe and America. It was natural, therefore, that when reports of destitution in Palestine reached the ears of Jews in England and America immediate efforts should be made for the relief of their oriental brethren. Racial pride would dictate such action. In many instances actual family connection with residents of Palestine deepened the interests. Furthermore there is the desire of wealthy Jews to have a share in great philanthropies, both for the satisfaction it affords them personally and for the credit it reflects upon their race.

The relief now being sent out to the poor people in Palestine has been promoted to a considerable extent by the Jews of Europe and the United States. The American minister to Turkey, Mr. Morgenthau, is a Jew. Public-spirited men like Mr. Strauss and Mr. Rosenwald have contributed generously to the cause.

The best feature of this Jewish relief work is the fact that it is not restricted to the Jews who are suffering in Palestine. It is to be expended likewise for Christians and Mohammedans. And that there is dire and bitter need of help among all classes in Palestine and Syria cannot be doubted by the most superficial observer of the facts.

A MESSAGE TO JAPAN.

PRESS dispatches chronicle the arrival in Japan of Prof. Shailer Mathews and Rev. Sidney L. Gulick, the first the president of the Federal Council of Churches in America, the second a missionary who has spent many years in Japan, and who during the past two years has been giving lectures in America in promotion of the right of friendship between the two peoples.

The reports indicate the very enthusiastic reception accorded the two visitors, and the beginning of an impressive program of addresses and conferences to be held in all parts of Japan during the next six weeks. A considerable body of Christian workers went down from Tokio to Yokohama to welcome them on their arrival, and a good deal of enthusiasm seems to have been aroused by the event.

Influential Japanese newspapers are commenting on the visit of these two American gentlemen, and are expressing great satisfaction that they are to give their message throughout the empire. Japan has always been eager to cultivate cordial relations with the United States. Those relations are certain to prove of value to both peoples. Perhaps the Japanese understand us better than we understand them. Far greater numbers of Japanese have visited this country and are now in residence here in educational and other sorts of work than we have been able to equal by American visitors or residents in the Orient.

It is fortunate therefore, that we can send from time to time men of wisdom to observe and interpret to us the attitude of Japan on the great questions of the hour, as well as to carry to our Japanese neighbors the message of good will and international co-operation which will cement these ties of friendship.

A BISHOP AT LAST—AND TWO OF HIM!

OUR attention has been called by the editor of our "Here and There" department to an item in the World's Almanac under the heading "United Christian Conference of the Disciples of Christ." It reads as follows:

> This is a new department of the denomination commonly known as the Christian Church, or Disciples of Christ, otherwise called "Campbellites." This "Church of Christ" is, in the United States, divided into about three parties: the "Antis," or Reaction party, about 150,000 in numerical strength; the "conservatives," or Conventional sort, 800,000 strong, and the "Progressives," or Conference kind, the latter, about 50,000 in numbers, having organized a national office in Portland, Ore., when, in 1911, the American Convention met at that place in national convention and a bishop was elected with headquarters in Portland, Ore. Soon after this the new department was incorporated in the name of the "United Christian Conference of the Disciples of Christ," and the Rt. Rev. St. D. Martin was selected as their bishop. The Christian Century a weekly organ published at Chicago, is recognized as their journalistic leader. They also have eastern headquarters at Newark, N. J., and a bishop at that point who supervises the affairs of the eastern states, the Rt. Rev. J. D. Meade.

In ironical comment on the matter Mr. Barnes says:

"At last the long-expected Bishop has arrived, and as if to make our ruin to run over with humiliation, we have two, an Eastern and Western. Though both are unknown to us they are probably working under assumed names, as those naturally would who came in to spy out our liberty. We wish the Rt. Reverend gentlemen an auspicious career as they proceed to pilot the Old Ship through perilous waters. In the meantime we should like to ask by whose authority were they elected, what are their duties, and to whom do they look for support?

"I hope the brethren who are so fond of bishops will see to it that ours are bountifully provided for.

"But I hereby serve notice on the brethren that there are many of us who do not propose to put a yoke on our necks which neither we nor our fathers were able to bear. Others may do as the please; our course is clear.

"For some time we have viewed with alarm the growth of the ecclesiastical spirit among us, and now that it has produced a brace of bishops, the brethren who chided us for being overfearful will approve the wisdom of our course. We had such faith in the good sense of our brethren that we supposed it would assert itself in time to avert this disaster. It is late, but not too late, to undo what has been done, and to take such action as will insure the final ceremonies over every species of ecclesiasticism. We must rid ourselves of those brethren whose interest in the Restoration rises and falls with the rise and fall of the loaves and fishes.

"Once more has vaulting ambition o'erleaped itself. One bishop might have been tolerated in contemptuous silence. But the presence of two bishops is an irritant which will disturb the peace of the entire brotherhood. Only the quiet retirement of these bishops who came without being sent for, can prevent a struggle the end of which we should shudder to contemplate."

The whole thing is, of course, a mystery to The Christian Century. We have written to the "World," to find out how its Almanac editor could have been victimized by so palpable a hoax as this. Pending a reply we will gladly welcome from our Oregon readers, or readers anywhere, any information as to the identity of the alleged "bishops" and the origin of their alleged "conference."

SUCCESS MAY BE ILLUSION.

IN MUCH of the present day Sunday-school success there is danger of loss to the morning preaching service. The record is at hand where a school of eight hundred is followed by a discouragingly small congregation, and the minister is made to feel that the heart has been taken out of his ministry. From many quarters complaints come that men's classes file out at the conclusion of the school, and are seen no more that day.

If these conditions prevail to any large extent we are simply robbing Peter to pay Paul, and defeating the purpose for which the church and Sunday-school exist. If the merchant builds up his shoe trade only to see his grocery department verging on bankruptcy, what profit is there in that? A new crusade must be begun that will rivet the Sunday-school and all its enthusiasm to every depart of the church.

The department of the church that is an end in itself must always be productive of dangers. All the agencies of the church are parts of the church. No department liveth to itself.

LOUIS R. PATMONT.

A GOOD deal of publicity has been given to the affairs of Mr. Patmont during the past few months. He has been for some years actively connected with efforts against the saloon and the Roman Catholic church. Several months since it was reported that he had been abducted, and that after weeks of confinement his hiding place was discovered by brethren, and he was released.

For the most part the story was taken seriously by the press and considerable effort was made to use it in exposure of the alleged plots of liquor men and others supposed to be affected by Mr. Patmont's public work. Presently, however, a second disappearance made it more difficult to give full credence to the reports first published, and since that time it would appear that Mr. Patmont has formed the unhappy habit of being abducted, or of disappearing at frequent intervals.

To add to the difficulties of the situation, marital disagreements have arisen, and charges have been made by both husband and wife, resulting in a separation.

The friends who have been closest to Mr. Patmont profess to believe that he is the victim of violence and traduction. The press in general is not so charitable in its interpretation of the facts. It seems probable that Mr. Patmont is not altogether responsible for his actions and that the greatest kindness that can be rendered him will be an avoidance of all publicity in regard to his affairs. It is, to say the least, unfortunate that he should have been exploited as a representative of the anti-saloon, or anti-Catholic interest. It is apparent that the facts regarding his condition and history have not fully been made public, nor is there the slightest reason why they should be.

In the one or two references we have previously made to the Patmont case our attitude has been one of sympathy and trustfulness. We believed that every favorable presumption should be allowed. But in justice to the interests of the churches it seems only right that Mr. Patmont should not be encouraged in any public work.

ATTENDING TO BUSINESS.

SAYS Rev. John R. Ewers, of Pittsburgh:

> This morning I have sent in my resignation from the "Social Service Union of Pittsburgh," a movement which I helped to found, to which I have given much time and energy, and which I believe to be a very valuable institution. Then why resign? There can be no doubt about the need of social service. But for 1915 I have made one resolution: to give all of my energy to preaching and to the Sunday school. This would not be a wise resolution for every minister to make. It is wise for me. Why? Because I faced the danger of becoming "fussy"—the danger of using all of my time in telephoning, pounding the typewriter, running about here and there, reading only current literature, in short, the danger of doing everything and nothing. What I need is a year of discipline, a year of best books, real sermons and definitely directed energies. I wonder whether I have touched the weak spot in any other minister's work.

Indeed you have touched the weak spot of many a minister's work, Mr. Ewers. There is so much for the preacher to do, good things, urgent things, Christian things, that he is constantly in danger of dissipating his activities.

The finding of a just balance between ministerial selfishness and isolation on one hand, and unfruitful scatteration of energies over many interests on the other hand, is a delicate problem requiring conscience, experiment and intuition.

Mr. Ewers' standard of values as indicated by his emphasis on his pulpit task and his Sunday school shows that he is on the way to a happy solution of his problem if he has not already achieved it.

CHINA'S NEW NATIONAL ANTHEM.

MR. CHANG CHIEN, Minister of Agriculture and Commerce in the cabinet of China, and Yuan Shih-Kai's right-hand man, has written a new national anthem for republican China. The music is said to have an appropriate Oriental flavor. A free translation has been published in the South China Morning Post:

"Her majestic mountains and superb landscapes
Witness the greatness of China.
Chosen home of the oldest civilization.
The emperors have effaced themselves and restored the throne to the people.
To the people belongs the supreme power.
Long have Confucius and Mencius taught this;
In the time of Yao and of Shun was it proclaimed.
The people comprise the five races, and the five races are indissoluble.
Thus united, China is invincible.
We must develop the wealth of the land, foster agriculture and industry,
Redress wrongs, and make our people happy.
Education and civilization are the great works of the day.
We must all be equal in fact as well as in name.
For did not Confucius and Mencius teach absolute social equality?"

DESTINY.

We are what we imagine, and our deeds
Are born of dreaming. Europe acts today
Epics that little children in their play
Conjured, and statesmen murmured in their creeds;
In barrack, court and school were sown those seeds,
Like Dragon's teeth, which ripen to affray
Their sowers. Dreams of slaughter rise to slay,
And fate itself is stuff that fancy breeds.
Mock, then, no more at dreaming, lest our own
Create for us a like reality!
Let not imagination's soil be sown
With armed men but justice, so that we May for a world of tyranny atone
And dream from that depair—democracy.

Spanish Translation of New Testament.

A joint translation committee under the auspices of the American, the British and the Foreign Bible societies has been engaged for the past two years on a translation of the New Testament into the Spanish language, as the existing translation is not satisfactory. Up to the first of December, this committee had its headquarters at Puerto de Santa Maria, province of Cadiz, Spain. For the completion of its work the committee has removed its headquarters to Madrid, where it began work Dec. 15.

Brick Presbyterian Church Prospers.

At the Brick Presbyterian Church, Fifth avenue and Thirty-seventh street, New York, Sunday, Jan. 10, the pastor, the Rev. Dr. Wm. Pierson Merrill, announced that $36,000 had been added to the permanent endowment fund of the church in 1914. The total income last year was $136,000, a decrease of $8,000 from the previous year, due in part to the war, but $7,000 ahead of two years ago. The regular expenses are $49,000 a year, but part of this amount went to the support of the memorial buildings attached to the Christ Church. Affiliated with the Brick Church are Christ and Covenant Churches, to which are given each year toward their support about $26,000. Andrew Carnegie, while not a member, contributes $1,000 a year to the Brick Church expenses. This is the church of which Dr. Henry van Dyke, preacher, author and present minister to Holland, was formerly pastor.

Unitarians Call New Secretary.

The American Unitarian Association has called Rev. Louis C. Cornish from his pastorate in the First Unitarian church of Hingham, Mass., to become secretary-at-large of the association. Mr. Cornish has been pastor of the church in Hingham for the past fifteen years and is well known throughout the denomination as a successful administrator.

Against Change of Unitarian Name.

The Independent Congregational church (Unitarian) of Meadville, Pa., does not favor the change of the name of the denomination which has been proposed. The congregation in Meadville recently voted on the matter and the vote was unanimous against the proposed change. There has been some agitation in the denomination against the name Unitarian as carrying with it too much of the "odium theologicum."

Theological Seminary Renders Service.

The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, which is located at Louisville, Ky., furnishes many of the leaders among the southern Baptists. It has trained 135 missionaries, and 4,350 preachers for the home field. The seminary is now fifty-four years old. It continues to be the leading theological school of the southern branch of the denomination.

Mexico Interests Buffalo.

Bishop Burt, of the Methodist Episcopal church, made three Sunday afternoon addresses in Buffalo recently on Mexico and Roman Catholicism. At the time of the second lecture, a Jesuit priest, Father Tierney, gave an address in Buffalo's largest music hall on "The Truth About Mexico." The music hall was engaged then for Bishop Burt and on the same platform with him spoke a Roman Catholic layman, who endorsed his speech. Bishop Burt opposed intervention and declared that the solution of the problem in Mexico was the open Bible, a living Christ, and Christian education. Five thousand people were present to hear the bishop.

Aged Theologian Marries.

Dr. A. H. Strong is the president emeritus of Rochester Theological Seminary. He is the author of a number of theological books and his systematic theology is standard among the conservatives of the Baptist denomination. He was married at Deland, Fla., on Jan. 1, to Mrs. Marguerite G. Jones.

Who Gives Most to Missions?

Friendly rivalry is found among the southern Baptists as to which congregation in the south gives the largest percentage to mission work. First Baptist church of Dallas reports their total receipts as $93,324, of which $15,889 went for local expenses and the rest for missions. First Baptist church of Shreveport, La., challenges this record with a report that their total collections were $58,000 for all purposes of which $8,000 went for local expenses. The Texas church gives eighty-three per cent to missions while the Louisana church gives eighty-seven per cent.

Episcopal Church Gains in New York.

The report of the Protestant Episcopal Church for the year just past shows that there are in the city of New York twenty-nine churches of that denomination of more than one thousand members each. The Episcopal diocese of New York increased five per cent in membership last year making 933,424 Episcopalians in that diocese with 35,000 more in Brooklyn and Queens. In the whole country there are now eight-five Episcopal parishes with memberships exceeding one thousand, and fifty-six others not far below the one thousand mark.

Baptist Ministers Become Episcopalians.

In the diocese of Kansas there are at the present time three former Baptist ministers studying to take the orders of the Episcopal church. Harley H. Marriott was ordained to the diaconate a few weeks ago. Louis T. Hardin is conducting a catechetical class at St. Paul's church in Marysville, and Malcolm Taylor is also doing catechetical work in a church at Iola. These men will continue their studies until they are ordained as priests.

Roman Catholic Becomes Episcopalian.

Rev. F. C. Capozzi, formerly an assistant at the Roman Catholic church of Our Lady of Good Counsel in Philadelphia, was formally made a member of the Protestant Episcopal church by Bishop Rhinelander in his private chapel on a recent Sunday. Mr. Capozzi has removed to Illinois and has taken charge of the Italian mission at Herrin, in the diocese of Springfield. His reasons for leaving the Roman communion were printed in a church paper some months ago.

Litany and Hymns for Social Service.

The Joint Commission on Social Service of the Protestant Episcopal church has in preparation a booklet in the interest of social service which will present the litany used in the last general convention of the denomination and also a selected list of social service hymns. These aids to devotion will be given wide circulation.

Dr. Broughton Has Another Call.

Dr. Len G. Broughton, who is ill in London, and whose call to Clarendon Street Baptist church of Boston has been noted, has received another call to First Baptist church of Knoxville, Tenn. The decision of Dr. Broughton has not been announced and he has not as yet offered his resignation to Christ church of London.

Show Need of More Missions.

The Home Missions council has investigated the western country somewhat and have come to the conclusion that the country is not everywhere overchurched. In one western state there are 133 towns of from 150 to 1,000 inhabitants without any Protestant worship, 100 of them being also without Roman Catholic care.

The Progress of Missionary Work.

The total income of the American foreign mission boards during the year 1914 was $17,168,611, according to statistics made public at the annual meeting of the foreign mission conference. These figures cover the work of all American organizations doing educational and philanthropic, as well as missionary work, outside the United States and Canada, except that work conducted under the auspices of certain other mission boards in Mexico, Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaii and Alaska. For this work $509,510 was contributed during the year. Contributions fell slightly below the amount received in 1912, the banner year, and exceeded by more than $1,000,000 the contributions of 1913. In 1901, the first year for which statistics were available, the contributions totalled $6,228,173. Natives in foreign fields, the report asserts, contributed $4,243,967 to work conducted by American missionaries. There are 9,969 missionaries enrolled by the several organizations; 159,286 persons were baptized during the year—a gain of 37,475 over 1913. A gain of 510 churches is reported, bringing the number up to 9,946. There are 606 colleges, theological seminaries and training schools and 12,969 other schools with a total attendance of 547,730.

Vacant Pulpits in America.

There are in this country 49,167 more Protestant churches than there are Protestant ministers. Dr. Baketel says in his marvelously interesting Year Book, that in 1911 the Presbyterian church, North, had 2,167 vacant churches, out of a total of 10,051. One thousand of the 6,000 Congregational pulpits were vacant. Another denomination reported that 3,725 churches had only 1,887 pastors, that 596 ministers were not preaching, or were doing so at their own expense. Another denomination has only 5,565 ministers to supply its 10,940 churches; it sustained a loss of 1,043 ministers in the five years from 1906 to 1911, 405 being lost in 1911 alone.

Southern Methodists Plan Cathedral.

The Methodist Episcopal church, South, is planning to erect a million dollar cathedral in Washington. They have selected a triangular plot of ground adjoining the public library, at Ninth and K streets. The Mount Vernon Methodist Episcopal church, South, has the adjoining corner and this church is sponsor for the movement to build the million dollar edifice.

Clergyman A Consul.

The New York papers are commenting on the admirable way in which the Rev. Otis A. Glazebrook, D.D., rector emeritus of St. John's Protestant Episcopal church, Elizabeth, is filling the post of United States consul to Jerusalem. The cables from London give him much credit for rescuing a party of British subjects from the hands of the Turks. The Rev. Dr. Glazebrook was appointed to his present post by President Wilson about one year ago. Since the great upheavel in Europe last summer, praises of the clergyman's diplomacy have been received from several sources.

Protestant Theology in Rome.

The Methodists conduct a theological school in Rome, Italy, called Reeder Theology School. Dr. Felice Cacciapuoti was recently installed as professor of Symbolic and Dogmatic Theology and Christian Sociology in this school. This school has prepared most of the Methodist ministers in Italy, and many of the ministers doing Italian work in the United States. Professor Cacciapuoti was born in southern Italy, educated in the Rome Collegio, and at the universities of Bologna and Lausanne.

Consolidation Plans Fail.

Two old historic churches of the Baptist faith in New York have for the past year tried an experiment at unification. These are the Calvary church and the Fifth Avenue church. The experiment was not regarded as a success and the people of the Fifth Avenue church have withdrawn and gone back to their old home. They have appointed a pulpit committee and will seek a pastor at once. Dr. Woelfkin is the pastor of the Calvary church. The Fifth Avenue church has among its regular attendants, John D. Rockfeller.

Scotch Professor Declines Call.

The chair that was vacated at Union Theological Seminary in New York by the death of Charles A. Briggs, has been offered to Dr. James Moffat, a well known Scotch expositor. It is said Dr. Moffat has decided to decline the call.

Episcopal Social Service Forum.

Grace Episcopal church of Chicago, where Rev. W. G. Waters, D.D., is rector, has been conducting a social service forum every Sunday with free speech for all who come. Recently at a Sunday service such well-known persons as George W. Perkins, John Walker, president of the Illinois Federation of Labor; Victor Orlander, the secretary, and John Fitzpatrick spoke. Mr. Orlander said "Christianity is the biggest and mightiest thing that ever came into the world." Socialism will be discussed at a January meeting.

Son of Noted Scholar Becomes Pastor.

Rev. Basil Douglas Hall, son of the late Dr. Chas. Cuthbert Hall, president of the Union Theological Seminary, settled recently as pastor of Hunt's Point Presbyterian church in New York. He was married about the same time to Miss Anna Loraine Washburn of Boston. The bride's grandfather was for many years president of Roberts College in Constantinople.

Y. W. C. A. Head Leaves Money.

The will of Miss Grace H. Dodge, the late president of the Y. W. C. A. of America, provides for a number of causes in which Miss Dodge was interested in her lifetime. To the national board of the Y. W. C. A. she left $500,000, and to the Y. W. C. A. of New York she left $200,000. The American college for girls in Constantinople receives $50,000. Various Presbyterian organizations are remembered liberally.

Remember Martyrdom of John Huss.

The five hundreth anniversary of the martyrdom of John Huss falls in the year 1915 and, in commoration of that event, McCormick Seminary, of Chicago, brought Dr. James I. Good to the city to deliver lectures on Jan. 21 and 22. The subjects were "The Historic Significance of Huss Among the Reformers and Pre-Reformers," and "The Hussites and Their Relation to the Presbyterian Family." The stereopticon was used to illustrate the theme.

Methodists Study Practice of Baptism.

Dr. C. B. Spencer, editor of the Central Christian Advocate, has been studying the extent to which the practice of immersion is becoming common among the Methodists of the middle west. He has a questionaire calling for postcard replies on three questions. These are, "How were you baptised?" "How many persons did you baptize the past year?" "How many of these were baptized by immersion?" The preachers of the denominations are asked to reply to these questions.

New Bishops Get Rings.

It is a custom of the Chicago clergy of the Protestant Episcopal denomination to provide a ring for each new bishop elected from their numbers. A luncheon was given by the clergy of the diocese at the University Club on Monday, Jan. 4, when Episcopal rings were given by them to Dr. Sumner, Bishop-elect of Oregon, and Dr Page, Missionary Bishop-elect of Spokane. There were present nearly seventy of the clergy of the diocese, besides Bishop Anderson, who acted as chairman; Bishop Toll, Bishop Arthur L. Williams, and the three clerical deputies to Dr. Sumner's consecration from the diocese of Oregon.

Ordination of a "Unitarian Priest."

Both Episcopal and Unitarian circles are much agitated in Boston over a recent occurrence in the Second Unitarian church. Dr. Samuel R. Maxwell was recently ordained and installed as the minister of this church. There were robed clergymen standing before an altar adorned with lighted candles, and vespers were sung by a vested choir. What with a vested choir, a candle-lighted altar, a high pulpit to the right of the chancel, a reading desk on the left, ministers robed as in the early days of the Episcopal Church in New England, a processional and a recessional, and with the ritual of the Book of Common Prayer, one might well imagine that he was in an Episcopal church. This is the parish that was once presided over by Ralph Waldo Emerson. An English priest of the Episcopal church assisted in the laying on of hands and the minister who prayed asked for grace that the candidate might "discharge the office and work of a priest in the church of God." It is difficult to learn which is the more scandalized, the Unitarians or the Episcopalians, over this ordination.

Chicago Furnishes Twenty-one Bishops.

A call to a Chicago parish is coming to be looked upon as an important step on the road to the episcopacy in the Protestant Episcopal denomination. Twenty-one bishops have been selected from men connected with the Chicago diocese and fourteen of these have been selected while they were connected with Chicago parishes. The latest candidate for episcopal honors is Rev. Herman Page, D. D., who was consecrated on January 28, He has been for fifteen years rector at St. Paul's Church, at East Fiftieth and Dorchester Avenues. When he came to Chicago his congregation was worshiping in a small frame building. They now have a stately stone structure representing an investment of $200,000. He was founder of the Chase Settlement House in the stockyards, and aided it until it became independent under its own board of directors. Dr. Page is 48 years old. He was born in Boston, graduated from the Boston Latin School in 1884, Harvard University in 1888, and Cambridge Divinity School in 1891. He has a son who graduated at Harvard in 1912 and who is now a student in Cambridge Divinity School. After consecration, Dr. Page was appointed to the missionary district of Spokane, which comprises that part of the state of Washington lying east of the Cascade Mountains. The district contains 409,000 souls. Dr. Page succeeds the Rt. Rev. Lemuel Henry Wells, who recently became 75 years of age, and who has resigned after twenty-one years of service.

Operation on Bishop Griswold.

Bishop Griswold of Kansas has undergone a severe operation at Salina, for nephrolithotomy, at the St. Barnabas Hospital. It is reported the operation was successful and he will recover.

Predicts Four More Dry States.

Rev. Charles Scanlon, secretary of the Board of Temperance of the Presbyterian denomination, spoke before the Sunday Evening Club that meets in the Third Presbyterian Church on the West Side in Chicago on January 24. Dr. Scanlon has been a delegate to three international conferences on the subject of drink. Dr. Scanlon predicted that South Carolina, Montana, Iowa and Arkansas were certain to go dry in a short time. "Alabama," he said, "will be a prohibition state July 1 and Idaho is pledged to go dry by the action of every one of the political parties in the state. If China can banish opium and Iceland can banish the liquor traffic, the United States can do as much."

Here and There

Religions Made in America.

We think particularly of Mormonism, Christian Science and Dowieism. All of them represent the "get there" spirit of the age. Dowieism, in the life time of its founder was a remarkably prosperous institution. Dr. Dowie and Joseph Smith were builders of cities. The three cults knew the value of money, and how to get hold of it. Dowieism was centered in its founder and never propagated itself to any extent. Few men in its ranks could be found to stand before the king, the great doctor. Mormonism and Christian Science are notorious proselyters. The latter sect is a raider of the evangelical churches. Mormonism draws its recruits from the ignorant and fanatical classes. Dowieism and Mormonism aimed at a Theocracy. Both are literalists in the interpretation of the Scriptures, combining features of the patriarchal dispensation and the priesthood of the Old Testament with the essential features of the New. Mormonism and Christian Science have revelations from heaven. Dr. Dowie did not need any. He was Elijah of the Old Testament, John the Baptist of the New, and the Thirteenth Apostle. Nothing but his extreme modesty prevented him from claiming to be the other twelve. To his credit be it said, he had a fairly just regard for the authority of the Scriptures. The three systems have had autocratic government, a Protestant papacy. As an interpreter of Scripture, Mrs. Eddy will ever be unapproached. Her intellect took a leap in the dark; she blew out the light of reason in the hope of creating more light; she denied the faith in order to create one of her own. Her method takes the heart out of the Bible; she can make it mean anything desired, once you allow her to apply her exegetical thumbscrew. The three systems have a large following.

All of them are faith healers and know how to appeal to the fears of the weak. Each denied the miracle-working power of the other. That all three teach absurdities is no reason why intelligent men and women may be found in their ranks. This is one of the unsolved problems of the centuries. In all there is a certain element of truth. All of them are concerned in a large measure with the things of time and sense. They have not yet impressed their sacrificial spirit upon the world. Their tents are pitched close to the blunt edge of self denial. "According to your funds be it unto you," so they seem to say.

Our Apostles of Toleration.

After reading much of the present day literature of the Disciples it is refreshing to go back to the Memoirs of Alexander Campbell or the Memoirs of Isaac Errett for a fresh bite of grass, as the Scotch say. Dr. Robert Richardson is the interpreter of Mr. Campbell's ministry, while Mr. James S. Lamar performed a similar office for Isaac Errett. (How natural to say Isaac Errett without any prefix.) Both biographers write of Christian union with the emphasis on "Christian." The theological bellumist receives scant consideration at the hands of either one.

Isaac Errett was the apostle of reconstruction. After Mr. Campbell's death the leaders among us were legion. Every man of prominence had a standard to which all were invited. Controversies were rife, issues were numerous. The success of one party or another was to determine whether or not the "fundamental principles of the restoration movement were to be subverted.' The Old Ship was in perilous waters whether ashore or afloat. No matter what happened the worst was sure to come. The days were dark and dreary. Against all the iconoclasts and reactionaries Isaac Errett set himself. We never think of him as one of "the old war horses," though he did a good deal of aggressive work. He broke down many follies which in late years have reappeared among us. He was a pacifist, a wise counsellor, and unfortunately left no one behind who could bend his bow.

James S. Lamar was an apostle of peace, but withal a man of great breadth. He was among the first to rebel against the iron-clad interpretation of ordinances. His "First Principles and Perfections" is a fine commentary on our teaching. He did as much as any man among us, when we think of the period in which he lived, to spiritualize our doctrinal statements. It is somewhat striking that these three men left us books of devotion: Dr. Richardson, "Communings in the Sanctuary"; Isaac Errett, "Evenings with the Bible" and "Letters to a Young Christian," while Mr. Lamar's book is devotional throughout, its latter section particularly so.

It has always been a perplexing problem why, when we were entering upon a period when spiritual interpretations were the natural order of our history, we should have allowed ourselves to be turned back to a controversial and provincial era from which we had been mercifully delivered by such men as those above referred to.

A Citadel for Bigotry.

"Every one who goeth forward and abideth not in the teaching of the Christ, hath not God. He who abideth in the teaching, he hath both the Father and the Son. If any one cometh to you, and bringeth not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, and bid him not 'good speed.' For he who biddeth him 'good speed' partakes in his evil deeds." 2 John 9-11.

Commenting on this passage of Scripture, Dean Farrar among other things says:

"But there is too much reason to fear that to the end of time the conceit of orthodoxism will claim inspired authority for its own conclusions, even when they are most anti-Christian, and will build up systems of exclusive hatred out of inferences purely unwarrantable. It is certain, too, that each sect is always tempted to be proudest of its most sectarian peculiarities; that each form of dissent, whether in or out of the body of the Established churches, most idolizes its own dissidence. The aim of religious opinionativeness always has been, and always will be, to regard its narrowest conclusions as matters of faith, and to exclude or excommunicate all those who reject or modify them. The sort of syllogisms used by these enemies of the love of Christ are much as follows:

"My opinions are founded on interpretation of Scripture. Scripture is infallible. My views of its meaning are infallible too. Your opinions and inferences differ from mine, therefore you must be in the wrong. All wrong opinions are capable of so many ramifications that any one who differs from me in minor points must be unsound in vital matters also. Therefore, all who differ from me and my clique are 'heretics.' All heresy is wicked. All heretics are necessarily wicked men. It is my religious duty to hate, caluminate and abuse you."

Those who have gone thus far in elevating hatred into a Christian virtue ought logically to go a little farther. They generally do so when they have the power. They do not openly say, "Let me venerate the examples of Arnold of Citeaux, and of Torquemada. Let us glorify the crusaders at Beziers. Let us revive the racks and thumbscrews of the Inquisition. Let us, with the Pope, strike medals of honor of the massacre of St. Bartholomew. Let us re-establish the Star Chamber, and entrust those ecclesiastics who hold our opinions with powers of torture." But, since they are robbed of these means of securing unanimity—since they can no longer even imprison "dissenting tinkers" like Bunyan, and "regicide Arians" like Milton—they are too apt to indulge in the party spirit which can employ slander though it is robbed of the thumbscrew, and revel in depreciation though it may no longer avail itself of the fagot and the rack." Early Days, P. 586. 587.

Secret of Unity.

First of all it is to have a cause large enough to invite the co-operation of Christendom, and then to make the cause so attractive by the devotion and sincerity that we bring to it that all who have the mind of Christ will want to unite. When a cause is worth while it never seeks to gain an advantage by belittling other good causes. Goodness like truth always carries the stamp of its merits where all can see. The man with a little cause who hopes to win by detracting from better causes is like the beggar who steals the king's ring in the belief that the ring makes the king.

Sitting in the Seat of the Infallible.

The wise never make the attempt. It is only those who assume that they have crossed the final frontiers of knowledge who assume to do so. Unfortunately for them, a few flatterers shout encouragement to do that which a really great man would consider an affront. The wisest men are always in the seats of the humble. They are content if allowed to be door-keepers in the temple of knowledge. A wise man never suspects himself of being wise; the great are always surprised by greatness. If a man were infallible he would cease to be the moment he made the discovery.

All Are Agreed.

MODERN WOMANHOOD

A Tale of War by Alfred Noyes.

IT was but a few years back, that William Watson thrilled the world with his "Sonnets on the Armeman Massacres"; and now, Alfred Noyes, another English poet, has written this terrible indictment of war. We are thankful that those whom God has called to the high vocation of song are using their gifts to show the "obscene seas of slaughter" with which Europe is now flooded, in all their shame.

The poem, which can be read in an hour, is as beautiful as it is terrible, both for form and content. It has both a prelude and an epilogue, and the prelude tells of the inconsistency of both sides invoking the blessing of God on their slaughter:

"Sandalphon, whose white wings to Heaven up-bear
The weight of human prayer, who bore
From either host, thigh-deep in filth and shame,
One prayer, one and the same;

"With Thee, with Thee, Lord God of Sabaoth,
It rests to answer both.
Out of the obscene seas of slaughter, hear,
From East and West one prayer:
'O God, deliver Thy people. Let Thy sword Destroy our enemies, Lord.'"

The opening of the story is a fine statement of how impossible it is for those afar to conceive of the horrors of war:

"A murdered man, ten miles away,
Will hardly shake your peace,
Like one red stain upon your hand;
And a tortured child in a distant land
Will never check one smile today,
Or bid one fiddle cease.
A censor sends our news.
It comes along a little wire
Sunk in a deep sea;
It thins in a club to a little smoke
Between one joke and another joke,
For a city in flames is less than the fire,
That comforts you and me."

And then he tells of those who set the atrocious machinery of war in motion, without thinking, or caring, for the multitudes they are dooming to death:

"Around a shining table sat
Five men in black tail-coats;
And blood to them was only a word,
And the point of a phrase their only sword,
And the cost of war—they reckoned it
In little disks of gold."

"And when they talked of war, they thought
Of sawdust, not of blood.....
Not of the crimson tempest
When the shattered city falls."

The story opens with Johann, the young woodcutter, standing outside his mountain hut, while Sonia, his wife, sings their baby to sleep:

"O little blue pigeon, sleep. Sleep Dodi mine,"
She murmured "Sleep, little rose, in your rosy bed,
The moon is rocking, rocking to rest in the pine."

"Sleep, little blue pigeon,
Sleep on my breast,
Sleep while the stars shine,
Sleep while the big pine
Rocks with the white moon,
Over your nest."

After the baby is asleep, he tells Sonia that on the morrow he must join his regiment and go to war. The story that follows is of the war waged by the Balkan States and Greece against the Turks.

The troop-train, that bore them to battle, "clanged like fate," and the soldiers talked as to the reasons of this bitter war, and said:

"That no man knows from first to last,
The reason why he finds himself
Up to his neck in blood."

But Johann's friend, Michael the poet, bursts into an impassioned eulogy of war, in as fine a strain as Tennyson's lyric of the Crimean charge:

"Comrades," he cried, "you know not
The splendor of your blades!
This war is not as other wars:
The night shrinks with all the stars,
And freedom rides before you
On the last of the Crusades."

The first battle scene paints the horrors of modern warfare, where "there was no sight, no sound of an enemy," but,

"Out of the quiet distance rushed
A thunder of shrieking air;"

And then, the long charge, "over the wide inhuman zones, against the cold machines":

"The tall young men, the tall young men,
That were so fain to die,
It was not theirs to question,
It was not theirs to reply.
They had broken their hearts on the cold machines,
And—they had not seen their foe;
And the reason of this butcher's work,
It was not theirs to know;
For these tall young men were children
Five short years ago....."

"Then all along the reeking hills,
And up the dark ravines,
The long row of young men
Leapt in the glory of life again,
To carry their warm and breathing breasts
Against the cold machines."

The victory was gained and though there were "blind pits" where Michael, the poet's eyes had been, yet he sang,

"Lift up the Cross! the cannon, the cannon are dumb,
The last Crusade rides into Byzantium."

But hardly had the echoes of the triumph over the Turks died down, before the word passed that Greece and the Balkan States had quarrelled, and when blind Michael asked why, the peasant who had brought the news replied:

"For a port to export prunes,
For Christ, my boy, and the Fatherland!"

The last bitter scene is between those,

"Whose hand was against their comrades' hand,
They clasped a month ago."

Here, they were defeated, and their retreat was "over the gulfs that had gorged their dead, and the rotting, shot-ripped plain." This charge of man against man was even more hideous than when they offered their warm and breathing breasts to the unseen, cold machines.

But the climax of this masterpiece of genius is when Johann returns home, and found

"The embers of his hut still burned;
And, in the deep blue gloom,
His bursting eyeballs yet could see
A white shape under the apple tree,
A naked body, dabbled with red,
Like a drift of apple-bloom.

"She lay like a broken sacrament
That the dogs have defiled.
'Sonia! Sonia! speak to me!'
He babbled like a child.

"The child, the child that lay on her knees
Devil nor man may name
The things that Europe must not print,
But only whisper and chuckle and hint,
Lest the soul of Europe rise in thunder
And swords melt in the flame.

"She bore the stigmata of sins
That devil nor man may tell;
For O, good taste, good taste, good taste.
Constrains and serves us well;
And the censored truth that dies on earth
Is the crown of the lords of hell."

And above, on the apple tree, hung his friend, Michael,

"The blind man, with his arms stretched wide,
And a nail through his hand on either side,
A nail thru' the naked palms of his feet
And a crown of thorns on his hair."

Johann, in despair at these agonies, falls on his naked blade, "And the blind man that was crucified,
Spake softly to the dead:

"Conquered, we shall conquer!
They have not hurt the soul.
For there is another Captain,
Whose legions round us roll
Battling against the wastes of Death
Till all be healed and whole."

"Till the dead Cross breaks in blossom;
Till the God we sacrificed,
With that same love He gave us,
Stretch out his arms to save us,
Yea, till God save his People
And heal the wounds of Christ."

ABOUT WOMEN.

"The servant problem" doubtless has been solved in the will of Mrs. John W. Sisson, who died May 1, at Rockaway Park, New York. The testator left the income of a trust fund of $5,500 to Kate Hymus, for years employed in the Sisson home. A codicil provided that to get the income Miss Hymus must remain in the employ of the family. Mrs. Sisson's estate was valued at $42,000.

Miss Mary J. Fitz, aged eighteen years old, who recently became postmistress at Venice, O., is said to be the youngest postmistress in the country.

The Countess of Warwick, whose financial affairs have been in poor shape for some time, started in the business as a garden designer and will undertake the work of laying out gardens. She is an enthusiastic gardener, established a training college for women gardeners at Studley, Eng., some time ago. She has now chosen a staff from these students, with which she will run her new business. No men will be employed. In addition to her other activities, the countess is conducting the woman's page for the Daily Sketch.

"Women can express their opinions on the platform, by petition, on the street corners, in the newspapers, and in all obtrusive ways on an equal with man, but not by the unobtrusive way of the ballot. It is as though one might talk over the telephone or shout his opinion from the street corners but must not write it in a letter."—Samuel M. Crothers.

THE DEATH OF ELI AND HIS SONS.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR FEBRUARY 21.

1 Sam. 4:1-13, 18. Memory Verses, 10,11.
Golden Text: Be ye doers of the Word, and not hearers only, deluding your own selves. James 1:22.

Now Israel went out against the Philistines to battle, and encamped beside Eben-ezer: and the Philistines encamped in Aphek. (2) And the Philistines put themselves in array against Israel: and when they joined battle, Israel was smitten before the Philistines; and they slew of the army in the field about four thousand men. (3) And when the people were come into the camp, the elders of Israel said, Wherefore hath Jehovah smitten us today before the Philistines? Let us fetch the ark of the covenant of Jehovah out of Shiloh unto us, that it may come among us, and save us out of the hand of our enemies. (4) So the people sent to Shiloh; and they brought from thence the ark of the covenant of Jehovah of hosts, who sitteth above the cherubim: and the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, were there with the ark of the covenant of God.

(5) And when the ark of the covenant of Jehovah came into the camp, all Israel shouted with a great shout, so that the earth rang again. (6) And when the Philistines heard the noise of the shout, they said, What meaneth the noise of this great shout in the camp of the Hebrews? And they understood that the ark of Jehovah was come into the camp. (7) And the Philistines were afraid, for they said, God is come into the camp. And they said, Woe unto us! for there hath not been such a thing heretofore. (8) Woe unto us! who shall deliver us out of the hand of these mighty gods? these are the gods that smote the Egyptians with all manner of plagues in the wilderness. (9) Be strong, and quit yourselves like men, O ye Philistines, that ye be not servants unto the Hebrews, as they have been to you: quit yourselves like men, and fight. (10) And the Philistines fought and Israel was smitten, and they fled every man to his tent: and there was a very great slaughter; for there fell of Israel thirty thousand footmen. (11) And the ark of God was taken; and the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, were slain.

(12) And there ran a man of Benjamin out of the army, and came to Shiloh the same day, with his clothes rent, and with earth upon his head. (13) And when he came, lo, Eli was sitting upon his seat by the wayside watching; for his heart trembled for the ark of God. And when the man came into the city, and told it, all the city cried out.

(18) And it came to pass, when he made mention of the ark of God, that Eli fell from off his seat backward by the side of the gate; and his neck brake, and he died; for he was an old man, and heavy. And he had judged Israel forty years.

Verse by Verse.

BY ASA MCDANIEL.

1. Philistines. The Philistines occupied the plains along the Mediterranean Sea. They were a warlike people. They were also a thrifty agricultural and commercial people. The people are first mentioned in Gen. 10:14 and their oppression was not checked until the time of David.—Ebenezer. The Hebrew means "Stone of help."

2. Joined in battle. When the engagement began.—Israel was smitten. Lost the battle, put to rout. Israel was defeated.

3. Wherefore hath Jehovah smitten us. They felt that the defeat could not be because their God was less powerful than the deities of the enemy.—The ark of the covenant. The ark was the symbol of God's presence. It contained the pot of manna, Aaron's rod, and the tables of the law. Ex. 25:10ff.—That it may save us. The men of Israel supposed that God would not permit it to be taken from them, hence with it victory would come to them. Read Josh. 3, 4; Num. 10:35; and 2 Sam. 11:11.—Shiloh. The religious center of the nation for many years.

4. Who sitteth above the cherubim. This does not imply that there were real figures upon the ark; but refers to the glory of Jehovah. See 1 K. 8:6. Cherubim is the name of certain symbolical figures frequently mentioned in Scripture.

5. Shouted with a great shout. The context would not lead us to suppose that the exultation was due to Israel's reverence for God and his laws; but rather to their strong expectation that victory would at once return to them. cf. Josh. 6:5, 20.

6. What meaneth the noise of this great shout. Israel had been humiliated by defeat, and why should they be so exultant?—Hebrews. The name by which Israel was known to foreigners. The name means "beyond."

8. These mighty gods. The Philistines were polytheists and supposed that the Israelites, also, served many gods.—Plagues. Hebrew word means "smiting."

9. Quit yourselves like men. Become men now if you never were men before.—Be not servants. In case you are defeated by the Israelites you will become their servants. "Observe how vividly the successive emotions of the Philistines are painted: astonishment, when they heard the triumphant shout of the vanquished army; dismay, when they learned its cause; many resolutions, when they had recovered from the first panic." Cam Bib.

10. Israel was smitten. They trusted in the ark and not in the God of the ark, and were defeated; as every one will be who takes the symbol for the substance and the letter for the spirit.—Fled every man into his tent. The thought is that every one who could, fled for safety to his own home. The army was utterly routed.

11. Ark of God was taken. The punishment threatened in the first chapter is being fulfilled, and Israel's enemy is the agent of God in the matter.

12. There ran a Benjamite from the ranks. Rabbinical tradition makes him to have been Saul, who had rescued the tables of the law from the hands of Goliath. Int. Crit. Co.—Clothes rent and earth on his head. These are expressions indicating grief. See 2 Sam 1:2; 15:32.

13. His heart trembled for the ark of God. Eli was sitting at the gate leading to the sanctuary, at which he was accustomed to sit, see 1:9. He was anxious for the ark of the covenant. The messenger apparently came first to the town and then to Eli.

18. He made mention of the ark of God. Eli seems to have borne the news of Israel's defeat and the death of his sons, but when he heard the fate of the ark, it overcame him and death was the result. He made his mistakes like all men, but his heart was right toward God.

The Symbol that Failed to Save

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

Today we have the story of bad sons coming from a good home. The easiest way to meet this situation is to lay all of the blame upon Eli, particularly since nothing is known of Mrs. Eli. But our sword may cut both ways! Judas went bad under Christ! What have you to say to that? Why, you blame Judas and rightly. Then have a care in your treatment of the ancient judge. Someone has said that Eli could collect damages from many commentators.

Rev. John R. Ewers.

BAD SONS.

What pastor cannot recall many incidents where boys and girls from excellent families have gone wrong? As a rule it may be said that good homes and good environment produce good people, but there are notable and even frequent exceptions. Some of the most saintly parents have children who bring down their gray hairs in sorrow to the grave. Why not lay some of the blame, where it belongs, upon the children themselves? It will not do to say that Eli was a dear old fellow, who "meant well feebly," a nice, soft, indulgent father who spared the rod and spoiled his boys. Hophni and Phinehas were keen, capable men. They knew right from wrong. They sinned with wide opened eyes. There are plenty of sons like them. Every man should make one prayer every morning, "O God, help me not to become a degenerate." We had brave and worthy parents. Before them we had strong and true grandparents. Be worthy. Keep up the stock. Let no weakness of yours lower the standard of your family. Such family pride is wholesome. A lot of cigarette smoking, cocktail drinking, dancing high-flyers should muse over these last statements. I exonerate good old Eli. I crush the blame down upon the heads of those degenerate sons.

THE ARK.

Strength lies in genuine, solid integrity. There is a great word "INTEGRITY." "Let integrity and uprightness preserve me." Well, they will. Integrity means inner reality, adjustment, harmony, solidity. Hophni and Phinehas wore the robes and buttoned their collars in front but... When the battle rages and Israel is being worsted some bright and superficial sinner happens to remember the great symbol. There is a mad rush for the ark. They carry it into the ranks and a mighty shout goes up, for the symbol symbolizes a great reality. How strange that they did not repent. How odd that it did not occur to them that the very ark meant God. But no, they trusted emptily in the symbol itself. There is no power in a symbol unless your heart is right. Baptism becomes an empty form, if not indeed a blasphemy, when divorced from a penitent and obedient heart. To carry a Bible in your pocket, without loving its contents, places the book on a par with a rabbit's foot. To count your beads or mumble your creed, when faith is dead and the heart is cold, is a waste of good time. There is no value in that prayer you stumble through when sleepily you kneel before your bed, unless you think of what you are saying and unless you pray believing in God and Christ.

VALUE OF SYMBOLS.

But when the heart is right, when one is doing his utmost, there is a wonderful value in symbols. I remember one evening being in the cathedral of Cologne. The sun was sinking and its last rays were pouring in through those rich windows of Munich glass. Workmen and workingwomen were entering and kneeling at the forms. A great impulse seized me to join them and I went over to one of the forms and kneeling, prayed with a marvelous intensity. I seemed to be close to God, I seemed to feel the bonds of humanity that bound me to those other unknown worshipers. The symbolism of the cathedral was helpful. But I had to rise to meet it. My heart had to glow, my soul to respond. The bread and the wine, the baptismal pool, have great value when we approach them in the right spirit and with intelligent minds subdued to obedience. Gothic architecture, sacred art, ritual—all may help us—but only when spirit meets with SPIRIT. The supreme thing is the open heart and the obedient spirit.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR FEBRUARY 17.

The Breadth of Jesus. Luke 9:49, 50; 10:25-37.

Breadth of sympathy and understanding is like love in that it does not vaunt itself. We have good reason to be suspicious of a man's culture when he tells us frankly that he is broad-minded. Social groups, churches and nations that specialize on breadth are apt to be exceedingly narrow. Greatness of this kind is like all greatness, unconscious of itself. We discover a man's breadth by the things in which he is interested and for which he works.

"All Sorts and Conditions of Men."

We exhibit the spirit of Jesus when we pray for all men. It is a narrowness foreign to Christianity to exclude from our benevolent interests the people of any race or class. The fostering of race prejudice is one of the anti-Christian practices of conventional disciples of Jesus. The Jew thought race loyalty demanded of him that he should hate the Samaritan. Not a few modern men who pride themselves on their science and social progress seem to think that they must destroy the prosperity of other nations in order to promote that of their own. We have absurd, provincial notions of race superiority. We imagine that because the Chinaman is different from us he is therefore inferior to us. Then there is class feeling. We ridicule the men who belong to a group to which we do not belong. Jesus bids us look for the common humanity in all men.

All the Needs of All.

Sectarianism is interested in all men but not in all their legitimate desires. It insists that men shall desire only certain things. One kind of sectarianism denies that men have a right to inquire freely into the ways of nature. It attempts to say beforehand what discoveries shall be made by historians and students of the natural and social sciences. Another kind of sectarianism would place undue restraint upon the play instincts of men. It would have men torture themselves. Its saints retire from the world to cultivate "spirituality." Of whatever sort it is, sectarianism is trying to convince men that it is better to live a partial life than a whole one. The spirit of true religion rejoices in the variety of good traits of character it can find. It does not expect all men to be of one type.

Counterfeit Breadth.

The blind leaders of Isaiah's day who called evil good and good evil, who put bitter for sweet and sweet for bitter, may have thought they were free from all unreasonable prejudices, that they were emancipated men. If they did not, men of their kind have since their day boasted of wide culture and liberality. Every crook whom you seek to expose warns you against prejudice and fanaticism. The medical quacks who rob their victims of money and health denounce as selfishness the indignation of courageous physicians who endeavor to protect the public against fraud. The world has in it a vast host of social and religious quacks who invite us to engage them to treat all social and spiritual diseases. They have sharp tongues which they are ready to use against any critic who points out the real nature of their business. It is not broad-mindedness that allows fools to tinker with the virtue and happiness of mankind without interference, it is lack of insight and of courage.

John 3:16; Rom. 5:8; Eph. 2:4-7; 2 Thess. 2:16-17; 1 John 4:11-13; Mark 2:15-17; Matt. 18:11-14; 11:3-6.

A New York City street beggar who was sent to jail for mendicancy was discovered to be the owner of a valuable apartment-house in which he lived in style.

Our Readers' Opinions

MR. BRYAN AND PROHIBITION.

Editor the Christian Century:

I have been interested in your presentation of Mr. Bryan's views on Prohibition, and in Mr. Taylor's defense of him. Perhaps there should be included in this discussion the record of Mr. Bryan's work in the Ohio campaign last October. If Mr. Taylor can explain this record so that it will reflect credit upon the Commoner he will be performing a real service.

Mr. Bryan came into the Buckeye state and made a number of speeches, urging the citizens to elect as governor the only candidate who refused to declare himself in favor of state prohibition, and whose record showed his close affiliation with the liquor interests. Continually, Mr. Bryan was urged to declare hmself on the burning issue, which was the proposed prohibition amendment to the state constitution, and he refused to say one word about it. Thus by his silence and by his advocacy of the booze candidate he threw his tremendous influence against us in our struggle for a dry state.

I should like very much to think that our Secretary of State is bigger than partisan politics and that his interest in righteousness is far above the touch of policy, but such incidents as the above keep persistently getting in my way.

LIGHT FROM "MEANING OF BAPTISM."

Editor The Christian Century:

I want to express my appreciation, and thank you for the profit afforded by reading your book "The Meaning of Baptism." Nothing read in recent years has been so illuminating. Fairfield's "Letters on Baptism," read twenty years ago, is the only thing comparable, as I now recall impressions. There are other arguments to my mind, but for many years the strongest against baptism as primarily and always immersion has been that which you pointedly emphasize, the mental and moral revulsion towards the physical act being the essential thing in baptism.

That the initiation rather than the cleansing idea should receive the emphasis in the New Testament baptizo is new to me, and while it appealed to me strongly, could not be followed conscientiously quite as far as you did. In your chapters on "Baptism and Conversion," and "The Symbolism of Baptism" it seems to me you leave no adequate place for that justifying and justification of which Paul so freely speaks.

I am quite sure if ever the Christian world unites upon immersion as the one mode of baptism, it will be upon some such plan as you suggest, not by the acceptance of the idea that the New Testament baptizo primarily and always means immerse.

Some of your arguments in "The Case of Immersion," become to my mind arguments against. For example on page 201 you say "The implication in the practice of plural modes is that the mode chosen by the candidate is held to be superior in virtue to the other." My foot note on that page indicates the trend: "Then the universal practice of immersion would imply that it is in fact and without question the superior mode, which is the very point that the non-immersionist cannot, in conscience, allow. He could accept and practice it as equal, but not as superior."

A LATER COMMUNICATION FROM A. W. TAYLOR.

Since writing you the earlier note the January issue of Bryan's Commoner has come to my desk. In it is a blazing condemnation of the liquor traffic's states rights protest. The Secretary of State says, "It only brings 'states rights' into ridicule to have the phrase made a mask for a disreputable business which is fighting to perpetuate the privilege of debauching a nation." Again he says, "Woe unto the man who pleads 'states rights' against national prohibition and then allies himself with the liquor interest in his state." Such mis-inferences as that the Century made led Mr. Bryan to make his position clear in two ringing editorials in this issue. He made no opposition to the Hobson resolution, but said he would vote for it; he said only that he believed the time was not ripe for national prohibition until a larger number of states had voted dry but he also said that when a majority of the people want national prohibition no plea as to local government would have any effect. A. W. T.

THE FEBRUARY CENTURY.

In education lies the hope of the world today—education in its broadest sense, education which will bring us all to larger realization and understanding of other races and peoples—this might be the keynote of the February Century, sounded by W. Morgan Shuster in his brilliant presentation of "Peace and Disarmament," some reflections of a neutral on war and education; by Edwin Davies Schoonmaker who makes some startling statements while he discusses the question "Has the Church Collapsed?" by Arthur Bullard who in his article on "National Defense" declares that military strength is not the only, or by any means the best form of protection; most strongly of all, perhaps, by Marion Craig Wentworth whose one-act play "War Brides" voices the passionate protest of the women of the world who are "strong and to keep the world going, to keep sacred the greatest things in life—love and home and work," yet they are kept "dumb, silent drudges."

"Promise to see to it that if we bear you the men for your nation, there shall be no more war. See to it that they shall not go forth to murder and be murdered. That is fair. We will do our part,—we always have. We bear and rear and agonize. Well, if we are fit for that, we are fit to have a voice in the fate of the men we bear. If we can bring forth the men for the nation, we can sit with you in your councils and shape the destiny of the nation, and say whether it is to war or peace we give the sons we bear."

Samuel P. Orth's analysis of "England: Imperial Opportunist," Adachi Kinnosuke's interpretation of "Kiao-Chau, and Its Meaning" from a Japanese point of view, and short stories by Caroline Duer, Marie Conway Oemler, Katherine Fullerton Gerould, P. G. Wodehouse, and William T. Nichols are other features to be noted in a number of live and stimulating interests.

A New Book.

Dare We Be Christians? By Walter Rauschenbusch. A comment, in the terms of the new social gospel, on Paul's great message in the 13th chapter of First Corinthians. The implications of Christianity carry very far in the direction of a new order of life based on love. Are we really serious in affirming it, or is it merely a theory to be given æsthetic and sentimental statement? The world waits only for the gospel of love to find actual expression in life. Dare Christians commit themselves to the experiment, or shall they continue to make the great refusal? The heart of the book is a striking paraphrase of Paul's message on love in the language of social Christianity. (Pilgrim Press. 35 cents, net.)

Disciples Table Talk

Men and Millions Meeting.

The Men and Millions meeting at Decatur, Ill., in January proved to be a very fine success. It is reported that a hundred and fifty leaders of Illinois churches were in attendance. This is about half the attendance of a state convention and is very creditable for a meeting in which numbers have not been emphasized.

Noted Minister Goes Home.

James O. Shelburne, for six years pastor of Central church, Dallas, Tex., whose illness was recently reported, died at his home at Lancaster, Tex., on Jan. 11. He was known among his brethren as a man of great evangelistic power. During his ministry, he had held evangelistic meetings in nearly all of the middle west states. He was born in Lee county, Virginia, and was forty-four years of age at the time of his death. He is survived by a widow, five sons and one daughter. The funeral was conducted by Frederick H. Kershner, president of Texas Christian University, and Harry D. Smith, pastor of Central church of Dallas.

Hiram House Head Founds Church.

F. G. Strickland, part of his life a minister of the "Christian denomination" but a graduate of Hiram college and founder of Hiram House in Cleveland, has founded a new church at Dayton, O., which will be known as "The Church of the Working People." The organization will take its ideals from the writings of Prof. Rauschenbusch and Rev. Bouck White. Though Mr. Strickland is a socialist, he declares that a belief in socialism will not be necessary to membership in the church which he has founded.

Minister Refuses Declaration on Beer Parties.

Charles C. Purdy, who is preaching for a Disciple church in Missouri, and who is also a member of the freshmen law class of the University of Missouri, recently found himself in an embarrassing situation. The class had a beer party at which he was not present and the president of the university exacted a promise the next day from the whole class "to cut beer parties." The minister refused to make the promise as it seemed to carry an implication that was objectionable. Fifteen members of the class had been arrested for a disturbance arising from a class meeting.

Raising Funds to Build.

Oak Cliff church of Dallas, Tex., has arranged for a revival with home leadership. One week of cottage prayer-meetings is to be followed by preaching which, it is hoped, will bring in many new members. Following this, an effort will be made to secure funds for a new building.

Concerned for the Unemployed.

Otto B. Irelan, pastor of the church at Santa Clara, Cal., took for his sermon subject "What Shall We Do With the Unemployed?" at a recent church service. The text was Gal. 6:2 and Gal. 6:5. He said in part: "I have been distressed often in passing through San Francisco in having men stop me on the street and ask me for a cup of coffee and a little something to eat. Are they impostors? Maybe so. But it is not only this winter, but any winter. If it is owing to unusual circumstances it would seem that unusual circumstances are quite usual at this time of year. Besides this is by no means the only indication of winter poverty in California. The 'Problem of the unemployed' is perennial. Street speakers sometimes announce it in connection with quite menacing sentiments. An acquaintance with many respectable and God-fearing homes will reveal the same. Statistics show that in our state temporary jobs are very much more numerous in the summer than the winter, and doubtless this is the real foundation of the trouble."

Pastor Opposes Boxing.

The mayor at Akron, O., has rendered decisions about boxing contests which have proven very obnoxious to the church element in his city. Leading the forces of reform in Akron, L. N. D. Wells, pastor of High Street church, was appointed by the ministers of the various denominations as chairman of a special committee to confer with attorneys as to the best way to stop the Welsh-Griffith fight which was scheduled for Feb. 1. The leading churches have sent the mayor resolutions which have been ignored and now is to come opposition to the sporting element of a more determined sort.

Dr. W. C. Bower, who will speak to Chicago Ministers at the City Club next Monday, telling of his tour of investigation of the Foreign Mission fields.

Every-Member Canvass Brings Revival.

The men of Linwood Boulevard church, Kansas City, were organized to conduct the Every-Member Canvass recently. After their work was most successfully done, they began looking about for other forms of church work and their organization was maintained. The result was the Laymen's Revival which is now going on in the church. A hundred of the men stand by the pastor, Burris A. Jenkins, in his work of preaching the gospel every night. The special meetings began on Jan. 17 and up to Jan. 29 there were already 120 accessions to the church. There is a volunteer chorus singing the old-time hymns such as "I Love to Tell the Story." With regard to the music the pastor said, "No schottishes, no polka, no cornet, or orchestra will be used, but only the good hymns that the people are accustomed to sing. There are no flaming advertisements as the church is anxious not to offend good taste in any way. Probably half of the additions are by confession of faith. A number of old yellow church letters have been turned in. People have been received from many denominations on account of the spirit of fellowship in the church. Some of the denominations represented in the additions are Presbyterian, Episcopalian, Methodist, Baptist, Lutheran, Seventh Day Adventist, and Christian Scientist. The disposition seems to be to cross denominational lines for convenience's sake, feeling that denominational differences are not vital to this day, and many of these people say they expect to remain loyal to their former tenets, and on future occasion in another community they may return to their former denominational fellowship. The meeting will probably go on for another week. On Jan. 31, the new Sunday-school building. Atkins' Memorial hall, a structure seating 1,500 people was dedicated. There are various classrooms with disappearing partitions. The building also provides for men's club rooms, a handsome organ, and all the modern appointments. All told, the building cost about $60,000.

In New York City there are twenty-nine Protestant Episcopal churches with more than a thousand members each.

Annual Meeting at Los Angeles, Cal.

The annual meeting of the First Christian Church, Los Angeles, Cal., was held on the evening of Jan. 8, and was attended by a large number of members. Those present sat down to a turkey dinner, served by the ladies of the church. Reports showed a total of $14,409.53 raised by all departments during the year, of which sum nearly $4,000 was for missions and benevolences. The minister, Russell F. Thrapp, reported one-hundred and twenty-nine members added at regular services. The treasurer reported a balance at the end of the year. This church stands eighth in the amount contributed to Foreign Missions by Disciple churches in America last year. Miss M. Lucile Decker is the efficient church secretary. The church is situated at the corner of Eleventh and Hope streets, in the very center of the city. It welcomes visitors to the city at the services during the exposition year. They will maintain an information booth as well.

Louis R. Patmont Accused of Crime.

Soon after leaving the offices of the religious publishing house in Cincinnati, where he was employed, Louis R. Patmont was arrested for arson and other offenses, say the public prints. It is reported that his wife accuses him of burning down the building in which they lived in New Jersey and collecting the insurance money. It is also reported that he collected five hundred dollars blackmail from a man who was supposed to be intimate with his wife, though this intimacy did not exist. The wife testifies that Mr. Patmont fixed up his mysterious disappearances to get publicity to sell a book and to create demand for his lectures, and she was ordered to make great public professions of grief, so it is said. The grand jury in New Jersey has returned an indictment and the mystery of the Patmont case, whatever it is, will soon see the light of day.

Energetic Work at Richmond, Ind.

The men of First church, Richmond, Ind., have just completed the every-member canvass in that church with greatly increased financial assets for the church. The men who did the work were greatly helped. The pastor, L. E. Murray, started an evangelistic campaign with home forces recently and during the meetings will call to his assistance the pastor of Central church, and also the pastors of the Methodist and Presbyterian churches.

A Good Pastoral Report.

J. A. Canby, of Uhrichsville, O., reports that in 1914 he made 1,500 calls. He held 22 funerals and conducted 9 marriages. There were 112 additions to the church. The church purchased a property so that it now owns a full quarter of a block.

Pastor Inducts Own Children Into Church.

On Wednesday evening, Jan. 6, there was a service at First church, Bloomington, Ill., which brought joy to everybody. The pastor, Edgar DeWitt Jones, took the confession of his own children, three little girls and a boy and they were inducted into the church in the beautiful rite of baptism. The next Sunday morning when in the presence of the large congregation these were given their first communion there was a most impressive moment. The pastor preached on "Consider the Children" from the text Mt. 18:1, 2. Mr. Jones is widely known for his advocacy of "the child in the midst" church.

Church Continues to Help Belgians.

The church at Ann Harbor, Mich., is continuing its work in the aid of the Belgians. Two more huge boxes were shipped last week. As soon as the present supply of material is worked up, there will be another box. The church will buy and ship 200 blankets shortly. They must secure some baby food, for the babies of Belgium are reported to be faring the very worst of all.

Opens Pastorate with Evangelism.

Samuel E. Fisher of Dixon, Ill., recently took the pastorate at Petersburg, Ill., and began with evangelistic meetings by which 23 new members were taken into the church. The Sunday-school has increased in attendance fifty per cent. There are 400 members at Petersburg.

Preacher Sells Business Interests.

Geo. L. Snively, who has been carrying some business interests in connection with religious work, has sold them all out and will devote himself henceforth to preaching. He has been much in demand for dedicating churches but hopes to give himself henceforth to evangelism.

Do you wish to teach the principles of

to your adult class? If so, you will want to use as the basis for your work. This is a monthly magazine, edited by Dr. Josiah Strong. In this little publication is given the most vital, timely, thought provoking, reverent and satisfying treatment of the big problems of the social order that has ever been offered to Sunday-schools. Rev. S. G. Buckner, pastor at Somerset, Pa., who uses this literature in his great men's class of 150, says it is absolutely the best thing published for the men's Bible class. The subscription price—50c a year—makes it less expensive than the usual adult lesson literature. Pastors and church leaders who wish to put into their church work new zest and inspiration will recognize at once the value of starting their classes in the study of Social Reform. Send 5c in stamps for a single copy of the magazine.

The Gospel of The Kingdom

In and Around Chicago

Rev. Asa McDaniels, who will leave the Harvey, Ill., work, May 1.

There was a Chinese wedding at Jackson Blvd. church, on a recent evening. The groom, George Mark, is a member of the church where he was married. The bride, Miss Ellen Lee, is not a member. Austin Hunter was assisted by Rev. John Lee, pastor of the Chinese Evangelical church.

Miss Victoria Booth Clibborn, a granddaughter of General Booth of the Salvation Army, will lecture at Jackson Blvd. church on Feb. 3. The announcement has created much interest in the church.

Asa McDaniel, of Harvey, supplied the pulpit at Douglas Park church on Sunday, Jan. 31.

Lloyd Miller of Akron, O., preached at Metropolitan church on Jan. 24. It is understood he was a candidate for the pulpit.

Charles M. Sharpe has been preaching a series of Sunday evening sermons at Monroe Street church on "The World Religions" which concluded with "Christianity, the World Religion." The audiences were very good during the entire series.

E. S. Ames was in Indianapolis the past week where he was under engagement to deliver his lecture on Macterlinck to the Woman's Club of that city.

Letters have been received at the Hyde Park church from Guy Sarvis and Mr. Hamilton, who are at the University of Nanking. One of the most important facts in the letters was the announcement of the birth of a daughter in the Sarvis home. Mr. Hamilton is studying the language in the language school and is making good progress.

E. S. Ames is teaching two courses in the University of Chicago this quarter, one on Ethics and the other on the History of Modern Philosophy.

Grant K. Lewis, Secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society, spoke before the Ministerial Association on Feb. 1. A good attendance is expected at the City Club, 315 Plymouth court, on Feb. 8 to hear Stephen J. Corey and Prof. Bower.

Grant K. Lewis, Secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society, spoke in Chicago churches on Jan. 31. He was at Jackson Blvd. church in the morning, at Austin church at night.

Irving Park church has inaugurated a Christmas Savings Club at the church in cooperation with a local bank. A plan is arranged by which each person co-operating will have twelve dollars at Christmas time. A lady has contributed a hundred dollars to fit up a study in the church and a telephone will soon be installed, when the pastor, W. G. Winn, will establish regular office hours in the building.

New York City Notes

The Disciples' Missionary Union of Greater New York and vicinity, is happy to report one of the best year's work in its history.

The three English-speaking missions and the Russian mission show the following work accomplished:

Days of service, 1,433.
Sermons, 342.
Baptisms, 79.
Accessions by letter and statement, 54.
Membership, 353.
Enrollment Bible-school, 977.
Average attendance, Bible-school, 696.
Money raised for self-support, $2,700.05.
Money raised for building, $19,254.66.
Money raised for missions, $158.75.
Total moneys raised, $23,053.96.

The coming year our plans include an enlargement of the work; especially is this true in regard to numbers and thoroughness of the work, and in one of the missions, a needed enlargement and improvement of the property.

At Edgewater, where it was decided best that the Disciples' Missionary Union no longer assist, the mission itself has taken over its property, and is most courageously attempting the carrying on of the work itself, for which the Disciples' Missionary Union is most grateful.

Pictures of Missionary Triumphs.

F. L. Moffett, pastor of South St. church, of Springfield, Mo., gave an illustrated lecture in Republic, Mo., recently in behalf of the work of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. He has been appointed for some special service in connection with this society this spring.

Lay a Cornerstone.

The congregation at Gill, Colo., is getting ready to have a home of its own. A church building is being moved from Bethel, and the foundation has been prepared to receive the structure. On a recent Sunday, services were held in the hall and after the sermon the congregation adjourned to the site of the new church location and the cornerstone was laid on the foundation. In the cornerstone were various mementoes of the community which will be preserved for the scrutiny of future generations.

Garfield Club Meets.

Jackson Ave. church, of Spokane, Wash., has a Garfield Club. This is a fraternal organization of young men. They met recently and elected officers for the coming year, formulating the program of work for their organization during the next twelve months.

"Sunshine Club" Parades.

J. J. Harris, who is holding evangelistic meetings at Monmouth, Ill., has organized a "Sunshine Club," composed of a hundred children between the ages of four and sixteen. These children paraded the streets one day during the meeting singing "Dub-dub-dub, we're members of the Sunshine Club." The children carried banners and flags. They were so enthusiastic in their demonstrations that the shoppers all stopped for a look.

Celebrate their Successes.

The annual meeting of Forest Grove, Ore., congregation was held around the dinner table one evening recently. There were 125 present. The Sunday-school averaged 187 in attendance last year which was an increase of 23. The pastor reported a net increase of membership in the church since April 1 of 31. There was received in the building fund $1,608.56 and in the current expense fund $2,233.46. The missionary fund showed receipts of $395.27, besides $140 of C. W. B. M. money. There were unpaid bills of $120 with unpaid pledges of $182.

Speaks to Typos.

M. E. Chatley, pastor of Memorial church in Rock Island, Ill., was the speaker at the meeting of the Typothetae Club of Moline, Rock Island and Davenport on Jan. 16. The occasion was the birthday of Benjamin Franklin which falls upon Jan. 17. A large company of the printers were present to pay honor to the patron saint of the printers.

Missionary Work Needed in Iowa.

The weekly bulletin of First church, Cedar Rapids, Ia., is authority for the statement that there are in Iowa 16 counties without any Disciple church, twelve others with only one church, and ten others in which there are but two churches. In these thirty-eight counties but little work is being done by any other Protestant people, the communities being fully in need of the gospel.

Figures Do Not Lie.

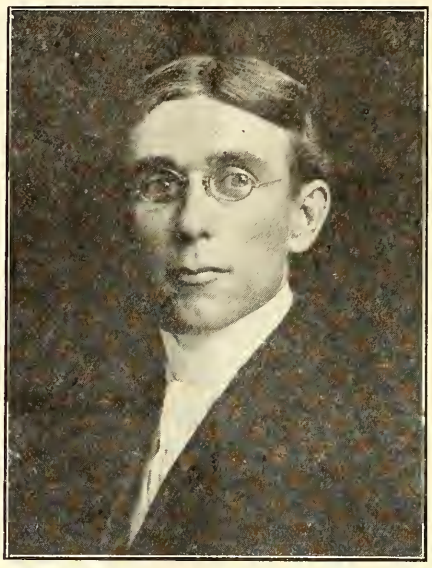
Very often a community does not realize the amount of good work the church is doing until confronted with the figures. The church at Columbia, Mo., where Madison A. Hart is located did constructive work last year. The total disbursements were $7,631.30. Accessions to the church were 135, 50 being by confession of faith. The resident membership of the church is 900. The average attendance in the Sunday school was 391. The church is a living link in foreign missions, supporting Dr. Jennie Fleming. It is also a living link in Ministerial Relief.

A Summary of Reports.

The reports at First church, Paducah, Ky., where W. A. Fite is pastor, have been nicely summarized. They indicate that the congregation raised last year $8,027.84. Of this, $1,056.20 went to missions. There were 49 additions during the year, of which 29 were by confession of faith. The net gain in membership was 21.

Hold a Parcel Post Sale.

The Ladies' Aid Society at Benton, Ill., has developed an ingenious idea, which they call a Parcel Post Sale. The members are writing to their friends outside of town for parcel post packages which are to be auctioned off at the home of one of the members at ten cents each. The packages are sold without opening.



Rev. J. C. Todd, of Indiana University Bible Chair, who, undismayed by the burning of the Bible Chair Building, is campaigning for $50,000 for a new structure.

Mrs. R. A. Long as Philanthropist.

Mrs. R. A. Long furnished material for the women of the Christian churches of Kansas City at their "council needle day" held at the Independence Boulevard church recently. The purpose of the gathering was to sew garments for Mercy Hospital, the orphanage in St. Louis and the Florence Crittenden home.

Preacher Would Go to Congress.

J. E. Lyon, a minister in Monroe county, Kentucky, has announced that he is a candidate for representative in the coming congressional elections. He will spend most of the time for the next few months in pushing the interests of his candidacy.

Church Statistics from Louisville, Ky.

Broadway church of Louisville, Ky., W. N. Briney, pastor, has published its statistics for 1914. There were 201 additions to the membership, 103 by confession of faith. The net gain in membership was 170. The Sunday-school attendance ran better than in any previous year. The church raised $5,936.27 for local expenses and the missionary treasurer reported $1,319.52 given to missionary enterprises. The grand total of all money raised in all organizations was $11,361.12.

Join in Union Meeting.

Coshocton, O., is in the midst of a union revival led by John S. Hamilton of Cleveland. There is a tabernacle to house the enterprise which is often overcrowded. Three thousand people marched in line one evening led by the Salvation Army band.

Loyal Married Folks at University Place.

The Loyal Married Folks Bible-class at University Place church, Des Moines, recently held a banquet in the church dining room for the new Billy Sunday converts who have been added to the church. The basement was prettily decorated with bells, holly and poinsettias.

Church Given a Bulletin Board.

Mrs. Charles Coleman of Franklin, O., thought her church should be modern in its advertising methods so she and her class of girls bought and paid for a bulletin board for the church and it is now on the front of the church building telling of all the interesting plans of work of the congregation.

Debt Cleared and New Parsonage.

The church at Wauseon, O., reports that they cleared off all indebtedness last year and also built a parsonage. The financial receipts were four thousand dollars. The average Sunday-school attendaunce was 279 for the year.

Success at Muncie, Ind.

Jackson street church at Muncie, Ind., had a very good year in 1914 according to the report of the church. They raised $7,000 of which $2,000 went for missionary purposes. They now hold a junior church service in the basement at the same time as the senior service and the Loyal Worker's class has opened a new church work at Congerville.

Kansas City and Vicinity

The recent laymen's revival held at the Independence Blvd. Church of Kansas City, resulted in about one hundred additions to the church, and the development of the evangelistic spirit among the men which promises much good in the future. The men's brotherhood of this church has agreed to take charge, two evenings in every month, of evangelistic meetings which will be held in the basement of the city hall throughout the months of January, February and March. This is an experiment being tried by the federated churches of the city, and those promoting the enterprise are very enthusiastic and hopeful of results. The city hall is situated in the North end of Kansas City, and this meeting will catch the floaters and the down-and-outs who never attend any church services.

The annual dinner of the Joint Board of Disciples in Greater Kansas City will be held in the Independence Blvd. Christian Church on the evening of February 4. This dinner brings together about four hundred of the representative men and women of all the churches in this city. This year Dr. Joseph M. Gray, pastor of a large down town Methodist church will address the Disciples on the subject of The Church and Down Town. Dr. W. S. Abernathy, pastor of the First Baptist church of this city, will also speak on this occasion, his subject being, What a United Church Can Do in Kansas City. Rev. F. L. Bowen, the City Missionary, and Mr. Fletcher Cowherd, President of the Missionary Board, are the Disciples who will speak.

The Linwood Blvd. Christian Church is now in a series of meetings: Dr. B. A. Jenkins is preaching every evening. There have been between thirty and forty additions during the first week of these meetings, and the interest in them is gradually deepening.

The women of Kansas City are taking a very active interest in the unemployed women in the city, and Mrs. R. S. Latshaw, as chairman of the committee appointed by the mayor, has arranged for a large room in the down town district which has been converted into a sewing room where it is planned to keep scores of these who have been unemployed busy during the weeks of winter weather. All the churches of the Disciples are giving assistance in the worthy enterprise which indicates that the social conscience of the church is rapidly developing.

The church at Independence, Missouri, has been in a meeting for three weeks with Mr. Hamilton and the Stewarts; up to the present time there have been about one hundred additions to the church, and the pastor reported large audiences in attendance at all the meetings. Rev. H. K. Pendleton is the minister at Independence.

L. J. M.

Church Trouble Adjusted.

There was serious trouble in the church at Cooper, Tex., over the selection of elders, so that two factions were locking each other out of the building and each had hired a lawyer. The law firms, impressed by the impropriety of such methods of settling church difficulties, suggested a wise arbiter, who would settle things out of court. J. W. Denton, pastor at Roxton, Tex., was chosen as the arbiter, and by his wise handling of the case, he has brought the people together and healed the schism.

Ministers Make Exchange.

Congregations in Martinsville, Ind., were surprised to see a strange minister in the pulpit in each church the evening of Jan. 17. E. Richard Edwards of the Disciple church spoke in the Presbyterian church.

Pastor Announces a Book Study.

W. S. Lockhart, of Houston, Tex., has announced that he will use four Sunday evenings to review the book "What Men Live By," by Richard C. Cabot. The four evenings will be spent with the four divisions of the book and will deal with Work, Play, Love and Worship.

Three Addresses on Bible Chair.

J. C. Todd, who conducts Bible Chair work at the University of Indiana, and whose classrooms and dwellings burned down recently, was at Anderson, Ind., on Jan. 17 and spoke to Central church both morning and evening. In the afternoon, he spoke to the Arrow Ave. church. The purpose of these visits is to secure funds for a new building and to inform the people of the importance of the Bible Chair work. It is the plan to raise $50,000.

Pastor Back after Resignation.

The congregation at Davenport, Ia., did not accept the resignation of J. T. Houser. He went away for an evangelistic meeting and while he was away the church changed the personnel of its official board and voted to retain the pastor.

Cecil J. Sharpe Written Up.

The work done by Cecil J. Sharpe at Hammond, Ind., has been written up in the Chicago Daily News in a half column article. He began with this church twelve years ago by fixing a leaky roof. He was a schoolmaster. Then he became a minister. Since then the congregation has grown from thirteen to nine hundred and there is now a building seating 12,000. The church has organized other churches in several towns. A congress of church workers will be held here in the early spring. Hammond is twenty-five miles out from Chicago.

Burns to the Ground.

The church edifice at Turlock, Cal., burned to the ground on January 10. The fire was not discovered until the whole interior of the building was in a blaze. The structure was put up in 1911 at a cost of twelve thousand dollars. The insurance on the building was $7,500. It was reported to be the finest church edifice in the town. On the Sunday previous to the fire, a defective flue had produced a small blaze but this was fixed under the direction of the insurance companies interested. The Presbyterian congregation of the city has offered the homeless group a place of worship with them while plans are being formulated for a new edifice.

Leaves Ministry for Automobile Business.

A minister of seventeen years' experience has left the pulpit for the automobile business. Menzo B. Ainsworth, who is widely known in central Kentucky, has resigned at the Georgetown church to become the manager of the Prather Demountable Automobile Wheel Company. The company is about to extend its operations and will incorporate with fifty thousand dollars' worth of capital.

White Elephant is Gone.

Burdened with debt, the South Berkeley, Cal., church has had a struggle to free itself. During Jan., T. A. Boyer held a revival meeting for the church, as part of his service, he conducted a campaign to free the congregation from its incumbrance. The result was a complete victory which has given them much encouragement for the future.

Forgets to Preach.

Charles M. Hay, an attorney, and a lay member of First church, St. Louis, has established a new record for absent-mindedness. He had accepted an invitation to fill the pulpit at First church on Sunday evening, Jan. 17, in the absence of the pastor, John L. Brandt. A good congregation assembled but no one appeared to conduct the service. The officers got through with the opening exercises and took the collection but grew more apprehensive every minute. At last they were compelled to confess they were without a preacher. Then a messenger was sent to telephone Mr. Hay, who was reading at home in a big leather chair. "Aren't you coming down to preach that sermon you promised?" was the bombshell that dropped into his home to disturb the luxuriant repose of the evening. He was too far away to reach the church in time, so R. A. Newton, of Ravanna, Mo., who happened to be in the congregation was impressed into the service.

Doubled Membership Brings Salary Raise.

In gratitude for the efficient services of the pastir, Ford A. Ellis, who in a single year doubled the membership of the church at Traverse City, Mich., the congregation of that city voted a substantial increase of salary to their leader. There were 208 additions in this church last year. Mr. Ellis is a young man and is much interested in civic matters.

More Patmont Stories.

The press continues to print stories of the alleged persecutions of Louis R. Patmont. The latest report is of a lecture given at Griswold, Ia., where a record audience filled the Disciple church. He received a collection of twenty-two dollars and the following day started away. A mysterious stranger was reported following him, so after this stranger was safely settled in the smoker, Mr. Patmont left the train and started to Cincinnati by another route. The mysterious stranger has to the present writing not been identified.

Resigns to Fight Booze.

I. H. Burgess who has been pastor for three years at Berryville, Ark., has tendered his resignation to enter the field against the liquor interests. He will make his headquarters in Berryville and will work to make his entire county dry. The county is nominally under prohibition, but the laws are notoriously violated throughout the county.

News from the Foreign Society

W. R. Hunt, who is spending his furlough as Chaplain in one of the Y. M. C. A. camps in London.

A recent note from Dr. Miller and wife and Ray E. Rice and wife, on their way to India, after having touched at England, says: "You will be glad to know that we are away from England safely and are now approaching Gibralter. We were relieved to land safely in Liverpool, but found we would have to take ship from London. We threaded our way through the mouth of the Thames in which we had anchored all night. We then made our way to Plymouth and worked in and out there yesterday morning. Our anxiety was not over until we got away from there in safety. We now feel that there is no real danger ahead." A cable since the above letter announces their safe arrival at Bombay.

A. G. Saunders, Laoag, P. I., has been called to Australia by the serious illness of his mother. She is suffering from cancer and may not live very long. He has made good progress in the study of the language and wishes to return as soon as he can do so and resume work.

W. R. Hunt, missionary of the Foreign Society in China, who is taking his furlough in England, his native land, has found rest in working as one of the chaplains at the Y. M. C. A. camps in London at the White City. He has secured a thousand of the men to join the Pocket Testament League, and takes services among the soldier boys. Scores have decided to become Christians and many of them are now on the firing line.

Dr. L. F. Jaggard of Monieka, Africa, writes that the missionaries are all well. The war has not affected them only as it has affected prices in Europe. Transport has been hindered somewhat but is getting better.

Chas. P. Hedges and Edgar A. Johnston of the Congo country made a short trip to the Bolingo work and felt very much encouraged over it. They had to make the trip in small canoes. It was somewhat of a risk to go thus. They thought the needs of the work justified the risk. When the steel boat that has been requested, is supplied it will not be necessary for the missionaries to take such risks. Mr. Hedges writes that Longa is praying for a doctor. A man who can heal the sick as well as preach the gospel is greatly needed in that part of the field.

Charles P. Hedges, of Longa, Congo, Africa, reports 331 baptisms at all stations for the quarter. The work in general is very encouraging.

John Johnson, of Nantungchow, China, writes: "Although we have not had any additions recently, the work is in a harmonious and healthy condition. It is imperative that a new school building be provided at the earliest possible time. When the doctor comes the hospital will be no longer available for school purposes. Dr. and Mrs. Hagman are now in the language school at Nanking."

On Wednesday, the 30th of December, Miss Mayme Lovine Jackson and Wilford Hall Scott were married. The marriage ceremony took place in the Mission church at Mahoba. Their home address is Silver Oaks, Jubbulpore, C. P., India.

Justin E. Brown, of Luchowfu, China, reports the latest addition to the mission force. His name is Arthur Winfield Brown. He arrived on the field December 8th.

Sec. Stephen J. Corey is speaking in a number of important centers, setting forth impressions of our great work in the Far East. He is commanding large and interested audiences, of course.

Alexander Lee and his brother, Li Ho Fu, have held a good meeting at Chuchow, China. At the close of the meeting a number of non-Christians were enrolled in Bible classes.

A. G. Saunders writes that the work of the Laoag station in the Philippines has gone forward along the usual lines. The Bible schools have maintained more than their usual fine record, the average attendance for the province being 1,793. The Laoag classes have averaged 827. A new section of the town has been entered. The classes here are conducted by three young men. The attendance is about 200. There have been four baptisms in the month. In the Ilocos Norte district there have been sixty-four baptisms since the last half-yearly convention.

F. M. Rains, Secretary.

Report of Central Church, Lebanon, Ind.

Central Church, of Lebanon, Ind., has just closed the greatest year in its history. The total amount raised was $8,507.14, of this amount $2,122.40 was given to missions and benevolences. The church is now out of debt. About $2,500 was raised during the year on debts. Five new Sunday-school rooms were fitted up in the basement of the church. In these rooms was held the first vacation Bible-school last summer. The resident membership of the church is 711. The pastor made 951 calls, preached 97 sermons, made 6 other addresses, married 14 couples, and had 23 funerals. On January 7, the annual dinner and business meeting was held. More than 600 people were present. The outlook for next year is exceptionally good. A. L. Ward is the minister.

Pastor Gathers Statistics.

Frank Waller Allen found a big task awaiting him when he went to First church at Springfield last fall. The church was reputed to have a thousand members scattered all over the city. He set out on a calling campaign which has been followed faithfuly till it is now nearly complete. In three months, 421 calls were made. Out of the 421 calls, 179 were found at home; 166 not at home; 44 were defective addresses; 20 had left the city permanently; two were upon people who had no connection, nor ever had had any connection, with the church; two were upon persons found to be dead; 25 were upon the ill. In each instance where the pastor failed to find the individual upon whom the call was made, a personal letter was written. In this personal letter the individual was told of the call, that it was made purely in the spirit of friendliness, that it was hoped the person in question would be able to attend the services, and that should they need the pastor's ministrations, all that would be necessary for them to do would be to let him know. Two hundred and seventeen such letters have been written. When the address was wrong, every effort was made to discover the correct address. Eighteen letters have been returned, the post office department unable to deliver them.

Church Orchestra Wins Honors.

The orchestra of the Sunday-school at Clarinda, Ia., has taken itself seriously and plays difficult classical music. After a most successful concert at home, it was invited to repeat the concert at College Springs.

Annual Report at Tipton, Ind.

West Street church of Tipton, Ind., has held its annual meeting and the annual report of the congregation has been presented. The pastor, Aubrey Harrell Moore, reported that he had made 600 calls, officiated at 30 weddings, and delivered 13 special addresses. The church received for its budget fund $2,309.50. The church and auxiliary societies gave $352 to missions. The total amount raised in all departments including building fund was $7,505.76. The church has 900 resident members.

Preaches on Life Problems.

Wm. Dunn Ryan, of Central church in Youngstown, O., has announced a series of Sunday evening sermons on life problems to run through this month. Some of the topics in the series are: "School Days, or the Problem of Childhood," "Courtship and Marriage, or the Problem of Home Building," "Getting On in the World, or the Problem of Making a Living," "Gathering Shadows, or the Problem of Trouble," and "Abiding Values, or the Problem of the Future."

Church Has State Living Link.

First church of Lincoln, Neb., supports a living link minister with the state society. They have recently secured Lawrence Dry to be the pastor in this church which is located at Peru, Neb.

Go to Church Once a Month.

Broadway church of Los Angeles has set for its goal to get every member of the church out to service at least once during the month of January. Each member is asked to make twenty-five calls for the church during this month. There have been 12 accessions the first three Sundays of the New Year.

Call for Church Extension Help.

The Church Extension Board reports that only one-third of the appeals for help can be answered. Recent investigations by a Joint Committee of the Home Missions Council of Twenty-two General Home Mission and Church Extension Boards of Protestant Churches (one of the Committee being I. N. McCash) show that in one Western State there are 133 towns of from 150 to 1,000 population without any Protestant work. If the same rate of destitute communities prevails through all the Mountain and Pacific States there are more than 4,000 towns without Protestant work. As these places are developed, there is need of Church Extension money to aid in erecting buildings.

Church Succeeds in Regular Work.

Main Street Church at New Castle, Ind., where W. H. Baker is pastor, is succeeding in its regular work. There have been 32 accessions since last report, and there were 737 present at a recent Sunday-school rally. The C. W. B. M. now has 91 members enrolled, and are striving for the hundred mark. There is prospect of a new building in the near future.

Reach the Mind Through the "Eye Gate"

The most progressive pastors and teachers today are finding that the quickest path to the Kingdom of the Mind is by the way of the "Eye-Gate." It has been scientifically demonstrated that pictures get over three times the results obtained by the use of words. Preach a sermon, teach a lesson, by word of mouth; it takes the message a long time to reach the mind, and too often it is lost after getting to its destination.

Your Church

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desire nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

ENCYCLOPEDIA BIBLICA

3,000 pages, Decorated, Illustrated, 8vo, $6.00 Net

Bible Questions Answered by the Best Progressive Scholarship

Printed on India Paper. By printing on the best Bible paper the four large octavo volumes of the original edition are condensed into one. It is a library in one handy volume for the student's desk.

Correlation of Parts. By common consent the book as a work of reference is strikingly accurate and for convenience of use unsurpassed. The real value of the cross-references only now becomes apparent to the reader when at last he can use the whole work as a single volume.

International Character of Work. The work is international, having been written by 96 specialists, of whom exactly one-third wrote in a foreign language. Roughly it may be said that over a third of the writers belong to England, nearly a third to Scotland (13), Ireland (23), or America (12), and a third use German (28), Dutch (3), or French (1). This international character of the work has given the editors a free hand in selecting the scholars to whom to entrust the various subjects. The only rule has been—"the best available."

Un-Sectarian Character. In the next place, the work is un-sectarian. To say of a work which professes to be scientific that in the selection of writers ecclesiastical connection or independence counts nothing is really superfluous. It is interesting and encouraging, however, to note the result—that, as a matter of fact, among its writers in English are Jews, Episcopalians of various schools, Methodists, Congregationalists, Presbyterians, and Baptists, besides others who do not perhaps represent any specific religious communion.

Thoroughly Modern. No work of this kind is more modern or more authoritative than Encyclopedia Biblica. This is not a reprint from wornout plates but a beautiful piece of printing setting forth conceptions of biblical scholarship held in the great theological seminaries at this hour. Every seminary trained preacher of the past decade has used this work and knows its value.

Equal to 24 Ordinary Books. To secure the equivalent of twenty-four ordinary books which would sell at $1.50 each for a total of six dollars has brought the best learning to the door of the humblest man. Ignorance of biblical problems on the part of ministers and Sunday-school teachers has had one cause removed.

An Epoch-Marking Work. As a mere volume printed and published it admittedly marks an epoch in several respects—for example, in the fact that more than a million words were practically all in type at one time. As a piece of editorial workmanship it has few equals in respect of the skill with which the parts have been, not pinned together, but intimately and organically united. As a singularly weighty contribution to the biblical science of the time, its impulse is admitted perhaps most markedly by those who dissent most strongly from the views defended in some of its articles. It will be impossible to understand the movement of thought on biblical subjects during the next quarter of a century without taking account of the "Encyclopedia Biblica."

SPECIAL OFFER

Encyclopedia Biblica will be sent prepaid on receipt of the price, $6.00.

Encyclopedia Biblica will be given as a premium to anyone who will secure ten new cash subscribers to The Christian Century.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

The Rational and the Spiritual

A CERTAIN RATIONAL TEMPER, CHARACTERISTIC OF THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST, MUST BE COUNTED AS AN ASSET OF PRIME IMPORTANCE IN THEIR TASK OF CONSTRUCTING AN INNER ORDER OF SPIRITUAL LIFE.

Not everybody will agree with such a statement. It is usually assumed that the spiritual life is quite unrelated to the thought-life, that reason stands in the way of the spiritual, that the inner life of fellowship with God is realized in some sort of emotion, in ecstacy, in ununderstood rapture, and that when reason comes in God goes out.

Science, according to this view, is incompatible with religion.

Hence we find a considerable class of churchmen responding with unction to the attacks made from the pulpit upon scholarship, upon science, upon what is loosely covered by the blanket term "higher criticism," upon the method of education in religious work—in short upon any of the manifestations of the quiet, humble, controlled and open-minded passion to know and to impart Truth.

Over against the rational ideal of religion stands the attitude of obscurantism. Obscurantism is a kind of willful determination to cling to traditional and customary conceptions in religion and to refuse to translate them into the thought-life of the present age or to relate them intelligibly and vitally to actual experience.

Obscurantism deliberately and doggedly refuses to think its problems through, and it derives a certain emotional exaltation from this very refusal. It finds its religious satisfactions more in its eclipses of reality than in its insights into reality. Obscurantism is not mysticism. Modern mysticism is open-minded; it is truth-seeking; it is rational—as far as the rational can go. But it recognizes that after the cup of reason has been filled there is a "running over" of reality; it simply says that there is more to the mystery of life than our rational categories can contain.

The rational ideal is not incompatible with mysticism; indeed it looks in the direction of and leads to mysticism. But the rational ideal is the direct antithesis of obscurantism.

The rational ideal also stands over against revivalism in religion.

What is revivalism?

It is the organized effort to reach the individual soul through an artificially created mass situation. It brings to bear upon the individual will the stimulating pressure of the crowd that has been highly magnetized by the manipulations of an expert.

This is the prevailing procedure in present-day churches. Lacking a spiritual life of its own, a spiritual life rooted in and growing out of a conscious perception of Truth, and with its vast institutional interests to maintain, the modern Church resorts to revivalism.

This revivalism is the most conspicuous of many signs of the low ebb of spirituality in the churches. The more conspicuous instances of its success—as, for example, such a work as that of Mr. Sunday—do but make more emphatic the disclosures of the poverty of our inner life.

Real spiritual life is spread abroad from soul to soul through the medium of Truth, not through the medium of highly charged organization. It has no affinity with any form of hypnotism or artificial sensationalism. It speaks in a still, small voice of the thing it sees and has experienced, and it lays foundations in other souls for an answering perception and experience.

With the rational method and ideal of religion the Disciples have much more affinity, historically, than with either the obscurantist habit of mind or the revivalistic method of propaganda. The opposition of our fathers to both obscurantism and revivalism brought down upon them the severest criticisms they had to endure.

They were charged with heresy because they did not accept the prevailing uncritical obscurantist view of a "level Bible," but taught that the Bible lends itself to a rational, discriminating method, which gives authority to some parts of it and denies authority to other parts of it. Mr. Campbell and his co-workers were "higher critics" before "higher criticism" was known.

They were charged with being "rationalists," in the bad sense, because they revolted against the prevailing Calvinistic obscurantism which taught that the Spirit wrought arbitrarily upon the heart of the sinner; while Mr. Campbell taught that the Spirit wrought through the Truth, and won the soul to God as the Truth was perceived and appropriated. Here was a rational psychology set sharply over against an extreme form of obscurantism.

They were charged with infidelity because they could not clothe their message in the garments of trinitarian theology, but preferred the simpler, more practical, more experimental and rational concepts of the New Testament pages.

They were charged with unspirituality because they exposed the unspirituality of the revivalism of their day. They saw that the emotionalism, the hysteria, the nervous phenomena that always accompanied the successful revivals of their time were due to mesmeric influence rather than to the influence of Truth. By methods which were perhaps as untactful as they were effective the Disciples of a half century and more ago often got themselves heartily disliked by entering into one of these highly charged revivals and quietly telling people what to do to be saved in terms of the Scripture itself, that is, in the practical, rational terms of simply complying with the conditions of salvation.

The thrusting of this rational suggestion into the heat of a "mourners' bench" group has been known to break up the meeting.

It will hardly be claimed that this rationalistic habit of the Disciples did not at times mislead us. On the contrary, the truth demands of us to confess frankly that our rationalism came near being our undoing.

Reacting against the obscurantism of the time, we failed to make a conscious enough place for mysticism in our thought-life.

Reacting against the mesmeric revivalism of the time, we failed to organize into the structure of our inner life the Truth we objectively discerned on the pages of the Scripture.

Our rationalism, perhaps, made us religiously precise, even finical, about negligible matters, and thus often unfraternal toward those who did not use our formulas or pronounce our shibboleths.

But for all that, it is no time for us to apologize for our historic adherence to the rational ideal. Those leaders who would plunge us uncritically into the revivalism that now prevails in the churches, those evangelists among us who are imitators of the revivalism against which our fathers protested, and those teachers who would have us take on the type of spirituality which finds its chief affinity with many obscurantist theological notions are changing the direction of our movement.

Our rational temper is an invaluable spiritual asset.

Its full value for the construction of a spiritual life will not appear until the disillusionment stage of modern revivalism is reached.

But in the meantime, in the hands and habits of the Disciples of Christ, the rational principle should help us to construct in the inner life a spiritual order of our own whose depth and richness shall be matched by a sanity and sense of reality that will commend it and us to that large company of thoughtful souls who feel scant affinity for conventional types of piety.

The history and traditional temper of the Disciples fit them to make a contribution from their own inner life which will reconcile the age-long conflict of the rational and the spiritual.

A Modern Prophet of the Love of God

An Interpretation of the Religious Message of George Macdonald.

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT.

In 1894, on Sunday evening, Professor Willett attended an informal company given by the Scotch poet and novelist, then 70 years of age, at his large, gray stone villa at Bordighera in Italy. The evening was devoted to a simple program of religious conversation or semi-lectures and ended with hymns and prayer. It ended also in the traveller and guest taking up with a peculiarly hearty interest a study of the writings of George Macdonald, one of the most prolific and influential writers of the past century and yet one whom but few of our generation read. The present article in interpretation of Macdonald's religious message will prove intensely interesting in itself and may send some readers back to enjoy the almost forgotten "Robert Falconer" and "David Elginbrod."

THE first great service rendered by George Macdonald to his time and later times was the disclosure of Scotch life and speech. By birth and training he was well prepared for this task. So diligently did he set himself to the illustration of Scotch linguistic idioms that some of his pages are almost unintelligible to one inexperienced in that type of literature. To a far greater degree is this true of Macdonald than of Scott, Burns or Barrie. But the charm of his chapters is inexhaustible to those who have the slightest appreciation of the Highland style.

Yet the chief service rendered by Macdonald was in the realm of religion. He came of a race that took theology very seriously. Scott interpreted the character, history and achievements of the Scottish people under many types, and few Scottish traits escaped him. But he had no such conception of the religious depths of Scottish feeling as Macdonald has sounded. Burns with passionate tenderness composed his lyrics of domestic and village life, and displays genuine religious feeling in his "Cotter's Saturday Night." But to Macdonald fell the task of interpreting the religion of Scotland in its broad, popular aspects. And in so doing he has made perfectly clear to all his readers his own reaction against the darker side of Calvinism. The thesis of all his stories is essentially the love of God and the hope of humanity. All his great characters are the spokesmen of his theology.

"GOD IS LOVE."

That theology was original, yet wrought upon by many varying influences. He belonged to no theological school, but shaped his own views of religion from a free and first hand comment upon the current theology of his day. The world-old problem of suffering, and the nearly related one of the origin of evil, which have exercised the minds of men from Job's day, which perplexed Greek philosophers and disturbed the thought of the blind Milton, were the dominant problems of Scotch thinking. Macdonald felt that the nature of the God he loved and worshiped offered a solution of these perplexing enigmas. The freedom of salvation was not inconsistent with a rational doctrine of election. Perhaps men were freer to accept such views in Scotland than in England, for the Chalmerses, the Guthries, the Cairds and the Macleods had preached the divine grace and forgiveness as freely as John Wesley.

George Macdonald went even further than these leaders in his insistence upon the divine nature as love. He was a Moses in the region of religion, leading the people out to a promised land. He taught with a tender and persuasive fire the divine freedom of the soul, and its essential oneness with God. His conception of freedom was based upon the idea of an absolute submission to the divine will, a sense of absorption in the manifest intent of a guiding power which is wholly loving and wholly wise. He was an optimist of most pronounced convictions. He perceived that the universe is essentially good, and that in the divine program there is no darkness. In such a universe one cannot really doubt. All things work together for good. His scheme of things at times approached the borders of a Christian pantheism, with suggestions from Fichte, Novalis, Wordsworth and especially Maurice. But the problems of personality he never encountered. To him the persistence and integrity of life, human and divine, were fundamental. His favorite theological exponent, David Elginbrod, goes further than any of the Calvinists in believing in universal salvation, which is yet not incompatible with the punishment of sin. Future recognition he would accept without reserve. All life is full of satisfaction and enjoyment. Nature is filled with the symbolism of the divine, and the universe is a vision of God. Nowhere does George Macdonald give us any exact definition of sin, yet it is clear that it meant for him the assertion of selfish will by human personality out of harmony with God, and that personality was never absorbed or destroyed.

AN ENEMY OF THEOLOGICAL GLOOM.

Against the sterner and more forbidding aspects of Scotch theology he threw all the influence of his writings. Perhaps he felt that far more can be accomplished in the liberation of the human spirit from the thraldom of obsolete creeds by the ministry of fiction than by all the arts and arguments of the pulpit or the classroom. For this reason he made his stories the vehicles of religious education. Yet so admirable was his method and so free the play of his imagination that few save the watchmen on the walls of Zion were likely to be aware of the subtle and all-pervasive spirit of liberalism which breathed through all of his chapters. He never hesitated to interpolate theological instruction in the midst of his most vivid and romantic narratives. His characters were not complex, but served the purpose either of voicing his convictions in authoritative and final terms or of serving as objects of scorn and rebuke if they took grounds opposed to his sense of the divine order. Then he would break into protest as in the following passage almost at random from one of his most interesting narratives.

He speaks of the evil phantasms of a theology which would explain all of God's doings by low conceptions of right and law and justice, then only taking refuge in the fact of the incapacity of the human understanding when its own inventions are impugned as undivine. In such systems hell is invincibly the deepest truth, and the love of God is not so deep as hell. Hence as foundations must be laid in the deepest truth; the first article in his creed was "I believe in hell."

ALWAYS A PREACHER.

George Macdonald was essentially a preacher all his life long. No matter what he did, whether in prose or poetry, whether in the class room or the pulpit, whether in his parlor in one of his pleasant afternoon at-homes, or in his library at work, he was still preaching. "Did you ever hear me preach?" said Coleridge to Lamb one day. "I never heard you do anything else," was the reply. The same might have been said of George Macdonald. For that reason probably his ministers in the stories are among the most interesting of his characters. He has several strong ministerial types. One of the best is Dr. Armstrong in "Adla Cathart." He does not wish to confine himself, he says, to religious work among old ladies, but wishes to work with men as preacher, and more not less than man. Dr. Watson in "The Annals of a Quiet Neighborhood," is another admirable example of the man of God, and so is Mr. Cowie, the wise and friendly pastor in "Alec Forbes." In fact, his best characters are always preachers, no matter what their vocation may happen to be. Thomas Crann the stone mason is a fine type of the Puritan spirit. Calvinism in a strong man like him is a sublime faith. David Elginbrod is perhaps his most impressive character. He believed that God is wholly love and that therefore hell itself must be subservient to that love, an embodiment of it. In his argument for the sympathy of the divine Father, David refers to his daughter Margaret, between whom and himself there was a beautiful bond of affection and understanding. He would rather see her dead, he declared, than touched by the blot of sinfulness; but if he learned that her character had thus been stained, would he not take her in his arms in sympathy and protection? And he added, "Shall man be more just than God?"

HIS MOST FAMOUS CHARACTER.

David had inherited something of that spiritual audacity which breathes through the ancient epitaph engraved on a monument in an Aberdeen cemetery, and appropriated by the novelist as the sentiment of David's father:

Here lie I, Martin Elginbrodde,
Hae mercy o'my soul, Lord God;
As wad I do, were I Lord God,
And ye were Martin Elginbrodde.

It was generally understood in the parish up the glen where David lived that he was not religious beyond the degree which is supposed to be the general inheritance of Scotchmen, possibly in virtue of their being brought up on oatmeal porridge and the shorter catechism. Yet his force of character and the high respect in which he was held caused him to be nominated for elder in the church, an honor, however, which he declined. His readings in the Holy Scripture were the delight of his daughter Margaret, and the marvel of his wife Janet, a devout and unquestioning believer. The fortieth chapter of Isaiah was his sanctuary, and his prayers were a revelation of human speech with God. One day after the chapter in Genesis had been read, he turned to his wife and said, if translation into commonplace English can take the place of the unapproachable Scotch dialect:

"Janet, do you believe that ever a serpent spoke?"

"Well, David, the devil was in him you know."

"The devil a word of that is in the Word itself, though," rejoined David with a smile.

"David," said Janet solemnly and with some consternation, "you're not going to tell me, sitting there, that you do not believe every word that's printed between the two boards of the Bible?"

"Janet, my bonnie lass"—and here David's eye beamed upon his wife,—"I believe as many of them as you do, and maybe a few more. Keep your mind easy about that, but you see that folk were not just satisfied about a serpent speaking, and so they looked about and about till at last they found the devil in him."

LIBERALIZING INFLUENCES.

It might be supposed at first glance that some of the more liberalizing influences which appeared in George Macdonald's work had come from German sources, for it was a day in which the principles of criticism were beginning to penetrate England and Scotland from the Continent, and particularly from German universities. Yet no such influences came directly to him. He speaks with appreciation of the German universities in the story of "Robert Falconer," who is supposed to have spent four years in study there, but no hint is given as to the disciplines taught there or their effect on his thinking. But something of that religious freedom which was wrought by criticism and which came to Great Britain first through Dean Stanley's interpretation of Ewald's work, and later through the splendid service of Robertson Smith, finds echo in his pages. He has no use for the old dogma of a verbally inspired, or level, Bible. He refers with quiet humor to the discipline set himself by a lay preacher, of learning the first nine chapters of first Chronicles as an atonement for having in an evil hour of freedom of spirit ventured to suggest that such lists of names, even though forming a portion of Holy Writ, could scarcely be reckoned of equally divine authority with St. Paul's epistle to the Romans.

In the same spirit of raillery, which sometimes deepens to passionate resentment, he speaks of the churches and ministers under whose roofs and ministrations so large a proportion of the Scottish people of his day enjoyed, or suffered, their religious instructions. He loved the stateliness and order of the Church of England service, and regretted that both in architecture and in worship the churches of Scotland were so little dignified. In describing one of these meeting-places, the one at which David Elginbrod was accustomed to worship, he says:

The church was up the valley of a noisy little stream that refused to keep Scotch Sabbath, praising the Lord after its own fashion. The church was quite new and was perched on a barren eminence, that it might be as conspicuous for its position as it was remarkable for its ugliness. One grand aim of the reformers of the Scottish ecclesiastical modes appears to have been to keep the worship pure and the worshipers sincere by embodying the whole in the ugliest forms that could be associated with the name of Christianity.

Of another church and service he says:

The church had fared as Chaucer in the hands of Dryden. So had the truth that flickered through the sermon fared in the hands of the clergyman. Having, although a Scotchman, had an Episcopalian education, Hugh Sutherland could not help rejoicing that not merely the Bible but the church service as well had been fixed beyond the reach of such degenerating influences as those which had operated in the more material embodiments of religion.

HELPFUL CRITICISM OF PREACHERS.

On still another occasion he describes a preacher and his sermon after this fashion:

The minister ascended the pulpit stair with all the solemnity of one of the self-elect, and a priest besides. He was just old enough for the intermittent attacks of self-importance to which all youth is exposed, to have in his case become chronic. He stood up and worshiped his Creator aloud after a manner which seemed to say in every tone, Behold I am he that worshippeth Thee! How mighty Thou art! Then he read the Bible in a quarrelsome sort of way, as if he were a bantam, and every verse were a crow of defiance to the sinner. Then they sang a hymn in the fashion of dear old Scotland, which has the sweetest songs in the cottages and the worst singing in the churches of any country in the world.

One more instance must be given from the many which abound in the novels, and which must have gone far to correct some of the vicious practices and the superficial preaching of the day. The quotation is as follows:

Then came the sermon. The text was the story of the Good Samaritan. Some idea, if not of the sermon, at least of the value of it, may be formed from the fact that the first thing to be considered, or in other words, the first head was the culpable imprudence of the man in going down from Jerusalem to Jericho without an escort.

In reporting the close of this sermon, Macdonald takes his thrust at the current and comfortable doctrine of eternal damnation, which was to him a kind of blasphemy against God. He says:

The sermon ended with a sermon warning, "Those who neglect the gospel scheme, and never think of death and judgment—be they rich or poor, be they wise or ignorant—whether they dwell in the palace or the hut—shall be damned. Glory be to the Father and to the Son and to the Holy Ghost."

HIS OPINIONS OF THEOLOGICAL BOOKS

Much of the religious blindness of the time, or at least the incapacity to perceive the broader and more heartening aspects of religion, Macdonald attributed to the type of books which made up the scanty libraries of such as read anything beyond the Bible. Speaking of the book shelf in one of the Scotch cottages, he says:

For instance there was Boston's "Fourfold State," in which the ways of God and man may be seen through a fourfold fog; Erskine's "Divine Sonnets" which will repay the reader in laughter for the pains it costs his reverence, producing much the same effect that a Gothic cathedral might, reproduced by the pencil and from the remembrance of a Chinese artist who had seen it once. Drelincourt on "Death," with the famous ghost-hoax of DeFoe, to help the bookseller to the sale of the unsalable. The Pilgrim's Progress, that wonderful inspiration, never failing save when the theologian would sometimes snatch the pen from the hands of the poet.

In "Robert Falconer" he names a list of the books provided for the entertainment and instruction of the mischievous and irresponsible Sharger. They included Alliene's "Alarm to the Unconverted," Baxter's "Saints Everlasting Rest," and Erskine's aforementioned "Gospel Sonnets." The only diversions permitted were "Pilgrim's Progress" and "The Holy War." He was not even sure that the shorter catechism was a wholesome mental and religious gift for the young. He says:

I wish the spiritual engineers who constructed the shorter catechism had, after laying the grandest foundation stone that truth could afford them, glorified God by going no further. Certainly many a man would have enjoyed him sooner if it had not been for their work.

It is apparent from his pages that he thought a considerable class in the church cared for religion only as a formal and fashionable thing, and wished not to be disturbed in the least by any novelties or originality in preaching. When some one asked Mr. Arnold, the pompous landholder in "David Elginbrod," whether the preacher at the village church was original, he exclaimed, "Original! Really I am bound to say I don't know how the remark applies. How is a man to be original on a subject that is laid all down in plain print—to use a vulgar expression—and has been commented upon for eighteen hundred years and more."

A PROPHET AND GUIDE.

But sometimes humorous thrusts will not serve his turn, and he breaks out against those whom he regards as the betrayers of Christian truth in such a paragraph as this, inserted in the heart of a stirring and dramatic scene:

Lord Christ! Not alone from the pains of hell or of conscience—not alone from the outer darkness of self and all that is mean and poor and low, do we fly to thee. But from the anger that rises within us at the wretched words spoken in thy name, at the degradation of thee and thy Father in the mouths of those that claim especially to have found thee, do we seek thy feet. Pray thou for them also, for they know not what they do."

It is not strange that to many people George Macdonald should appeal with the authority of a prophet and a divinely appointed guide, since he so often assumes the task of religious instruction without resigning his office as teller of stories. That impression of abiding faith, of unquenchable optimism, of confidence in a world of order, of justice, holiness and joy, wrought a conviction of the finality of his message which was doubtless aided by the dash of mysticism which he revealed. Perhaps to many readers he was not as attractive as he would have been with less religious material in his pages. Yet it is astonishing to discover how little these apparently intrusive and irrelevant bits of homily detract from the onward movement of his stories. Certainly he was a very popular writer after once his vogue began, and every word was seized upon with avidity. Perhaps this was due in some measure to the simplicity and joyousness of his faith in the moral order, as well as to the attractiveness of his works of the imagination. Much of our later writing abounds in pessimism and brooding reflections on the futility of the scheme of things. Today we want elaborate answers to all our problems. George Macdonald is simple, intuitive, personal. He believes that the world is beautiful and good, and that love for God and for man are the healthful and uplifting expressions of the normal life. In "Sir Gibbie" he has described a character which is a kind of counterpart of Wagner's guileless, but pure hearted Parsifal. The little boy, deprived of speech from his birth, grows up impelled forever to follow the highest law of his

Mission Work in Burma

Some Indications of the Progress of the Gospel in the Land Put on the Missionary Map by William Carey.

BY GEORGE W. BROWN.

MISSION work in Burma was begun by Adoniram Judson. He left America a Congregationalist. Knowing that he was appointed to labor in proximity to Carey, who was a Baptist, he made a study of the Scriptures with reference to baptism during his voyage, and reached the conclusion that the Baptists, and not the Congregationalists were right in regard to that matter. On reaching India he was baptized, notified his board of his change of view, offered himself to the Baptists, and was accepted as their first missionary.

But he was not permitted by the British to stay in India. Carey advised him to go to Burma, and take up the work which the English Baptists had begun, but abandoned. Burma was then an independent kingdom, and here Judson, with many restrictions and much annoyance, was permitted to preach. For years his life was in danger. He was persecuted beyond measure. His first convert was made after six years of service. He hoped to see a hundred before he died. But in the mercy of God he was permitted to see nearly two thousand.

Mission Bungalo in India.

BAPTISTS LEAD IN BURMA.

Burma has been distinctively a Baptist mission field. The Anglican High church, the American Methodists, the English Wesleyans and the Catholics have invaded the field, but two-thirds of the native Christian community is Baptist. Their latest figures report over 65,000 baptized members, while the census two years ago returned 122,000 Baptists (including, of course, children of Christian parents) out of a total Christian population of about 200,000, which includes the European population.

Burma is another illustration of the fact that it is the lowly who become Christians. The prevailing religion is Buddhism. Eleven out of the twelve million inhabitants are returned as Buddhists. The largest number of converts has been made from animism. About half a million animists are left in the country. All religions are now trying to win them, though for centuries they were neglected by the Buddhists. The motive now animating the Buddhists is not love for mankind, but a desire to prevent people from becoming Christians.

THE BIBLE IN THREE LANGUAGES.

The Baptists have not only preached. They have published the complete Bible in three languages, Burmese, Sgaw Karen and Pevo Karen, and portions of it in Swe Karen, Chin, Kachin, Chan and other languages, for Burma is a great place for tongues. During the centennial celebration the director of public instruction for the province, a British official, paid a worthy tribute to the educational work of the Baptists, regarding their preparation of textbooks, and their work among the backward classes.

The change wrought in the condition and character of the people who have become Christian is prodigious. Intelligence, morality, industry and thrift are all much more in evidence, and the Christian, though recruited from the lower strata of Burmese society, takes his place as an equal of any. God has in many ways blessed the Burmese Christian.

BUDDHISM ABSORBING CHRISTIAN IDEAS.

One feels that Christianity is gaining ground in more ways than one. Imitation is said to be the sincerest form of flattery, and surely the Buddhists are flattering Christianity to a tremendous extent. All its methods are being copied and strong counter efforts are being made to stem the progress of Christianity. But popular Buddhism is absorbing doctrines of Christianity and teaching things which are not to be found at all in the Buddhist scriptures. There is even the doctrine of a mediator between man and God to deliver from sin, while original orthodox Buddhism recognized neither God nor sin as real.

Buddhism lays great stress on merit. Every village has its pagoda, where Buddha is worshiped, and the land is overrun with begging priests. Giving to the priests is a form of merit, which insures one a better state in his next birth or births. The building of pagodas is a still better means of acquiring merit, but only the wealthy can indulge in this. Repairing pagodas is much less meritorious. While one may see pagodas in every village, he may also see ruins of pagodas scattered all over the land.

The typical Burmese pagoda looks like a huge brass hand bell. The original Indian pagoda, or stupa, was a hemisphere, or dome-topped beehive structure, solid, and of huge dimensions, built over some relic chamber, in which would be placed some precious objects, and some alleged relics of Gautama Buddha. In Burma, the hemisphere is built with a flare at the bottom, like a bell, and is capped by a tall standard, like a bell handle, bearing a small conventionalized umbrella at the top. The umbrella may contain a large gold or gilded ball, studded with jewels. The largest pagoda is the Shwe Dagone pagoda in Rangoon, covering a quarter of an acre at its base, built up solid and with a column in the center 365 feet high, surmounted by the umbrella and its golden ball. It is surrounded by a great number of small pagodas, each put up by some wealthy person as a work of merit. The large one and many of the smaller ones are covered with gold leaf and lacquer from top to bottom. Hence the name Shwe, which means golden. The special sanctity of this pagoda arises from its being built over eight hairs of Buddha.

LOW MORALS THE RULE.

The commercial aspect is not the only one which Buddhism presents. The worship of spirits or Nats is really much more common than the worship of Buddha, and morals are at a very low ebb. It would be well indeed if Americans and Europeans searching for a new cult and dazzled by the mysticism of cunning Orientals, could really see what Buddhism actually is.

The Pathos of War

Other Evidences from the Battle Front Proving That Men Are Men "For a' That."

ONE of the most moving human documents that the European war has produced was made public in Paris just before Christmas. It is a letter written by a French cavalry officer to his fiancee as he lay on a battlefield in Flanders. After telling how he was wounded in the chest during a charge, he goes on:

"Two other men are lying near me, and I do not think there is much hope for them, either. One is an officer of a Scottish regiment and the other a private in the Uhlans. When I came to myself I found them bending over me. The Britisher was pouring water down my throat from his flask, while the German was trying to stanch my wound with an antiseptic preparation served out to their troops by the medical corps. The Highlander had several pieces of shrapnel buried in his side.

MEDICAL AID TO ENEMY.

"In spite of their own sufferings they were trying to help me. When I was fully conscious again the German gave us each a morphine injection and took one himself. His medical corps had also provided him with this and the needle, with printed directions for their use. Soon feeling wonderfully at ease, we spoke of the lives we had lived before the war. We all spoke English, and we talked of the women we had left at home. Both the German and the Britisher had been married only about a year.

"I wondered, as I suppose the others did, why we had fought each other at all. I looked at the Highlander, who was falling to sleep exhausted, and despite his drawn face and mud-stained uniform he looked the embodiment of freedom. Then I thought of the Tri-color of France, and all that France had done for liberty. Then I watched the German, who had ceased to speak. He had taken out a prayer-book and was trying to read a service for soldiers wounded in battle.

"And——while I watched him, I realized what we were fighting for——. He was dying in vain, while the Britisher and myself, by our deaths, would probably contribute something toward the cause of civilization and peace—the failing light—the roar of the guns—."

The rest is silence. The letter was found at its writer's side by a Red Cross searcher of the battlefield. Near by lay the Englishman and the German. All were asleep—in the sleep that knows no breaking. So the three soldiers died, no longer foes, but doing what they could to help and comfort one another.

TEARS MINGLED WITH BLOOD.

James O'Donnell Bennett, representative of the Chicago Tribune, has been very close to the Germans during the war, and defends them of all kinds of charges. He tells several stories illustrating the good treatment accorded the enemy by the Germans. One of these stories follows:

"It seems to me a beautiful thing to see French soldiers kissing the hands of German doctors who ministered to them in the hospital at Laon, and I have seen few finer, sweeter deeds in my life than the action of a German doctor who placed an arm under the back of a suffering and distraught Frenchman, and drawing him to his breast, said: 'I give you my word that you are not going to die, but you must help me to make you well by keeping yourself calm.'

"Two big tears rolled down the Frenchman's cheeks, and there was a look of infinite gratitude in his eyes when the doctor gently lowered him to the pillow.

"I thought it beautiful and touching to see two big German soldiers sitting in the front room of a house in the town of Betheniville, not many leagues from Rheims, while a little French girl, perhaps 12 years old, gave them a lesson in French. It was they who seemed the children, and she the adult, so awkward and simple and attentive were they, and so monitorlike and strict with them was she."

A PATHETIC INCIDENT.

Two little groups, one German and one French, were entrenched within a few yards of each other in the Argonne forest. Over them hung that frightful odor that is characteristic of war. The wounded were everywhere. The Frenchmen ran up a white flag.

"Will you cease firing for an hour?" they asked. "Our lieutenant is dying, and the noise pains him."

So the Germans ceased, and in a little more than an hour a young man walked forward from the French trenches and bowed like a courtier to the enemy.

"It is all over," said he. "We thank you, for we loved him."

And as the French soldier returned to his men the German captain rose in his place, his hand at the salute.

Gardens as Educational Aids

An Interesting Experiment Planned by the United States Bureau of Education.

WITH a special appropriation from Congress, the United States Bureau of Education has just begun the work of investigation and promotion of home and school gardens. The new division will be under the direction of a specialist in school gardening and an assistant, both of whom are to be experts in this form of educational activity.

Eventually it is hoped that every city school will have a teacher employed twelve months in the year who knows gardening both theoretically and practically. During the school year this teacher will give instruction in nature study, elementary science and gardening in the morning and in the afternoon direct the gardens at the homes of the children. During the summer vacation the teacher will devote all the time to directing the garden work.

The close supervision that such a teacher will be able to give will insure greater success for the gardens and will familiarize the children with the problems of plant production and utilization. By a co-operative method all surplus vegetables and fruits will either be marketed or canned and preserved for sale.

THE THEORY OF THE MOVEMENT.

In announcing the new work, Dr. Claxton declares:

"School gardening will develop habits of industry; an appreciation of the value of money as measured in terms of labor and a realization that every man and woman must make his or her own living, and contribute to the welfare of the community.

"Experiments already have shown that with proper direction an average child can produce in an eighth of an acre of land from $50 to $100 worth of vegetables. This would add more to the support of the family than could be purchased with the same child's wages working in factory, shop, or mill.

"If children can contribute to the families' support while in school, it will make it possible for them to attend school three or four years longer than they now do. This is a thing more and more desirable, since education for life and citizenship can not be obtained before the age of fourteen."

A Prayer

At first I prayed for Light;
  Could I but see the way,
How gladly, swiftly, would I walk
  To everlasting day.

And next I prayed for Strength
  That I might tread the road
With firm, unfaltering feet, and win
  The heaven's serene abode.

And then I asked for Faith;
  Could I but trust my God,
I'd live enfolded in his peace
  Though foes were all abroad.

But now I pray for Love,
  Deep love to God and man;
A living love that will not fail,
  However dark his plan.

And Light and Strength and Faith
  Are opening everywhere;
God only waited for me till
  I prayed the larger prayer.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

APPROACHING MARCH 7.

THERE is an appreciable lift of soul among informed and consecrated churchmen as the year advances toward the first Sunday in March. That day is the Disciples' vision day, the day of unselfish outlook, the day of renewal of our fellowship with Christ's far-reaching work, and the day of prayerful deepening of the Church's love for her Lord.

March 7 is the date of the annual consecration of gifts and lives to foreign missions.

The year of 1915 is a unique year. Normal economic conditions both at home and on the foreign field are interrupted. The degree of response to the call of the Master for gifts is an unpredictable quantity.

In addition, the transition from the unsystematic way of supporting missions and benevolence to the budget plan, which many churches are this year adopting, makes the situation an anxious one for the boards, secretaries, and missionaries.

But there ought to be one certain, calculable and substantial factor upon which the Foreign Society can count: the ardent and faithful purpose of every minister and church leader to see to it that his congregation does its Christian best!

THE "INSTITUTIONAL" CHURCH.

TWO articles in the latest number of the Atlantic Monthly deal with opposite sides of the institutional church question. They are both by well known Episcopalian ministers. The one protests against the apparently growing modern view that the essential business of the Church is social reform and institutional activity. He insists that gymnasium, social parlors, dining rooms and class equipment do not constitute a church and are often at variance with the essential ideals of a Christian center of worship.

The other accepts the fundamental fact that the Church is in the world to accomplish the work of Jesus, which was, as he defined it, to teach, to preach and to heal. Therefore the congregation which confines itself to the preaching function without concern for the activities of religious education both within and outside its walls, and the work of social uplift and relief, which, as he takes it, is the modern task of healing, has failed to estimate truly the commission of the Lord, or to perform its rightful function in the community.

It hardly seems necessary at this late day to suggest that the applications of religion to life must be more far-reaching and varied than in the past. It is the task of every church to inspire and equip its membership to meet as far as possible the needs, physical, intellectual, social and religious, of its neighborhood.

But it does not follow that the institutional church can meet these social demands with any degree of adequacy. At best what the churches as volunteer organizations can do is but a small fraction of the work that must at last be done through other agencies.

Sometimes abundant resources permit a church to respond to these needs in a fairly elaborate way, and it often happens that a church blessed with such amplitude of apparatus creates the impression of greater interest in institutional activity than in the cultivation of the inner life.

It is perfectly possible for an institution to be an effective social center and not be an organ of religion. It is possible for a church to lose its distinctive religious character in its institutional success.

The Church's main business is not to deal directly with the reconstruction of the social order, but to put life-meanings and motives into men that will impel them to deal with this social task through agencies that control means and forces with which the Church is not directly in contact.

To say this is not to disapprove of the institutional church. For it is probable that the only way the Church can create a socialized inner life in its membership is by actually rendering social service to the immediate community.

But the extent and adequacy of such social service must not be taken as the measure of the Church's work, and certainly it would be a sorry day for religion if the Church should come to regard itself as primarily an organ of social reform.

Social progress has many organs already—the state, the home, the school and others.

But the inner life has one social organ only: the Church, and if the Church should be turned to other functions what would become of men's souls?

THE WAR ON WAR.

YOU SAY you did not read the article by Ray Stannard Baker in the American Magazine for January? Then go back and get that copy and find the article entitled, "The Last Phase of the War."

If you are among the ninety-nine one-hundredths of our citizens who are trembling for our nation because we have so few battleships and such a poor excuse of an army, it will give you another point of view.

The fact is that this war and the danger of the United States being drawn into it are due to false conceptions of national dignity and rights, and to the unimaginative statesmanship which sees only the traditional ways of settling international differences. In personal life, questions of dignity and rights are not settled any longer by a mad resort to physical force. The time is long since due when the standard of ethics that controls us in individual relations should obtain in international relations also.

Mr. Baker writes from the point of view of a historian of the year 2014, and describes how the United States at the close of this European conflict met an invasion of the triumphant and unsatiated German army in the year 1916.

That there is a way by which a nation of Christian men may act as a Christian nation in the presence of a foe, is the thesis of the article, a thesis made reasonable by this thrilling hypothetical illustration.

AT THE ZENITH.

A TWENTY years' climb, and a steady one, from a modest lay service as a Y. M. C. A. exhorter to the most talked about preacher in the world—this is the record that Billy Sunday is now able to look back upon. He had been holding union revivals for about two years when he came to a little Iowa city where the editor of The Christian Century was then a pastor, and led the Church forces of that town in the same kind of a meeting he is at this moment conducting in Philadelphia.

Gradually the curve of his career took him from the smaller towns to the larger towns, then to the cities of the third class, then to Pittsburgh and Denver and now to the third largest city in the land.

So far he has declined to come to Chicago, and affects not to wish to come, but that he will eventually accept the invitation there is little doubt. And now New York City ministers to the number of 400 have extended him an invitation to hold a meeting in the nation's largest city. Many of the best known ministers of New York did not join in the invitation, but though not sympathetic it is not expected they will make any opposition.

Mr. Sunday is at the zenith of popular ecclesiastical vogue. Few are the Mondays (his rest days) when he does not meet one or more delegation of ministers from various cities asking him to hold a meeting for them. Milwaukee, St. Louis, Detroit, Louisville, all want him.

The metropolitan press, now that he is preaching in cities of the first rank, devotes much space to him. We counted fourteen religious weeklies with editorials on him last week. Many of them have, besides, graphic accounts of his Philadelphia meeting, with numerous illustrations. Other magazines than Elbert Hubbard's are treating of him now.

The judgments range all the way from ardent defense to impatient condemnation. Most, however, find both good and vicious elements in him.

Of this we may be sure, that Mr. Sunday's position in the focus of the Church's most critical attention will induce during the next several years an analysis and estimate of his work and personality which they have never received before.

TAKING HOBSON'S ARGUMENT TO THE PEOPLE.

REPRESENTATIVE HOBSON, of Alabama, whose services to the cause of Prohibition have been the most conspicuous of any man in Congress, proposes to send his speech delivered in the recent debate in the House into every home in the United States—a vast undertaking.

It is made possible, however, by the use of his government frank, supplemented by an expenditure of $150,000. Mr. Hobson's manner of treating the question of alcohol is a little bit the most effective of any treatment the subject is receiving. His argument has intrinsic worth enough to warrant its wide circulation. And when to its merits is added the prestige of the circumstances and occasion of its delivery it would seem beyond doubt that the friends of Prohibition could spend $150,000 to no better advantage than to see to it that every American citizen has a chance to read the whole speech.

Mr. Hobson will assemble the poll-lists of all the states and send the speech to every address, about 16,000,000 in number.

He needs the financial co-operation of Prohibition men and women the country over, and it is self-evident that he should receive it.

THE FUTURE OF CONSTANTINOPLE.

FEW questions have been more frequently asked since the entrance of Turkey into the war than this regarding the great Byzantine city on the Bosphorus. For five centuries it has been a Mohammedan city. In 1453, the year in which Savonarola was born, the last of the Constantines looked out with troubled eyes from the walls of the city, which the first of the Constantines had built, upon a host of Moslem warriors set with determined face to its conquest.

When Mohammed II entered through the gate of St. Romain and rode his horse straight up the long street into the crowded church of the Holy Wisdom, the fabric of the eastern Roman empire was torn into hopeless shreds, and in the blood of terrible massacre in and around the great church the story of Christian centuries was washed away. Since that time Constantinople has been the capital of that Turkish empire, but in the half millennium one after another of its dependencies has dropped away until today it is a city almost alone, a capital with only the shadow of a nation.

Yet its beauty and strategic importance make it the object of unceasing concern to the powers of Europe. Russia desperately needs free access from the Black Sea to the Mediterranean, which involves the open door at Constantinople. England fears Russia's power in India if the way is opened past Constantinople and Suez. Germany and France fear the possession of this strategic point by an unfriendly power. In the past Turkey has been fairly neutral, at least the powers were able to keep in balance by leaving Constantinople in Turkish control.

Now, however, such a situation seems no longer possible. Turkey by entering the conflict has forfeited her last right to European consideration outside of the sphere of German influence. It is probable that England and Russia will come to terms over Constantinople and if the latter is not permitted direct control of the Bosphorus the city will at least be placed in the hands of a commission of the powers to preserve its open door and its neutrality. Thus the chapter of Turkey in Europe is closing.

"PASTOR" RUSSELL.

THE name of this Brooklyn preacher has become well known to the advertisement reading public of America during the past few years. With a plan of millenarian teachings which features the early ending of the world, and some admixture of universalism, this preacher has developed a skillful plan of advertising and publicity which has brought his name into prominence and has awakened the curiosity of people who know what advertising costs.

In many cities, east and west, his adherents have run a series of picture shows in theaters. These pictures are given the general title of "Creation," and purport to be a satisfactory and scientific explanation of history, nature and the Bible. Their crude construction and appropriation of Scriptural teachings to enforce the few outstanding ideas of "Pastor" Russell are entirely clear to any informed person. The pictures are accompanied by phonographic recitals in the tones of the Brooklyn "oracle."

Such a scheme of publicity costs a good deal of money. In addition to this Mr. Russell has gotten his sermons published in a large number of papers over the country much as Dr. Talmage used to do. Some of these newspapers are willing to publish the material without compensation, but most of the journals of the better class have declined to take them on any other terms than the regular advertising rates, and now most of the more respectable journals are declining altogether to admit these "sermons" to their columns.

That Mr. Russell and his followers are persistent advertisers has been apparent for a good while. Where the money came from to finance this campaign many people have asked, since the claim is made that no offerings are taken, and that everything is without cost. It is just becoming clear, however, through the investigations of some newspaper men that Mr. Russell's scheme is a very profitable one. What seems to be a generous and free handed effort to spread truth is in fact a clever device for getting money from people who are attracted by the claim of liberality, and who are thus induced to give, often in large sums. Furthermore, the reputation of "Pastor" Russell is under fire in several quarters as the result of persistent reports regarding his conduct, both financial and domestic. It is curious how people will flock to the standard of a clever, though often discredited, preacher of strange doctrines, no matter how frequently his prophesies fail or how patent is his self-interest.

A NEW SENSATION.

IT IS something of a new sensation to Disciples of Christ to open their year-book and find that, to all appearances, instead of making a gain, they have actually lost several thousand members and over 500 churches in the past year.

It took courage in a secretary of the American Missionary Society to compile and publish such figures. Though not responsible, of course, for his data, there is no doubt that Mr. Lewis will be criticised for his fidelity, on much the same principle of psychology that ancient kings had the faithful bearers of bad news killed on the spot.

But every informed Disciple has known for a long time that our statistics were, in much of their data, simply optimistic guesses.

Mr. Lewis has shaken down the figures to a basis somewhat nearer to honest reality, and he will have, as he deserves, the grateful approval of all honest minds who want to deal with realities and nothing else.

It is not probable, of course, that the Disciples have actually lost ground. The explanation of the apparent loss is that some states are at last turning in reliable figures. Kentucky alone reports a loss of 330 churches while Virginia and Texas show between them a loss of 120 churches. This is due in the main to the striking off of mere names from the list.

Missiouri used to report some 1,600 churches and is now listed with 1,077. Her new type of district superintendency is getting into touch with every church in that state, and when it touches a place where a church was said to be but is not that church, in common honesty, is not counted.

The shaking down process will need to go on in other states before we shall have firm ground under our statistics. There is nothing discouraging in the showing of this year; it is all encouraging. The exhibit of 1,370,512 members as against 1,372,695 last year is but a correction in book-keeping.

Disciples are not losing ground, though their statistics are.

TRUE SERVICE.

True service knows nor great, nor small;
Who plants a tree, and plants it unto God,
Hath done full well, nor yields to him
Who o'er an empire sways the kingly rod.

"My diocese is at least famous for one thing, and that is—it contains the North pole!" This is the way Bishop Lucas of Mackenzie river speaks of his huge diocese of land and river with only 6,000 inhabitants. The people, chiefly Indians and Esquimaux, with here and there a white man engaged in the work of a fur trapper, are scattered about all up and down the country, and journeys of enormous length and many perils have to be undertaken to reach them. For all this great diocese the staff of workers can be counted on one's fingers; besides the bishop and his wife there are only seven clergy and five laymen. Six new recruits—priests and laymen— have just begun work, and things will soon begin to go forward. The bishop has labored in this country for twenty-three years. The area comprising his charge is brought vividly home to us when he tells that though he was elected bishop in October, 1912, the news did not reach him until January, 1913, and it was not until August of last year that his consecration took place at Winnipeg. Fort McPherson is the most northerly station, and here Archdeacon Whittaker is in charge. About 350 Indians live in the township, and they are all Christians, all of them belonging to the Anglican church. All these Indians have been carefully educated by the missionaries, and can read the Bible in their own tongue, while over 300 Esquimaux have been baptized in the last five years. They are an intelligent race, who are not only quick to assimilate all the truths which are taught them, but themselves act as missionaries, eager to pass on to others of their tribes the good news which has so changed their own lives. The missionaries naturally have to acquire the native language before they can proceed far in their good work. Bishop Lucas knows two Indian dialects and has himself compiled a dictionary containing 11,000 Indian words. There are two distinct tribes of Indians—the Tukudh and the Slavi. Each of these speaks a language of its own, while the Esquimaux tongue is something entirely different. The bishop has high words of praise for the Esquimaux.

A Move Toward Co-operation.

The northern and southern Presbyterians both operate in the state of Missouri and the old-time feeling is apt to live longer in the border states than elsewhere. The southern body held its state meeting (synod) recently and adopted resolutions proposing that a committee of three be appointed to meet a like body from the northern Presbyterians to formulate plans for a closer co-operation between the two bodies in the state. The overtures were met most cordially by the northern Presbyterians and the two committees are now at work. What the result of their deliberations will be it will be interesting to know.

An Old Church.

Few churches in America are older than the Congregational church at Rowley, Mass., which recently celebrated its 275th anniversary. At the celebration many articles of historic interest were exhibited. Some articles of antique furniture, some old books and documents including the church records up to the date of 1665. At the banquet among the speakers was Deacon Amos Everett Jewett (secretary of the Jewett Family Association), a member of the Rowley Baptist church. Since the founding of the church seven Jewetts have been honored with the office of deacon including the emigrant ancestor, Maximilian Jewett, who was one of the charter members of the church, and its first deacon, which office he held for nearly fifty years. In the list of pastors of the church there is the name of Jedediah Jewett from 1729 to 1774. At an election of officers Deacon Benjamin P. Mighill was again chosen deacon and church clerk for the 40th year. He is also the Sunday-school superintendent.

Statistics of "Christian" Denomination.

The total membership of the "Christian" denomination, which has its national headquarters in Dayton, is 113,887, according to the 1915 "Annual," compiled by Dr. J. F. Burnett, general secretary.

Ex-President McKinley on Missions.

Said President McKinley: "Who can estimate their value (missions) to the progress of nations? Their contribution to the onward and upward march of humanity is beyond all calculation. They have inculcated industry and taught the various trades. They have promoted concord and amity and brought nations and races closer together. They have made men better. They have increased the regard for home and strengthened the sacred ties of family, have made the community well ordered, and their work has been a potent influence in the development of law and the establishment of government."

PENNSYLVANIA'S NEW GOVERNOR ON THE BIBLE.

DR Martin G. Brumbaugh has long been known the country over as an educator. His election last fall to the governorship of Pennsylvania, makes his views even more significant.

Several months ago, in one of Philadelphia's large Sunday-schools, Dr. Brumbaugh made an address, in which he paid tribute to the Holy Scripture. The following quotation from this address will be read with keen interest by those who have long followed Dr. Brumbaugh's leadership in teacher-training and other phases of religious education:

It matters little how many or how few of other books you have read, if you have not read your Bible you are grossly ignorant. For the Bible, more than all the other books of the world, has the accumulation of the thought and the actions of men; and not to know the Bible is to be ignorant of the greatest Book of all books in the world.

I want to plead with the young people to make it the rule of their lives to read some portion of the Bible every day that they live. For, after all, my friends, we live here only a few years, but we hope to live with God forever; and unless we know his Book and understand his message, we shall hardly be able to find the path that leads to him.

Won't you, just for your own sakes and for His sake, love His Book enough to read it every day? Why, I was shocked the other day in the presence of three girls in Philadelphia, born and bred here—and they were big girls—to find that when some one said that Job did so and so, one of the girls looked up and wanted to know who Job was. She thought he was one of the generals of the Civil War, or that he occupied some other place in the history of this country. It made me feel ashamed that anyone of intelligence should not know the great men of God whose lives are recorded in that Book. I do not understand how you can be good citizens of Philadelphia or of this country, without knowing God's Book. You cannot. You could not if I were running the government!

So I say to you, read the Scripture every day; read it, and understand it, and love it.

Now in His Book there are a great many people spoken of, good and bad, great and small, and don't you know that if you will read it all thoughtfully, you will find that from the time Adam walked out of God's care in the Garden of Eden until the time when old St. John on an island of the sea dreamed of the New Jerusalem coming down out of heaven from God, all through that wonderful Book, every great writer in it points his finger to the one person in it who is above all other persons, who is the hope of all who live in this world, Jesus Christ, the Savior of the world. And on one occasion he said a very remarkable thing that I want you to understand. At the very end of that great sermon on the mount, he said that a wise man was like a man who built his house upon the rocks, and that a foolish man was like a man who built his house upon the sand, but he said more than that. He said that the difference between the wise man and the foolish man was this, not that the foolish man heard the Word, but did not believe accordingly, but he said, "Whoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them, he is the wise man."

I wish we could learn that the emphasis of the business of Jesus Christ rests, not upon what we know about the Bible, but what we are doing because of the Bible, and that every one of us is measured not by the number of verses we can recite in a test, but by the kind of life we are living day by day with our fellows, in our homes, in our churches, in our schools, in our business, in our city, and in our country.

Denominations at University of Illinois.

For some reasons religious statistics of the University of Illinois, as given in the last registrar's report of a year ago, are not very widely known. These figures represent the tabulation of the undergraduate colleges and the library school and the college of law in the University of Illinois for the year 1912-1913, being a total of 3,663 students, of which number 3,253 volunteered to state their religious affiliations, and of whom 3,001 belong to what is commonly known as orthodox denominations. Forty-one shades of religious belief were represented. One student described himself as agnostic, three as liberalists, two undenominational. One hundred and seventeen stated explicitly that they had no religious affiliations. There were sixty-four Unitarians and thirty-eight Universalists, one Confucianist, six Hindoos and forty-seven Jews. Eight leading denominations represented were as follows: Methodist, 907; Presbyterian, 617; Congregational, 264; Disciples, 239; Baptist, 228; Roman Catholic, 214; Episcopalian, 195; Lutheran, 105.

Moody Church Calls Pastor.

The Moody church, Chicago, an undenominational organization, has called Rev. Paul Rader of Pittsburgh as its pastor. Mr. Rader formerly lived in Denver. The new pastor, who played full back on two university football teams, and who had experience as a cowboy, is said to equal "Billy" Sunday as an evangelist, without any of the latter's slang expressions. The Moody church will immediately inaugurate evangelistic campaigns on three sides of the city and the new pastor will speak three times a day in these campaigns. He is 33 years of age.

Waldensian in Italian Senate.

The first Protestant that has ever been elected to the senate of Italy is Signor H. Soulier, who is there representing the Waldensian valleys. Religious toleration in Italy grows every year.

Sunday-school Exhibit at San Francisco.

Through the efforts of Mr. Harry Morton, of the Executive Committee of the World's Sunday-school Association, and the courtesy of the Japanese commissioners of the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco, there will be set up in the Japanese building a Sunday-school booth in which to advertise the World's Sunday-school Convention at Tokyo in October, 1916. The Japanese exhibit will be one of the most interesting and picturesque features at the Fair, and the World's Sunday-school Association is fortunate in having a "Tokyo Booth" in such favorable surroundings.

A Million Testaments for Soldiers.

One month ago, in the midst of all the distractions of the holiday season in Sunday-school work, an appeal was sent out through the press for "a million nickels from a million Sunday-school scholars for a million Testaments for a million soldiers" in the camps, hospitals, war-prisons and battle-fields of Europe. The appeal met with a quick and hearty response from Sunday-school scholars all over the United States. By the middle of January there had been received by the treasurer, Mr. Arthur M. Harris, more than $2,000, representing more than 40,000 nickels; and in most cases there was but one nickel from a person. The effect of this popular Christian movement upon the Sunday-schools is sure to be good, especially in view of the fact that each scholar who gives a nickel is presented with a book-mark receipt on which is printed the request, "Place this book-mark in your Bible, and remember in your prayers him to whom your Testament is given—God Knows His Name."

A Summer School of Religion.

Berkeley, Cal., will be a Mecca for students of religion this coming summer. An undenominational summer school of religion will be conducted with some of the great religious leaders of the country for teachers. President Charles Sumner Nash, who is president of the school, has secured Professor Walter Rauschenbusch, who will give two courses on "Christianity and the Redemption of Society." Professor Charles Edward Rugh, of the education department of the University of California, will discuss live problems under the subject of "Moral Leadership for High School Boys." Dr. Henry Frederick Cope, of Chicago, secretary of the Religious Education Association, will give two courses on "The Ideals and Method of Religious Education." Dr. Warren H. Wilson, of New York City, will present a course on "Rural Church Problems."

Prize Essay on Religion in Education.

Through the generosity of a resident of California, and in connection with the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, the National Education Association is able to offer a prize of one thousand dollars for the best essay on "The Essential Place of Religion in Education, with an Outline of a Plan for Introducing Religious Teaching into the Public Schools." Religion is to be defined in a way not to run counter to the creeds of Protestant, Roman Catholic or Jew. D. W. Springer is secretary of the National Education Association and David Starr Jordan is the president.

Bulletin on Latin America Conference.

Rev. S. G. Inman, the Disciple missionary of Mexico, who has been called as executive secretary for the Interdenominational Latin America Missionary Conference to be held at Panama in February, 1916, has issued the first bulletin of his organization describing the general scope of the conference. The needs of Latin America were not considered at the Edinburgh conference on account of the unwillingness of Episcopalian leaders to engage in the conference if missions in Roman Catholic countries was discussed. The Edinburgh conference method will be applied to the needs of the Latin countries.

An Unsectarian Poem.

I learned it in the meadow path,
I learned it on the mountain stairs,
The best things any mortal hath
Are those which every mortal shares.

The air we breathe, the sky, the breeze,
The light without us and within,
Life with its unlocked treasuries,
God's riches—are for all to win.

The grass is softer to my tread,
For rest it yields unnumbered feet;
Sweeter to me the wild rose red,
Because she makes the whole world sweet.

Into your heavenly loneliness
Ye welcome me, O solemn peaks!
And me in every guest ye bless
Who reverently your mystery seeks.

And up the radiant peopled way
That opens into worlds unknown,
It will be life's delight to say,
"Heaven is not heaven for me alone."

—Lucy Larcom.

Draws Crowds at Seventy.

Dr. I. M. Haldeman has been pastor of the First Baptist Church of New York for thirty years and is near seventy years of age. He is rigidly orthodox in his views of religion and is this winter discussing questions connected with the fulfilment of prophecy. His evening services the past three months have been so crowded as to require more chairs, although the auditorium seats 1,800 people. He is counted one of the most fluent speakers of the city.

A Pioneer Minister Passes Away.

Rev. Joshua R. Lawrence, a Presbyterian minister, who died in Topeka, Kans., on Jan. 11, was 97 years of age at the time of his death. It is seventy-six years since he was ordained a minister of the gospel. He has spent most of his life in the south and was vigorous enough at the last election to go and vote.

New Rector Succeeds Bishop Page.

Rev. George Herbert Thomas has been called to succeed Bishop Page at St. Paul's church in Chicago. The Rev. Mr. Thomas comes to Chicago from Christ church, Fitchburg, Mass. He is a graduate of Yale and took his B. D. at the Episcopal Theological school at Cambridge. He was made a deacon in 1898 and a priest in 1899. He will come to Chicago at an early date.

Priest Arrested in Street Riot.

There was rioting on the streets of Chicago as a result of a conflict between the police and the unemployed on Jan. 17. Among those arrested was Rev. Irwin St. John Tucker, editor of the Christian Socialist, and a priest of the Episcopal church. Mr. Tucker was passing Hull House when the parade started and saw a banner with the words "Give us this day our daily bread," being trampled under foot. He took up the soiled banner and joined the march which occasioned his arrest.

Leaders Discuss Unemployment.

The prevalent unemployment in the country this winter has brought the question of unemployment to the fore again. The question is being discussed by various church leaders. Three characteristic attitudes are those which attach to the names of Dr. Eliot, Dr Parkhurst and Mr Joseph Lee. Dr. Eliot, former president of Harvard college, warns the churches against lending their support to trades unionism on account, among other things, of their "limited output" and uniform wage without regard to age or skill." Dr. Parkhurst thinks the gospel has for its aim to change men, not to improve conditions. Another believes the church is a spiritual body and has nothing to do with "temporalities" nor with the "laboring classes, as such." Joseph Lee of New York says: "I believe the truth behind Socialism—what makes it a religion—is its appeal to the human instinct of membership. Every factory and every department store and every railroad ought to be a company in which everyone who works is not merely an employe but a member."

Here and There

Power in the Small as in the Vast.

We are all so accustomed to associate power with the tumult and the shouting, with the vast and the magnificent, that it behooves us occasionally to turn aside and read the meanings of the burning bush, or the story of those achievements wherein no sound of the hammer is ever heard. To the eyes of most men the massiveness of the cathedral completely overshadows the meaning of the Upper Room. The cathedral seems to mark an epoch; the seclusion and silence of those who pray together is looked upon as an incident. It is ever easy to be misled by size and sound.

It is wholly natural to enter into the rhapsodies of the Psalmist in his contemplation of the heavens, of sun and moon and stars. With him we can rejoice that "the strength of the hills is His also." We may understand something of his conception of the divine Presence which the heaven of heavens could not contain. It seems more convincing to associate the Almighty with the vast than the immeasurable. We like to follow him along lines of immensity. We feel that we are doing Him reverence when we try to read records of the heavens penned by blazing suns. Like the roughly-clad prophet we are always expecting the Almighty in the whirlwind, the fire, the earthquake, but are seldom prepared to recognize the still, small voice as His. It is easy to think of God as "planting His footsteps on the sea, and riding on the storm."

But God is the God of the minute as well as the vast. If He is on the storm He is mirrowed in the rain drop that dances to our earth on silver sandals. He is tabernacled in the drops of dew. We behold something of divine power in the myriad colors that flash from the insect's wing, in the gentleness with which the light from the sun falls upon the eye in its flight of 186,000 miles per second across the space of 93,000,000 miles, in the silver that flashes from the curve of the wave, the beauty that looks out upon us from the heart of the lily that by a mighty miracle is able to transform the ooze of the river into its unchallenged whiteness, in the silence of the night which if our ears are attuned will be as harmonious as the deep-toned thunder of the organ, and the thousand suggestions of minute worlds of beauty which lie about us on every side. The divine power may be seen in nature, as Goethe has told us, "In floods of life, in a storm of activity, she moves and works above and beneath, working and weaving an endless motion, birth and death, an infinite ocean, a changeful web, a glowing life; she plies at the roaring loom of time and weaves a living garment for God."

"There's not a tint that paints the rose,
  Or deeks the lily fair,
Or streaks the humblest flower that blows,
  But God has placed it there.
There's not a star whose twinkling light
  Illumines the distant earth,
And cheers the solemn gloom of night,
  But goodness gave it birth.
There's not a eloud whose dews distill
  Upon the parching sod,
And clothe with verdure vale and hill
  That is not sent of God.
Around, beneath, below, above,
  Wherever spaee extends,
There heaven displays its boundless love,
  And power with goodness blends."

(J. A. Wallaee.)

Tolerance Before Conciliation.

Of course we need prophets of conciliation. But before that need is the greater need of prophets of toleration. To regard our beliefs as approaches to the truth rather than final attainment every time is one of the corner stones in the edifice of tolerance. The people who have attained have finished their course in this world. The fact that they are in the flesh shows that they have not attained. Our conception of the wisdom of God is such that we are compelled to believe that the souls who attain the perfection of knowledge on more than five subjects of importance would be immediately translated.

The study of history is a sure cure for intolerance. If one will take the trouble to read such a work, for instance, as Lecky's "History of Rationalism in Europe," he will realize the evils of intolerance, and perhaps discover that majorities are not equivalent to infallible interpretations. He will also realize the folly of burning people who differ from him. Of course, we are neither so base nor so brutal as to burn a fellow-mortal at the stake because he sicked a witch on us or our cattle, or was not clear as to the doctrine of the Trinity, but we have a refined knack of forcing those who do not agree with us out of their pulpits, and compelling them to sell life insurance or books. It may be found in some histories that very bigoted men who left the pulpit to sell mining stocks or lands, were aided by Never Mind Who, in their raids upon the pockets of the faithful. However, all people have a few specimens of the genus homo who once were shining marks and later became mining sharks. But that is neither here nor there. We were about to say that force is force whether an erring brother be ridiculed by the majority or racked. Perhaps we, the censors, may be in error, and if so what compensation can we make toward those we have ruined?

Nothing is lost by being patient in an age of reconstruction like ours. Toleration may have its evils, but they are shining virtues compared with the evils of intolerance. Tolerance is the high-water mark of grace in the hearts of believers. It is the silver lining on the denominational cloud. We could afford to be censorious if we were infallible, and that none of us can be. The wise course is to compare notes, to talk matters over, to disagree in peace, if we cannot reconcile our differences, to work together as long as we can, and then to be on intimate terms with the love that suffereth long and is kind.

The ink of the scholar is the seed of the church, as some wise man has said. Tolerance will make scholars where intolerance makes martyrs.

An Argument Against Total Depravity.

No matter how miserably we fail in our Sunday's sermon, there is always a kindly soul to tell us that we preached unusually well. Of course the outward visible sign of our failure did not pass unnoticed by this considerate friend, usually of the gentler sex, and this was the balm to be applied to our aching pride. How can any man of soul think ill of a race that has produced such considerate spirits? While one such lives we cannot believe in the depravity of the race. Their words soothe us like a velvet hand in hours of pain.

Talking With and At Each Other.

There's a difference. When we talk with each other face to face we are likely to agree, and if we do not agree we are not likely to make faces at each other. When we talk at each other, generally through the columns of a religious paper, our pride of opinion or pride of party puts an edge on our talk, and we make wry faces and possibly say uncanny things about each other. Recently we heard an able minister who is a Calvinist explain the doctrine of election to a company of ministers. Through his denominational paper the explanation would have tallied with the teachings of Calvin, but face to face the doctrine was explained to mean what evangelical bodies, except Calvinists, have always believed, viz., that those are elect who ask to be elected. That is not Calvinism, but the minister said it was, and no one present wished to muddle the revision of the ancient doctrine.

Such experiences convince us anew that differences are narrowed by the narrowing of space, and that when men get together their differences get together too. We never understood China until the missionaries came back from China. Ever since the missionary era all peoples seem wonderfully near each other and wonderfully alike. So with doctrines. On the platforms we applaud the speakers who tell us we are not so far apart as we are sometimes led to believe. When we look into each other's eyes, the differences seem to retire backwards with their hands over their eyes. When we look at each other across a long denominational history our eyes close and the differences are at the front, microscope and sword in hand.

One is inclined to believe that there is platform truth, newspaper truth, denominational truth and naked truth. The latter has no cogs that slip.

A Book A Day.

A highly esteemed minister is credited with having read a book a day for many years. That is a wonderful record. We may be inclined to look upon this story as apocryphal, but all depends on the size of the books. It also depends upon how one reads a book. Some read the table of contents, and decide to go no further. That is not reading the book. Some read a page at a glance, as Mr. Roosevelt is said to do. Others read the substance of the argument or the story, and count the book as read. Possibly by some of these devices many books can be read in an incredibly short time.

The minister who can put to his credit a book digested every week in the year is doing credit to himself. With the increasing demands upon the minister in this age, he may count himself fortunate ere long, if he find time to read the daily papers in the hope of doing what he is so often charged with doing, finding there either a sermon or a text. At the present rate we are going the minister who hopes to read will have to sigh for a log in some vast wilderness, and enjoy his books in the boundless contiguity of shade.

The Main Difference.

Orthodoxy: "Ne plus ultra. Go to, let us make a creed for the colleges."

Heresy: "And the next day Christopher Columbus was born."

Food for Belgium

How the Commission for Relief in Belgium is Bringing Succor to the War-Ridden and Desolate People.

SOME of us had thought that the days of famine were past, except among the backward nations of the earth; but we were not counting on this incredible and unpardonable war. Here we have as one of its deplorable results, a highly civilized nation, whose people are among the most industrious and skilled workmen of the world, suffering the pangs of cold and hunger. All without fault of their own, they were forced into these "obscene seas of slaughter," by invasion of their land, which was neutral territory. The appeal for these seven million innocent sufferers comes from the Woman's Section of the Commission for Relief in Belgium, issued January 16. It is headed by a poem written by Thomas Hardy, the illustrious English novelist:

AN APPEAL TO AMERICA.

Seven millions stand
Emaciate, in that ancient Delta-land—
We here, full-charged with our own maimed and dead,
And coiled in throbbing conflicts slow and sore,
Can soothe how slight these ails unmerited
Of souls forlorn upon the facing shore!
Where naked, gaunt, in endless band on band
Seven millions stand.

No man can say
To your great country that, with scant delay,
You must, perforce ease them in their sore need.
We know that nearer first your duty lies,
But is it much to ask that you let plead
Your loving-kindness with you—wooing wise,
Albeit, that aught you owe and must repay
No man can say?

APPEAL.

Never before in civilized history has a whole nation faced famine. If in Belgium over six million people—men, women and children are to be kept alive, food must be sent, and at once.

The Commission for Relief in Belgium is internationally constituted. It has relation to six powers—Belgium, France, Holland, England, Germany and America. We, its Woman's Section, make appeal to all the women of America to come to the rescue of a starving people. The highest aspirations and the finest achievements of the race are symbolized in this little country. The Belgians must be saved to the human family. We ask American women to recall and deserve anew the immortal tribute they won from our great Lincoln, and to here highly resolve that this people, under God, shall not perish from the earth.

We sent forth to organizations international, national and state, a request that they stand with us to spread the saving call. Between November 10th and December 10th there have rallied to us the presidents of organizations representing collectively over six million women. To those not yet with us, we say come, that unitedly we may help in working out salvation for the famine-menaced Belgians.

31,881 TONS OF FOOD.

Reports issued by The Commission for Relief in Belgium show that up to December 7, 31,881 tons of food, valued at $1,617,693, had been distributed in eleven provinces and eight large cities in Belgium. These supplies were sent from the United States aboard fourteen ships, and in addition eighteen lighters, lent for immediate use by the Dutch government, were towed, laden with food, from Rotterdam by canal to various points in the war-stricken country.

In addition to the food, which was widely distributed and which saved hundreds of thousands of men, women and children from actual starvation, there were distributed 336 packages of clothing, 191 packages of medical supplies and large quantities of lumber. The lumber was imperative to furnish scanty refuges for the homeless against the coming of winter.

The report of the extent of the distribution shows that even the most distant provinces not in the hands of the German forces with military bases were reached. The province of Brabant, which includes Brussels and Louvain, received 17,537 tons of foodstuffs. Liege and Namur received 3,585 tons, the next largest quantity. Hainault, the most southerly province, is in deep distress. Here the battles of Mons, Charleroi and Chimay were fought and the great mining industries are all shut down. The densely populated country has been laid waste and is difficult of access. The Commission managed to get into Hainault some 2,282 tons of food over the railroads at periods when the Germans were not using them.

The hilly province of Luxemburg has received 583 tons of food, but in West Flanders, where the fighting is in progress, only 101 tons were gotten through.

Natural Education

How It Has Proved Effective in the Case of One of the Most Remarkable Children in America.

We have all read of the wonderful boy in New England, whose achievements in mathematics, and other sciences, have amazed educational experts. Now, we are glad to tell of a girl in the middle west, who is declared to be the best developed child, mentally and physically, in the United States—and her only teacher has been her mother!

Thus we are learning in many ways, that there is neither male nor female in the highest development of the race.

Mrs. Stoner is the wife of Dr. James Buchanan Stoner, now in command of the U. S. Marine Hospital of Pittsburgh. Their little daughter, who celebrated her twelfth birthday the other day, is acknowledged by educators and scientists to be in every respect the best developed child in the United States. She can row, fence, swim, skate, box, ride horseback, play ball, cook, crochet, knit, sew, play chess (she has beaten several champion chess players), as well as converse in eight languages. She has written nine books, is a teacher of Esperanto, plays both the violin and piano, sketches from life, and can execute fancy dances. She passed her examination to enter college when nine years old. With the exception of music, art and dancing, she has received her entire education from her mother, through a system which Mrs. Stoner invented and calls Natural Education.

EDUCATION BY PLAY AND LOVE.

Play and love are important parts in Mrs. Stoner's educational system and she believes that a mother, with the great love she has for a child, can teach the little one more in a few minutes than the teacher who does not love the child can give him in hours of enforced study.

In the system of Natural Education facts are put into nutshells and given to children in palatable doses, very often in the form of jingles. Little Miss Stoner has written a book of jingles in which all the presidents of the United States, the kings of various countries, the bones of the body and other interesting facts may be remembered as we remember the number of days in each month by the familiar rhyme, "Thirty days hath September."

The idea of teaching children to read and to spell by writing on the typewriter originated with Mrs. Stoner. She advocates burning all spellers and school grammars and allowing the children to gain a knowledge of orthography by copying poems and stories on the typewriter, while she believes a child must be taught to use good English by correction at each mistake and explanation of the fault, not by diagramming and learning a lot of rules that are rarely applied. She believes with Herbert Spencer that if a child is taught by its mother to use good English in the cradle it will continue to speak correctly unto the grave. Ergo, upon the mother depends the foundation of her child's education. Mrs. Stoner believes that there is but one way to learn a language, and that is by the natural or direct method, the ear being trained before the eye. She deplores the methods of studying grammar in most schools as a means of learning French or German, since pupils who study these languages via the grammar route are rarely able to converse with the natives.

One of the strongest points in natural education is that it inspires the pupil to impart knowledge as soon as the pupil receives it. Mrs. Stoner argues: "We know that which we impart" and as fast as she teaches her daughter, she has trained her to impart this knowledge to others. In the natural educational schools, which are to be founded in a number of cities during the coming year, this method will be tried, the pupils of ten and twelve years of age teaching those of five or six. There will be fairy tales and interesting stories to teach morals and to awaken the imagination, which Mrs. Stoner considers the greatest gift the gods have given to mortals.

SAMUEL THE VICTORIOUS LEADER.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON FOR FEBRUARY 28.

1 Sam. 7:3-17. Memory Verses, 11, 12.
Golden Text.—Hitherto hath Jehovah helped us. 1 Sam. 7:12.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(3) And Samuel spake unto all the house of Israel, saying, If ye do return unto Jehovah with all your heart, then put away the foreign gods and the Ashtaroth from among you, and direct your hearts unto Jehovah, and serve him only: and he will deliver you out of the hand of the Philistines. (4) Then the children of Israel did put away the Baalim and the Ashtaroth, and served Jehovah only.

(5) And Samuel said, Gather all Israel to Mizpah, and I will pray for you unto Jehovah. (6) And they gathered together to Mizpah, and drew water, and poured it out before Jehovah, and fasted on that day, and said there, We have sinned against Jehovah. And Samuel judged the children of Israel in Mizpah. (7) And when the Philistines heard that the children of Israel were gathered together to Mizpah, the lords of the Philistines went up against Israel. And when the children of Israel heard it, they were afraid of the Philistines. (8) And the children of Israel said to Samuel, Cease not to cry unto Jehovah our God for us, that he will save us out of the hand of the Philistines. (9) And Samuel took a sucking lamb, and offered it for a whole burnt-offering unto Jehovah; and Samuel cried unto Jehovah for Israel; and Jehovah answered him. (10) And as Samuel was offering up the burnt-offering, the Philistines drew near to battle against Israel; but Jehovah thundered with a great thunder on that day upon the Philistines, and discomfited them; and they were smitten down before Israel. (11) And the men of Israel went out of Mizpah, and pursued the Philistines, and smote them, until they came under Beth-car.

(12) Then Samuel took a stone, and set it between Mizpah and Shen, and called the name of it Ebenezer, saying, Hitherto hath Jehovah helped us. (13) So the Philistines were subdued, and they came no more within the border of Israel: and the hand of Jehovah was against the Philistines all the days of Samuel. (14) And the cities which the Philistines had taken from Israel were restored to Israel, from Ekron even unto Gath; and the border thereof did Israel deliver out of the hand of the Philistines. And there was peace between Israel and the Amorites.

(15) And Samuel judged Israel all the days of his life. (16) And he went from year to year in circuit to Bethel, and Gilgal, and Mizpah; and he judged Israel in all those places. (17) And his return was to Ramah, for there was his house; and there he judged Israel; and he built there an altar unto Jehovah.

Verse by Verse.

BY ASA MCDANIEL.

3. Samuel spake unto all the house of Israel. "When the right moment came and the desire for better things sprang up as the fruit of his prophetic labors, he was ready to take his place as the leader of the nation." (Cam. Bib.)—Most of the judges exerted an influence over a few tribes, but Samuel gained hold of the whole nation.—If you do return unto Jehovah with all your heart. The phrase is put first for emphasis, and indicates a desire on the part of Israel to return to the God of their Fathers, and a warning from Samuel against any half-hearted return.—Put away the foreign gods. The return should be marked by the destruction of the gods worshiped by the native races of Canaan.—Direct your hearts. A rather late formula for the consecration of life to Jehovah. See 2 Chr. 12:14; 20:33; Ezra 7: 10.—Serve him only. Worship him only. No man can serve two masters. See Matt. 6:24. He will deliver you. The declaration is positive. If Israel would meet the conditions, just imposed, they would be saved from the oppression of the Philistines.

4. Israel did put away the Baalim and Ashtaroth. Baalim is the plural of Baal and Ashtaroth is the plural of Ashtoreth. It was a long step in the right direction when the children of Israel put away foreign gods.

5. Mizpah. Hebrew, "watch tower." Doubtless the same place afterwards occupied by Gedaliah as the capital of the country. Jer. 40. (Int. Crit. Com.)—I will pray for you. Samuel was a praying man Ps. 99:6. Mary, Queen of Scots, said: "I fear John Knox's prayer more than an army of ten thousand men."

6. Drew water, and poured it out before Jehovah. This act indicated contrition. It also may have had the force of a pledge to God on the part of the people to pour out their life in his service.—And fasted on that day. This is an expression of sorrow.—We have sinned. The people made public confession of their sin.—Samuel judged the children of Israel. He heard the cause of the oppressed and secured their rights. (Smith.)

8. Cease not to cry unto Jehovah. Israel placed their hope in the ark and their arms in the past, but now they place their confidence in spiritual weapons.

9. A whole burnt-offering. "The whole animal was burned upon the altar to denote the entire consecration to Jehovah of those who were pleading for deliverance." (Cam. Bib.)

10. As Samuel was offering. While Samuel was engaged in a religious ceremony the Philistines advanced upon Israel.—But Jehovah thundered with a great thunder. Hebrew, "a great voice" RVm. Discomfited them. The Hebrew expression for the confusion of a sudden panic.

11. Pursued the Philistines. The people had only to pursue the flying foe, which they did until they came under Beth-car. The location of Beth-car is unknown.

12. Take a stone and set it. A memorial stone is set up between Mizpah and Yeshana. —Ebenezer. That is, the stone of help. RVm. Hitherto hath Jehovah helped us. A suggested emendation gives us: "This is a witness that Yahweh has helped us, which alone is appropriate in the context." (Smith.)

13. Philistines were subdued, and they came no more within the border of Israel. The statement is intended to indicate the complete victory of Israel. The exaggeration is evident from 1 Sam. 9:12; 10:2; 13; 19; 20.

14. The cities * * * * were restored. This shows the vigor and success of Samuel's government under divine guidance.—Amorites. This is a name given to the native races of Canaan.

15. Judged Israel. As a judge he was far-seeing and impartial.

16. Bethel, and Gilgal, and Mizpah. His custom was to go to the principal places and administer justice. It was a term of court and a series of religious meetings.

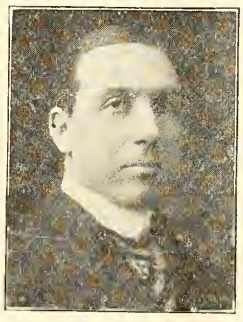
17. Ramah. A city a few miles north of Jerusalem. By force of his growing popularity this became the religious center.

Repentance and Power

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

Fully one-fifth of a century has elapsed since our last lesson and during all of this time Samuel has been a circuit rider. Having his home at Ramah he has ridden or walked to surrounding towns and like Cato, the censor, he has had but one message: "If you will forsake your sins and turn w h o l e-h e artedly unto God he will deliver you from your enemies." Year after year he had rung the changes upon that word. For a long time it seemed to fall upon stony hearts. Night after night the faithful preacher laid wearily down to sleep with a feeling that he was wasting his time upon a worthless people. He knew full well how fascinating were their sins. The worship of Ashtoreth involved many gay festivals with many sensuous appeals. It would be quite as proper to use the word "sensual" as "sensuous." The worship of the ancient goddess of fertility was licentious in the extreme.



Rev. John R. Ewers.

FASCINATING SINS.

"We do our best when we face our worst," is a striking epigram of Graham Taylor. Let us not underrate the fascinations of sins. We need to take our measure to cope with them. For the devil comes in the guise of an angel of light. Sin appeals to us in the most subtle ways. Why should I deny myself this? What can be wrong about that? "What's the harm" is the devil's trademark! Why should I not do what my nature prompts me to do? What did God put this impulse into me for, unless he expected me to obey it? Now we are touching the vital question. More young people go on the rocks here than at any other point. This is the Siren's Isle. Let us deal with it. Here is the illustration which helped me past that subtle temptation: You buy a thoroughbred Kentucky horse. He is full of fire and spirit. He has not yet been "broken." He has not made his adjustments. You hitch that fiery steed up to an elegant new carriage and you take your friend out for a drive. Getting into the carriage you say: "Now follow your impulses. Nature has put those impulses into you—express yourself." Well, he would in short order. You knew full well what would happen. The splendid fire in that animal would send him shying, plunging, running wildly down the streets until he smashed the carriage, injured you and possibly ruined himself. Don't you see nature has to be controlled? The fire in the horse needs to be directed into useful channels. Then he can run his race and possibly win it. Then he can pull his load and appear handsomely while doing it. Nature is to be controlled. "We put bits in horses' mouths." We are glad for the fire. We would not want an old bag of bones with no tabasco sauce! But fire is always to be controlled. One does not take a seventy-five horse power auto and, cutting it wide open, allow it to express itself! A powerful young man controls himself. Does that clear up that point? I shall be very thankful if it helps you as it did me. Look your sin squarely in the face. It is desperately attractive. But you can conquer and conquering possess new power.

ENEMIES REPULSED.

At last the old prophet's word is obeyed and the people come confessing their many sins. "We have sinned against the Lord" they cry. Every sin of yours adds a new wound to the heart of Christ! Do not crucify him anew and put him in open shame. Israel came to a sincere repentance. Repentance spells power. The sun shines clearly through the clean glass. The tempered sword is keen. Enthusiasm, which springs from God's spirit within, follows sincere obedience and repentance. After all what we need is that inner power. Little buildings are propped up —big ones have steel frames. In the mighty strength of this new experience Israel turned upon her ancient foe and put him to utter rout so that he came not back for many years. That is precisely the story of your fight with that subtle, fascinating sin. The mighty power of repentance will enable you to put it from you forever. It is a fight. I have asked my young people to frame Hebrews 12:4, "You have not resisted unto blood, striving against sin." It is a fight to the finish—for sin will finish you unless you finish it. Fight.

A Modern Prophet of the Love of God

nature, and out of this seemingly impossible situation he has constructed a most attractive narrative.

The deeper levels of trust in God and the belief that there is never a depth from which the hardened soul may not arise to the divine sonship is illustrated in a conversation between the troubled Lady Emily of Arnstead Manor and Margaret, the daughter of the old man David. "Lady Emily," Margaret says to the distressed woman,

> If I felt my heart as hard as a stone; if I did not love God or man or woman or little child, I would yet say to God in my heart, O God, see how I trust thee because thou art perfect and not changeable like me. I do not love thee. I love nobody. I am not even sorry for it. Thou seest how much I need thee to come close to me, to put thy arm around me, to say to me, "My child." For the worse my state, the greater my need of my Father who loves me.

It must not be forgotten that George Macdonald not only preached constantly through his poetry and his stories, but himself often occupied the pulpit, and had the reputation of a preacher of more than usual power. By those who heard him he is described as one not easily forgotten. His finely chisled face was almost unearthly in its spiritual refinement. He delivered no theological essay, but he spoke out as a man who knew. He had been on the mount of vision and had come down to earth to speak his message. He published several volumes of what he called "Unspoken Sermons," the motto of all of which might have been his favorite word from the prophet, "Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people."

INTEREST IN "SOCIAL UPLIFT."

One interesting phase of George Macdonald's work remains for a word of consideration. That was his interest in what the modern Church calls social uplift. It appears in a number of his works, notably in "Robert Falconer," and "The Annals." Perhaps some influences reached him from the interest of Ruskin and Maurice in these fields of practical social work. He pointed out the fact that it is the first business of the minister, as of the layman, not to try to convert but to be a friend to the poor, and that the good of personal contact with dependent and defective lives is far more significant than any institutional approach. In his work for the submerged classes Robert Falconer discovered that children and the poor suffer far less discomfort than is often supposed by people of more fortunate estate, to whom their condition seems wholly insupportable.

In 1902 the people of Aberdeen erected a monument to celebrate the services and genius of George Macdonald. It was an act of good will which was greatly appreciated by the author who had thus been honored while he still lived. He was never the possessor of a strong body. He knew much illness and sorrow. His physical condition was always a matter of anxiety to him and his friends. In spite of this fact, perhaps in some measure because of it, he became one of the purest and noblest teachers of the last generation. There have been greater novelists, poets and preachers, yet few have done more earnest work and with nobler results. His stories read like transcripts from life two generations ago in northeastern Scotland. Those who have made acquaintance with Thomas Crann, the stone mason; Double Sammie the shoemaker; Robert Falconer's grandmother, with her soul torn asunder between love and her Calvinistic faith; Catherine Weir, hard and unforgiving until conquered by anguish and brought to a better mind; Ericson, the student of Aberdeen, and Old Rogers, the former military man and a score of other figures that throng these volumes, cannot doubt that George Macdonald was a genius as well as a moralist, a man gifted with a vivid imagination which called to its aid the resources of a high type of literary art. But the essential strength of his work was its religious element. All men are fundamentally religious, and so to him they became interesting. He felt that nothing human was alien to him, so he had a point of contact with all classes of people, and he rejoiced in the privilege of revealing to his wide and increasing audience the nobler and kindlier aspects of God and men.

Let me close with a sentence or two taken from "St. George and St. Michael," an illustration both of the author's habit of turning from the swift movement of romance to the calm and quiet contemplation of spiritual laws, a transition which perhaps rendered the moral reflections more impressive from the vivid contrast in which they stand with their context. These are his words:

> What can the universe have in it of home, of country, nay even of world, to him who cannot believe in a Soul of souls, a Heart of hearts? I should fall out with the very beating of the heart within my bosom, did I not believe in the pulse of the infinite heart, for how else should it be part of mine? I made it not, and at any moment it may seem to fail me. Yet never, if it be what I think it, can it betray me."

MYSTERY EVERYWHERE.

It is sometimes urged that prayer is mysterious. So is everything, if we stop to think about it. Matter is a mystery. Nobody knows what matter is. Force is a mystery. Nobody knows what force is. Gravitation is a mystery. Nobody knows what gravitation is.

Nobody knows what takes place when we drop a lump of sugar into a cup of coffee. Whether the change is mechanical or chemical the very wisest men are not able to say.

We know just one thing, that by dropping sugar into the coffee the coffee is sweetened. For most of us that is enough. We know that by dropping a prayer into a day we sweeten a day. How that is brought about we do not know. Who has sight so keen and strong that it can follow the flight of song or flight of prayer?

Why should we not be as reasonable and practical in our religion as we are at the dinner table?—Charles E. Jefferson.

TWO KINGS.

A king of peerless fame was he;
His minions, over land and sea,
  Earth's treasures sought;
But he whom men called strong and brave,
To pride and passion was a slave
  In deed and thought.

* * *

A peasant, poor, unknown to fame,
Wrought daily at his bench; but shame
  With men he found;
Yet, strong of soul, he gave no heed,
But labored for his children's need,
  A king uncrowned.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR FEBRUARY 24.

The Optimism of Jesus. Jno. 16:33; Mark 4:30-32.

"The world we live in is a world of mingled good and evil," says William DeWitt Hyde. "Whether it is chiefly good or chiefly bad depends on how we take it. To look at the world in such a way as to emphasize the evil is the art of pessimism. To look at it in such a way as to bring out the good, and throw the evil into the background is the art of optimism. The facts are the same in either case. It is simply a question of perspective and emphasis. Whether we shall be optimists or pessimists depends partly on temperament, but chiefly on will. If you are happy it is largely to your own credit. If you are miserable it is chiefly your own fault."

Optimism and Knowledge.

The genuine optimist knows what men must endure. If the ideals of age are soberer than those of youth, they ought to be loftier. Men who lose their enthusiasm through contact with an evil world owe their enthusiasm to ignorance and not to a clear grasp of moral ideas. They lack the courage which would enable them to persist in well doing in spite of misunderstanding and hardship. Men without courage never know anything as they ought to know it. The knowledge of the optimist is acquired in the hard school of experience. Those who choose the comfortable way instead of the way of service do not find in their own lives or in the lives of others any moral worth that can be the basis of hope. Jesus knew life. He knew himself and what he could endure. He knew the qualities of men, and he had a foundation for his expectation of good.

Optimism and Unselfishness.

Is pessimism selfishness? We hesitate to say so because many who think that life is a sorry affair are capable of generous deeds. They would like to have a radiant faith, but they do not see how the facts warrant it. Granting that not all hopelessness is due to selfishness, we have a right to say that much of it is to be traced to that source. Not a few who rail at the government are disappointed office-seekers. The church is wrong and doomed to destruction, because they do not dictate its policy. The world is wholly evil because God did not consult us about its management. "Bring whatever you please, and I will turn it into good," said Epictetus. "Bring sickness, death, want, reproach, trial for life. All these, by the rod of Hermes, shall turn to advantage." To meet trouble and make it minister to the life of faith is the achievement of the unselfish spirit.

The Demands of an Optimist.

Jesus exhibited his optimism by what he demanded of his followers. He does not permit us to be satisfied with small undertakings. He summons us to fight the most strongly entrenched bad habit we have. If we have an unforgiving nature, He tells us that we must learn to forgive if we expect the forgiveness of God. If we are growing rich in material goods at the cost of our souls, He demands that the soul have the first place in our thoughts. Among men who delight in war and call it good and mock all who denounce it, Jesus bids us preach the gospel of mutual aid and universal good will. Man is more than a brute. He need not always delight in slaughter. He can be taught to rejoice in peace and in a co-operation against the forces of nature that is world wide. Jesus teaches us that the world can be taught to love purity and to hate vileness. And His disciples are to win the world to this view.

Disciples Table Talk

A Church for Men.

Lexington, Mo., church, where Carl A. Burkhardt ministers, is a church for the men. The men recently conducted the every-member canvass and the organization that did this work met in the office of a bank several times for prayer-meetings and counsel. The canvassers were drilled on the needs of the various missionary boards. The canvass yielded $2,000 for current expenses and $850 for missions. The pastor is preaching a series of Sunday evening services on "Men and the Church," and in spite of weather conditions, the audiences grow right along. There have been 33 accessions in the past year, and 17 of these during the past month. There is every reason for the church to look into the new year with hope.

A City Superintendent for Des Moines.

Following the Sunday meetings in Des Moines, the problems and opportunities of the smaller churches have increased and it has been decided to have a superintendent of city mission work, who will devote his entire time to the weaker churches of the city. The man has been selected, but his name is not yet announced.

Disciples Who Serve the State.

In a recent issue, a list was given of Iowa Disciples honored this year with public office. Among them was Governor Geo. W. Clarke, Geo. E. Bramner, state representative; Hubert Utterback, district court judge, and Joseph E. Meyer, police judge. To these is now being added two Central church men in Des Moines. Tom Watters, secretary of the Sunday-school at Central church is now secretary of the state senate. Elder L. E. Stamm of Central is assistant secretary. A. J. Small, of Capitol Hill church, is librarian for the supreme court. B. W. Garrett, of Capitol Hill church, is clerk of the supreme court. Cash Dowell, an alumnus of Drake, was recently elected to the national house of representatives and has joined University Place church. Besides this, there is a long list of minor offices held by Des Moines Disciples.

Book on Morals for Siam.

W. R. Houghton, of What Cheer, Ia., some years ago wrote a book called "True Life," which is a series of opening exercises for public schools inculcating good morals. A missionary in Siam has written for permission to translate the book and the permission was given. Since then two copies of the Siamese version have come to America and Mr. Houghton has presented one to the library at Drake university.

Farmers' Institutes in the Churches.

The farmers seem to have caught on to the suggestion given by the rural church experts that it would be a good thing to hold farmers' institutes in the church. An institute was held in Polk, O., church on Feb. 2. The ladies discussed home decoration, labor-saving devices, music, art and literature for the farmer, and woman's suffrage. An institute was held in the Chardon, O., church the last week in January. An institute was held in Yorktown, Ind., church on Jan. 25. There were discussions on making hens lay, picking out seed corn, and farm product contests for the children. A lady speaker attacked the current styles as being too extravagant.

Dr. Mary Longdon Studies.

Dr. Mary Longdon is the living link missionary of Beatrice, Neb., church. She is spending a year in the graduate department of the University of Pennsylvania in some special studies. She will visit the church that supports her next summer and from there she will probably go to the national convention at Los Angeles.

Church Has Pleasant "Sunday Afternoons."

Central church, Des Moines, has opened a room for the young people on Sunday afternoon. There are music and recitations, and an opportunity for the young men and women of the boarding houses to find each other under good environment. At six o'clock a light luncheon is served for ten cents.

Canadian Disciples Meet.

The Disciples of Niagara district in Ontario met in Dufferin St. church at Bridgeburg the last week in January for their annual convention. Owing to the resignation of John T. James as president, the vice-president, Lucien Moate, of Silverdale, Ont., presided. Mrs. C. Zavitz, of Winger, Ont., acted as secretary. There were about fifty out-of-town delegates.

California Ministers Go to Fresno.

The ministers of northern California have been invited to hold a ministerial institute

Rev. H. O. Breeden, who will entertain the Northern California ministers at a ministerial institute at Fresno, Cal.

at Fresno, in the new church and be the guests of H. O. Breeden. The program will include the following addresses: "Modern Evangelism: What About It?" by Morton L. Rose of Watsonville; "A New Appraisement of Christian Science," by Dr. Thomas A. Boyer of Oakland; "The Strength and the Weakness of the Christian Church in California North," by W. P. Bentley, of Santa Cruz. The meetings will be held the first week in March.

Pastor As Chamber of Commerce Secretary.

Frank E. Jaynes recently went to Wabash, Ind., where he is successor to such preachers as G. B. Van Arsdall, Earle Wilfley, Leslie W. Morgan and E. F. Daugherty. He has preached a religion of service and his suggestions of improvement for the town have resulted in his being called to be secretary of the chamber of commerce, to which he will devote three hours daily. The municipality has already projected and is carrying out a modern system of street lighting, a gymnasium and social center for the young people, and provisions are being made for those who are out of work, in the latter enterprise securing the active co-operation of the bureau of charities. The chamber of commerce is working on a plan for beautifying the entire city and a committee is at work on the industrial development of the community. The pastor has an office elegantly equipped in a business block, and this office is the clearing house of many of the best enterprises of the community. The result is that his church has secured a great hold upon the business men of the community.

Reports from Sterling Place, Brooklyn.

"The best annual meeting in years" was the oft-heard remark Wednesday evening, Jan. 20, at Sterling Place church, Brooklyn, where M. M. Ammunson is minister. Over one hundred partook of the delightful supper served by the Ladies' Aid. There were ninety-six people present for the annual business meeting. Reports: Church Treasurer: church receipts, $5,922.92; grand total receipts, $6,799.46; liabilities, $700.00; assets, $472.41; deficit for year, $227.59. Bible school: Receipts, $338.44. C. W. B. M.: Receipts, $260.05. Ladies' Aid: Receipts, $134.18. Christian Endeavor, $95.23. Summary report of five years of present pastorate: Additions to church, 152; mortgage paid, $10,000; building improvement, $25,500; current expenses, missions, benevolences, $30,000. Grand total, $42,500.

T. A. Boyer Accepts Call.

T. A. Boyer, who recently resigned at Oakland, Cal., has accepted a call to Richmond. This church is young and small as compared with his former charge, but it is said to promise an opportunity for constructive work.

Helped Raise Half Million Last Year.

Geo. L. Snively helped dedicate 44 church buildings last year and the amount raised at the various dedication services was $571,000. He will give more of his time to evangelism this coming year.

Chicago Japanese in Salt Lake City.

Dr. Katsugi Kato is the traveling secretary of the Japanese Christian workers of America, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., and he recently spoke in Salt Lake City church. His address was followed by general discussion.

Credit should have been given to the Homiletic Review for the excellent article on the late Baroness von Suttner. This article first appeared in the columns of that helpful magazine.

Dedication at Knoxville, Tenn.

Knoxville, Tenn., church dedicated a new building on Feb. 7, costing $60,000. A debt of $20,000 was fully provided for. There were 21 accessions to the church on dedication day. Wm. J. Wright was the dedicator, and is holding evangelistic meetings in the church. Howard Saxton assists in the singing.

Statistics from Hamburg, Ia.

Hamburg, Ia., church reports that they received 130 new members during 1914. $2,700 was raised for the work. Louis R. Patmont lectured here recently.

An Evangelist as Editor.

E. E. Violett, the evangelist who is conducting meetings at Hutchinson, Kans., was invited to be the editor of the Hutchinson Gazette for one day, on Feb. 2. The editor made the following announcement of his appointment to edit the paper: "I shall be editor of The Gazette the issue of February 2," said Doctor Violett in his announcement one Sunday evening. "And I want to warn you to not come near the office unless you are protected with asbestos raiment, for I guarantee that it will be a hot issue. That will be ground hog day and we are going to turn the sunlight on that little animal, chasing him back to his hole for a year. I shall have complete charge and am going to give the readers of The Gazette such a newspaper as they never have seen before. I want to warn cranks that it is useless for them to come at me with their stuff for publication, as it will not be handled. I am not going to establish a refuge for cranks."

A Good Year in Buffalo.

B. S. Ferrall, of Central church, Buffalo, refused three calls last year to stay by his great church. He made 1252 calls, married 18 couples, officiated at 30 funerals and received 100 accessions to the church. He had the best audiences he has ever had in this church.

Indiana Organization Efficient.

G. I. Hoover is district evangelist in the eastern district of Indiana and he reports that the eighteen counties of the district have been organized for co-operative work during the past year, according to the plan of the state association. Each of these counties has held conferences and the state and district officers have been present to assist. A new church of sixty members was organized in Sexton, Rush county, as the result of a meeting held there by the evangelist. Three churches whose doors were closed at the beginning of the year were re-established under Mr. Hoover's labors and each is now doing successful work. These are at East Union, Cadiz, and Sane's Creek. Each of these congregations now has a competent pastor in charge.

Secretary Mohorter Visits Chicago.

Secretary J. H. Mohorter, of the National Benevolent Association, happened to be in Chicago at the same time as Mr. Lewis, and assisted in the program of the Quarterly Assembly of Chicago Disciples. He also spoke briefly at the ministers' meeting of the work of his society. He said that the assets of the Association for the past nine years had increased from about one hundred and fifty thousand dollars to seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars. This did not include the assets of the Kansas City hospital, which will be turned over to the Association after the building is completed. He reported a greatly awakened benevolent interest in the brotherhood, which in its first expression tended to turn over to the Association every unfortunate old person or child in the community, but which is gradually learning to co-operate with the Association in the care of these unfortunates. Mr. Mohorter spoke with pride of the two institutions whose buildings have just been completed at Dallas, Tex., with many of the conveniences and comforts of our modern homes.

In and Around Chicago

The visit of Grant K. Lewis, secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society, on Jan. 31 and Feb. 1, was a notable event in Chicago circles. He spoke at the quarterly assembly of Chicago Disciples on Sunday afternoon on the immigration question. He expressed his sense of disappointment that the Disciples had not been able to take a larger part in the redemption of the foreigner who has come to our shore. He spoke of various methods now being employed by the religious forces of the country which will have great significance to future operations of the Disciples. He expressly hoped that the missionary spirit should fall upon some of our young men in the colleges that they might learn the language and prepare for city work among some immigrant group, in company with native workers, for such partnership has been found very profitable.

THE VISIT OF THE MISSIONS COMMISSION.

Stephen J. Corey, who returned last month from an extended trip through the orient, visited Chicago on Feb. 7 and 8, speaking in the Evanston church on Sunday morning and at Irving Park church in the evening. The Ministers' Association left their accustomed place of meeting and assembled at the City Club in the morning with the largest attendance of the entire year. Mr. Corey addressed the pastors on the subject of his missionary observations.

He spoke of the Philippines as having significance for the entire orient. Here the Western school system is in full swing under the control of the United States and the orient feels that the results of western learning and civilization in the orient are to be tested by the reaction in these islands.

In Japan, there is a modernity which curiously blends with the older views of things. Mr. Corey saw a rich Japanese ride up with his family in a Winton Six and go into a temple to worship an idol. A trolley line takes the people of Tokio out to the shrine of the Fox god, where thousands are worshipping these days. The American fad of a "Billiken," a crude image to be found on many mantels here, has been taken seriously in Japan. The people there believe that this is the American god of wealth and seeing how prosperous Americans are, they are securing Billikens in large numbers and worshipping them as deity.

Mr. Corey reported that Dr. E. I. Osgood was achieving some very interesting results at Chuchow. The city was paved at his advice to furnish relief to famine sufferers. A city park has been established with a reading room in the midst of it. He asked the chief executive of the city for a place to establish a tennis court, and one was arranged in the yard of the Confucian temple, with the holy of holies for a back-stop. This indicates the tendency in China to regard with little reverence their former holy places. In this same city the Disciple convention of China was held in the Confucian temple since it was the only place in the city that was large enough.

The situation at Nantungchow, Mr. Corey described as one of the most interesting in China. Mr. Chang Chien, a Chinese layman and Confucianist, has arisen from poverty to be a millionaire and is now a member of the cabinet of President Yuan Shi Kai. This man has established schools throughout his district at his own expense and also has an orphanage with four hundred children. Mr. Chien is looking for an educational director and has asked the missionaries to provide one. He is asking also to have an orphanage director appointed. The right man in this district would take the whole section for the Christian ideals. Mr. Chien's only son now has a Christian tutor.

In the district surrounding Nantungchow there are six millions of people with no other missionaries than the Disciples. There are now only three Christian workers in the district. The community is an immediate and pressing opportunity.

Mr. Corey spoke before the Disciples Club of the University of Chicago on the evening of Feb. 8. The meeting was in Lexington hall.

Ernest Read of Pontiac exchanged pulpits with Austin Hunter of Jackson church on the evening of Feb. 7. The Pontiac church has been having a series of monthly services for men.

J. E. Wolfe reports that the Whiting church has provided for all their missionary apportionments, paid off an over-due note on their property and taken care of still another note not yet due.

Lin D. Cartwright, a student of the Disciples Divinity House, spoke at Metropolitan church on Feb. 7.

Mr. A. G. Fegert, religious editor on the Chicago Herald, will speak at Evanston church the evening of Feb. 14. He was the leader of the "Go-to-Church Sunday" movement of a year ago. The same evening O. F. Jordan will address a large peace meeting in Grace M. E. church conducted by the 24th district of Knights of Pythias. There are 2,800 lodge members in this district and a considerable percentage of them will be in attendance.

Disciple Minister Becomes Methodist.

W. T. Loomis delivered his last sermon as a Disciple minister on the evening of Jan. 24. He has been pastor of Sioux Falls, S. D., church, but has entered the Methodist ministry and was immediately assigned to the Methodist church in Big Stone, S. D.

Take Shares in Missionary Enterprise.

Representative business men and ministers of the Disciples church in Sumner, Greenwood, Howard, Harvey, Cowley, Butler, Sedgwick and Chautauqua Counties, Kans., met in Wichita in Central church recently and organized a movement to place missionaries in the field in the eight counties and to do a general evangelistic work. O. L. Smith, former pastor of the church at Wellington, was offered the position of superintendent of the missionaries at a salary of $2,000 a year and has the offer under advisement. Four hundred shares of missionary stock at $15 a share were placed on sale and most of them were snapped up by the men at the meeting. A board of directors was chosen.

Pleasant Thursday Evenings.

Each Thursday evening is social night at First church, Youngstown, O. Recently the ladies' class gave a dramatic sketch called "The Last Day of Pumpkin Center School." Each Thursday evening there is something new to attract the young people.

Help Comes to Mountain School.

The people at Hazel Green Academy, where the buildings recently burned, are being remembered all over Kentucky. Mrs. Randan Bronaugh, president of the C. W. B. M. auxiliary at Nicholasville, Ky., recently sent a box of clothing and the women's Bible class in the same church sent two barrels of supplies.

Raise Money to Pay for Revival.

The gospel is free but the transportation charges are sometimes considerable, it was learned at Paris, Ill., last week. The meetings conducted by Herbert Yeuell were about to close and the expenses had amounted to a thousand dollars. On Jan. 24, the congregation succeeded in raising $600 of the amount. At last report there had been 57 accessions.

Promote Moving Picture Show.

The Ladies' Circle of Central church, Waco, Tex., undertook recently to put a three thousand dollar contribution into the improvement fund of the church. The device they employed to this end was a benefit performance given in Queen theater on Jan. 23, a movie play called "The Girl of the Golden West." The church women aided greatly in the ticket sale for the performance.

Minister in Quarantine.

William P. Yesley, pastor of East Side church, Ft. Worth, Tex., went visiting with his family during the Christmas holidays in the home of H. E. Berg at Weatherford. While there, a child of the host contracted scarlet fever and the entire party has been in quarantine since. The pulpit of East Side church has been supplied by Clinton Lockhart of Texas Christian University.

Success in Three Years' Ministry.

John W. Love, minister of First church, Burlington Junction, Mo., will soon close a three year ministry to go to Wyatt Park church, St. Joseph, Mo. In the three years, he has received 177 into the membership of the church. Chas. A. Lockhart has recently held evangelistic meetings in his church, which resulted in 14 confessions of faith. Harry W. Talley led the singing.

Beckley, W. Va., Issues Report.

Up in the mountain country of West Virginia is the church associated with the C. W. B. M. school at Beckley. Here F. F. Grim ministers. The congregation numbers 250 in its resident membership. There were 36 additions last year, ten being inducted into the church by baptism. The money raised in all departments was $2,858.03 of which $719.29 went to missions. Does any small church have a better percentage?

"Living Truth in Modern Fiction."

David H. Shields, minister at Kokomo, Ind., announces a series of monthly Sunday evening sermons on six best sellers. They are "The Eyes of the World," by Wright; "John Barleycorn," by London; "Inside the Cup," by Churchill; "Saturday's Child," by Norris; "Pollyanna," by Porter and "What Men Live By," by Cabot. There will be four sermons on consecutive Sunday evenings on the last named book. The pastor says, "Millions are reading these books. Why? Come and hear."

Moving Pictures in West Virginia.

Huntington, W. Va., church has decided to purchase a moving picture machine and begin showing pictures with religious significance as a means of increasing interest in the church.

Men and Millions Team in Illinois.

The Men and Millions team is now operating in central Illinois. The team is composed of Rev. R. H. Miller, secretary of the Men and Millions movement; Rev. F. W. Burnham, general secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society; Rev. W. R. Warren, secretary of the board of ministerial relief; President H. O. Pritchard of Eureka college, and Mr. Teachout, a prominent layman and business man of Cleveland, Ohio. These men occupied the pulpits in Springfield, Ill., recently for a Sunday. They are making headquarters in the New Leland Hotel at Springfield and are visiting small towns about Springfield during the week. Illinois is the third state to be canvassed. Texas was the first and Kentucky the second. In Texas, $400,000 was subscribed, more than $40,000 was given in Decatur where the Illinois work started.

Rev. R. H. Miller, who is leading the Men and Millions Team in the Illinois Campaign

Village Church Raises Money.

Bellflower, Ill., is a small town, but the congregation there has proven itself a generous one the past year. They gave in all departments $3,951.52. There were 24 additions to the church. Gifts to missions aggregated $201. D. D. Dick has accepted a call for a third year with this church.

New Church Makes Good.

The church at Lemore, Cal., is only a year and a half old. C. Homer Hopkins went there in October, 1914. The net gain in membership last year was 29. At the annual report a surplus was reported in every treasury of the church. The congregation has a building plan in mind.

Big Surplus at Edinburg, Ind.

Most churches would like to close the year with a surplus of $800 and all debts paid as they did at Edinburg, Ind. William Grant Smith is the minister and he reports there were 92 additions and that the resident membership is 515. They raised for all purposes $3,628 and gave to missions $334. The minister is in his third year. He made 900 calls last year.

Campbell Wedding Report in Error.

A church paper of the Disciples reported recently that a granddaughter of Alexander Campbell, bearing his name, had been married in Colorado. William Campbell, the only living son of Alexander Campbell, who resides in Evanston, Ill., and attends the church there, states that this report is in error. Only two of the sons of Alexander Campbell lived to maturity and reared families. These were Alexander Campbell, who had an estate near Bethany and who had four sons and one daughter, the sons dying without issue and the daughter, Mrs. Virginia Magary, being now in Australia. The children of William Campbell are four, three of whom live in Evanston. The two daughters are Jennette C. Campbell and Alice R. Campbell. The son in Evanston is Argyle Campbell, a dealer in railway supplies. Another son, Patrick Campbell, lives in California. Relatives of a cousin of Alexander Campbell, the Disciple leader, live in Colorado. Some descendants of the daughters of Alexander Campbell live in various parts of the country.

Minister Candidate for House of Commons.

W. G. Charlton, who is minister of the Disciple church at Aylmer, Ont., is a candidate for a seat in the house of commons in Canada this year. He recently delivered an address before the Men's Mutual Improvement Club of St. Thomas, Ont., on "Shall the British Empire Decay?" He has preached in churches of various denominations the past year on invitation and is persona grata with his religious neighbors. The church at Aylmer has 48 members. W. J. Hastie, who is the provincial secretary in Ontario, will hold evangelistic meetings in this church in February.

Additions at New London, Mo.

The church at New London, Mo., where Alfred Munyon ministers, reports that it had 70 additions last year, and a net gain of 64. The membership of the church is now 449, which gives it great prestige in the community.

An Active Aid Society.

The Ladies' Aid Society raised $554 at Chico, Cal., last year. The church had 105 accessions and raised $4,000 for local expenses. The average attendance in the Bible school was 180.

Wife Says Patmont Not Kidnaped.

The secular press reports that Mrs. Patmont has no faith in her husband's stories of adventure. She has just made the following statement: "On May 27, I arrived in Chicago, accompanied by my sister, Carrie Hees, and met my husband at the Dearborn street station. I then believed my husband had been kidnaped at Westville, but I don't believe it now. His cheeks were ruddy, he was tanned and fatter than I had ever seen him. He said the fat was unnatural, that the appearance was caused from being tied up with ropes."

Resignation Reconsidered.

Carthage, Ill., church would not allow A. L. Cole to resign and by a unanimous vote recalled him to the pastorate there. The expressions of good will were so hearty that he has decided to continue his pastorate. Reports of his illness prove to be erroneous.

Missionary's Paper Reprinted.

William H. Erskine, of Osaka, Japan, contributed a paper to the Journal of Religions Psychology, November, 1914, on "The Disposition of the Dead in Old Japan." The paper proved so profitable that it was reprinted in a pamphlet and is now being distributed in that form. The paper contains many interesting facts about Japanese customs and closes with an interpretative word, as follows: "From this study of the burial customs in Japan is constrained to agree with those writers who contend that the two impulses of life are the food and sex elements. The offering of the dead for the peace and prosperity of the community, the willingness of the people to die a living death for the good of the village, the offering of the eldest son to the waves and fishes so that the sea would give of her bounties to man—all show the importance of the food supply to the community."

Albion, Ill., Church Prospers.

A few months ago the church at Albion, Illinois, where T. J. Clark ministers, dedicated its new $15,000 building. That this care for the material did not militate against the church's spiritual welfare is evidenced by the fact that the congregation ports just closed the most fruitful revival held in many years. W. E. Harlow was the evangelist, and Frank McDonald the leader of the singing. Sixty-six accessions are reported, 49 by confession of faith. The new church home was crowded at almost every meeting. Four baptisms the week previous to the meeting gave promise of what was to follow.

Annual Report East End Church, Pittsburgh.

A turkey dinner was served at East End Church, Pittsburgh, on the evening of Jan. 20 attended by about 300 people. The congregation without a dissenting voice voted to build a new church to cost approximately $125,000 and a permanent building committee was appointed. The church raised for all purposes $18,249.15. There were 176 additions, 114 baptisms, 4 deaths, 19 letters, 3 otherwise. The net gain for the year was 150. John Ray Ewers is minister.

One Hundred Men Make Calls.

Central church of Lexington, Ky., had an "Every-member Canvass," which had other than financial motives. It meant, to quote I. J. Spencer, who is entering upon his twenty-first year of his ministry in this church, the extension of mutual acquaintance; the fostering of brotherly love and faith and hope and Christian unity; the giving and receiving of helpful information looking to increased church attendance and interest; encouragement of Bible study; the promotion of universal and enthusiastic cooperation in the "whole great task which God is calling upon us to perform." The hundred men making the house to house canvass had special seats in the church on Sunday morning, Jan. 17, with a sermon directed especially to their work, and in the afternoon they set out early on their errand to reach with short calls the seventeen hundred members of this great church. They brought back notations for the pastor of the very greatest value. This church had a lecture the following week by W. R. Holder, a missionary from Central Africa.

Congregationalist Boys Again Routed.

Central church basketball team of Wichita, Kans., seems to be taking all the laurels in their part of the country this winter. On January 1, the game at the Y. M. C. A. with the Congregationalist team resulted in a score of 41 to 5. The Disciple boys produce good team work and are too fast for the deseendants of the Pilgrims.

Victories for a Coast Congregation.

The church at Gilroy, Cal., closed the year entirely free of debt, which was a very great encouragement to the congregation. The ladies of the church have issued a cook book with their favorite recipes, which has proven to be a money-maker for them. Improvements upon the building will be made this coming year. The church uses moving pictures on Sunday evenings, which have increased the attendance. R. N. Davis, formerly pastor and now state evangelist in northern California, passed a week-end with this church recently.

School of Methods is a Success.

The School of Methods that was announced for St. Paul, Minn., has proven a success. The meetings were held in First church. F. E. Billington, Northwest Field Secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society took a prominent part in the discussions.

Some Good Money-Raisers.

The church at Georgetown, Ky., was prosperous last year. The financial reports indicate a willingness to give, on the part of the congregation. The total receipts for the last year were $3,186.71 and the Men's Bible-class contribnted $355.98.

Aid Society is Very Active.

The Ladies' Aid Society at Central church, Moberly, Mo., raised $1,378.14 last year. B. L. Smith, the pastor, reports 76 additions and a net gain of 29. The resident membership is 598. The congregation raised for all purposes $6,750.22. The pastor made 48 special addresses, officiated at 20 weddings and 34 funerals and made 1,408 calls. The pastor is a former secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society.

Progress at York, Neb.

A. F. Ritchey, who is minister at York, Neb., reports 82 additions last year and a present membership of 439. The total money raised for the year was $3,100, of which $400 went for missions and benevolence. The average attendance in the Bible school was 198, a gain of 15. The minister made 15 special adrresses and 817 calls; he conducted 19 funerals and officiated at 13 weddings. This is the fourth year of the present pastorate and during this time 340 people have united with the church.

Church Has Numerous Accessions.

Rollin A. Bennett is the minister at Marion, Ind., and he reports that the church there had 408 accessions last year. The average attendance in the Bible school was 594. The state convention will be entertained by this church this year.

Minister in a Railroad Wreck.

John L. Brandt, of St. Louis, was dumped out of his Pullman berth unceremoniously one night recently and awoke with baggage and a wounded man on top of him. The accident occurred on the Wabash railroad near Des Moines while he was on his way to Jefferson, Ia., to conduct evangelistic meetings. The train had left the track and one man only a few seats from Mr. Brandt was killed, as the car fell twenty feet and turned completely over. The minister was able to preach that night, though considerably shaken up. There were 16 accessions at the first invitation.

Student Preacher Does Good Work.

James Teeters is a Drake student who last fall started going out to Kellerton, Ia., to preach. He found the church much discouraged, with a three thousand dollar debt, and without any settled ministry for many months. He held evangelistic meetings during the holidays which brought 59 accessions to the church, 32 being inducted into the church by baptism. The debt has been decreased by seven hundred dollars already and all interest is paid up.

Third Pastoral Year Successful.

L. A. Chapman is in his third year with Fourth church, St. Louis. The church in 1914 raised for all purposes $3,565.26, of which $300 went for missions and benevolence. A new pastoral year begins May 1.

A Liberal Congregation.

The annual reports of Central church, Sherman, Tex., where George F. Cuthrell ministers, indicates that the congregation have been willing to give liberally. They raised in all departments $8,094.94. Of this $721.16 went to missions and benevolence. The Bible school raised $551.14 and the Ladies' Aid Society $9.21. The C. W. B. M. auxiliary gave $318.52.

Numerous Additions at Beaver Falls, Pa.

The church at Beaver Falls, Pa., where C. M. Smail ministers, had numerous additions last year. There were 163 new members received into the local fellowship. The present membership is 506. The money raised for all purposes was $5,031.75. The Bible school gained in attendance over 1913 and the average was 219. The pastor made 1,320 calls.

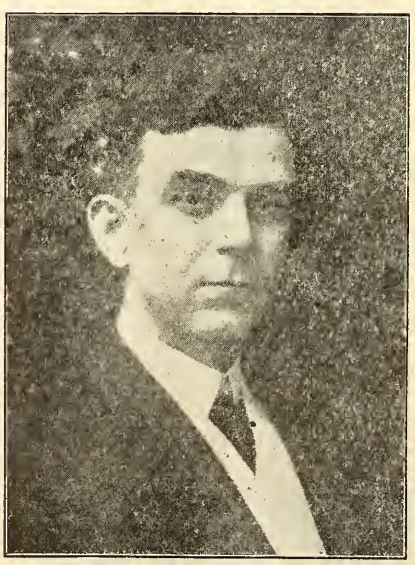
From Evangelism to Pastorate.

H. E. Sala is abandoning the work of a professional evangelist to accept a pastorate in First church, Peoria, Ill. He recently held evangelistic services at Warren, O., with 45 accessions, mostly adults. This church is ministered to by Frank Brown.

Peace and War Lessons Attract Men.

The church at Niagara Falls, N. Y., has a Bible-class of men which has grown very much since the adoption of the new lessons studies. They have put out a leaflet describing the Josiah Strong studies in "The Gospel of the Kingdom," and they now have an average attendance of over thirty men. The teacher of the class is Ira L. Parvin, the pastor of the church. The lessons this year deal with the causes of the war and the hope of permanent peace.

Los Angeles Convention Auditorium



Rev. R. F. Thrapp, who reports that the hall to be used by the 1915 Convention has "the best facilities ever used by our people"

In a recent letter to Secretary Graham Frank Russell F. Thrapp, pastor First Church, Los Angeles, Cal., writes as follows concerning the building in which the General Convention is to be held next summer. A large part of the enjoyment and success of the convention depends upon the building in which it is held. There will be much interest in reading about the convention hall.

"Yesterday, in company with Mr. Horton, the superintendent of the Bible Institute, I went over the building our annual convention will use next July. Without fear of contradiction, I can say that we will have the best facilities ever used by our people. The main auditorium, seated with opera chairs, is just finished, and will accommodate forty-seven hundred people. The acoustic properties are perfect. Besides this, there is another audience room seating fifteen hundred, and very many class rooms seating from seventy-five to two hundred; also, a roof-garden, seating six-hundred people. There will be plenty of places for exhibits, etc. School will not be in session, so there will be over six hundred rooms that can be occupied by delegates for sleeping purposes. Each room has hot and cold water. Elevator service, postoffice and telephone facilities are well-nigh perfect. The dining room will be operating, seating eight hundred people. Added to this is the fact that on the adjoining grounds is the State normal school, with several auditoriums, which can be used, if necessary. This building, known as the Bible Institute, is the most complete and perfect of its kind in the world, and is only four blocks from the First Christian Church. The church can be used, if desired, for the meetings of the various boards." Mr. Thrapp adds that the local committees are at work. They expect thousands of people from southern California to attend the convention. Disciples of the Pacific Coast are always ready for a religious convention and it is expected they will turn out in large numbers. President Walter M. White and Secretary Frank expect to go to Los Angeles at an early date for a conference with the local committees. The date of the convention is July 18-25.

Men and Millions at Jacksonville, Ill.

The Men and Millions team were in Jacksonville, Ill., on a recent Sunday. Those who helped in the work there were Dr. R. H. Crossfield, president of Transylvania University of Lexington, Ky.; G. W. Muckley of Kansas City, head of the church extension board; Dr. R. J. Dye, missionary to Africa; Dr. H. C. Hurd, a specialist on immigration; and A. E. Cory, secretary of the Men and Millions movement.

Banquet in Memory of Robt. E. Lee.

Tribute was paid the memory of General Robert E. Lee, leader of the Confederacy, at First church, Sedalia, Mo., at a banquet held in the church parlors. The meeting was under the auspices of the Emmet MacDonald chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy. A portrait of the distinguished general occupied a prominent position in the dining room. A. W. Kokendoffer, pastor of the church, spoke on "Lee, the Soldier."

Congregation Doubles in a Year.

Fairview church, Wichita, Kans., doubled its membership the past year. W. T. McLain has been their pastor for a little more than a year. The Sunday-school enrolment has inceased from 148 to 343. The church membership has grown from 253 to more than four hundred. The past year over $4,000 was collected for all purposes.

Preachers Play Chess.

S. M. Smith of Allerton, Mo., is an expert and his recent challenge to his part of the state has brought a response from an editor and another preacher. The match will be played in the near future.

Homeless Congregation Settled.

As was recently reported, the edifice at Turlock, Cal., burned to the ground. The congregation is now meeting in the Chatom building where they will remain until a new home is erected. The pastor, F. M. Brooke, is holding evangelistic meetings in Fruitvale.

Flaw in Deed of Church Building.

Westville, Ill., church has a building with a flaw in the deed. The heirs of the original donor can claim the property if the building is not used for church purposes. As the congregation is weak, sometimes an interim of pastorates means a lull in the work. They were obliged to fight a lawsuit through the courts several years ago, and now for a second time the issue is raised.

County Superintendent of Churches Efficient.

C. K. Gillum, a county superintendent in Missouri, has had oversight of all the churches of the county needing help the past year, and as a result they all have regular preaching now. He preaches for several weak churches himself and through the week visits others. The plan is working for much larger efficiency in these congregations.

Church Can Prevent Crime.

Judge Ralph S. Latshaw, of the criminal court, spoke to the congregation of Hyde Park church, Kansas City, recently on the prevention of crime. "Inward restraint is better than outward restraint," Judge Latshaw said. "Surround the young people with good conditions of living and equip them with proper aims for life and the penal institutions will have to go."

New Mexico Church Expands.

Outgrowing the present quarters is the pleasant though embarrassing experience of Roswell, N. Mex., church. The official board has recently voted to build a three thousand dollar addition to the property at Fourth street and Richardson avenue. This addition will be constructed with reference to the needs of the Sunday-school.

Church Remembers Its Dead.

Jacksonville, Ill., church held a very tender and beautiful service recently in which the names of those who have gone home the past year were read to the congregation and these of the choir invisible were remembered in words of song, prayer and tribute. Words with regard to the beloved dead were spoken by the pastor, M. L. Pontius and by Clarence L. DePew, state Bible-school superintendent. There were twenty-four names in the list of those departing in 1914.

Pastor in Favor of Amusement.

In his recent series of revival services at the South Berkeley, Cal., church, T. A. Boyer spoke upon the subject of "Amusements." Mr. Boyer declared that the funny bone had its place as well as the backbone. He advised having music indoors and fresh air amusements outdoors, but said that when card-playing, dancing, and theater-going stood in the way of Christian work, they were wrong. "When people sidestep from the main purpose of life for amusement," said Mr. Boyer, "especially when church members do so, the church suffers."

Coast Church Prospers.

Carl. S. Miles has completed the first year of his pastorate in the Marysville, Cal., church very much to the satisfaction of that congregation. During the year the work has steadily grown. The membership has increased about seventy per cent and the Sunday-school about one hundred per cent. The church building has been painted and improved. New class rooms have been made and the whole lower part finished up for the use of the Sunday-school. New seats have been installed in the auditorium. There have been quite a number of old members and of members from other churches interested anew in the work.

State Board Meets.

The state board of Michigan met at Lansing recently and they decided to hold the next convention at Long Lake, Iosco county, late in June or early in July. A good program is in preparation.

Fresno Building Soon Completed.

Fresno, Cal., church will soon complete their new edifice, at a cost of $80,000. Dr. Breeden recently visited San Francisco where he negotiated the purchase of the church chairs. The building will be opened for public use on Feb. 28 and on March 7 the formal dedication will take place. It is announced that J. H. Garrison, who is now on the coast, will participate in the dedicatory services. The building will be a model of completeness and modernity.

Three Links Men at Church.

The men wearing the Three Links in Rock Island, Ill., attended Memorial church on Jan. 24. They met in Odd Fellows' hall and marched to the church where they listened to a sermon by M. E. Chatley.

Disciple Pastor of Federated Church.

Wm. J. Lockhart is the pastor of a Federated church in Urbandale, a suburb of Des Moines. The church is just seven months old and now has 230 members. One hundred of those have been received since Christmas, in special meetings held by the pastor. There are fifty-five families where father, mother and all the children are members of the church. The problem of denominational feeling is not experienced though twelve denominations are represented and the difficulties of the local church have been described as "being all of the 'human nature' type." The basement of a future structure has been roofed in at a cost of four thousand dollars and it is expected that this summer the congregation will go forward with more building operations. Mr. Lockhart has made this suburb his home for nine years while he engaged in evangelistic work, and it is due to his efforts that this happy state of things has come to pass in Urbandale.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desire nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Reach the Mind Through the "Eye Gate"

The most progressive pastors and teachers today are finding that the quickest path to the Kingdom of the Mind is by the way of the "Eye-Gate." It has been scientifically demonstrated that pictures get over three times the results obtained by the use of words. Preach a sermon, teach a lesson, by word of mouth; it takes the message a long time to reach the mind, and too often it is lost after getting to its destination.

The Disciples' Spiritual Opportunity: a Resumé

THE FUTURE CURVE OF THE DISCIPLES' MOVEMENT OUGHT TO TAKE US CONSCIOUSLY AND POSITIVELY IN THE DIRECTION OF A SPIRITUAL GOAL.

That is the sum and substance of the thing we have been saying in the series of editorials on this page during the past three months. In drawing the series to a close we desire to make a resume of the discussion, that our readers may see its definite outlines more clearly than the discontinuous installments permitted.

Of the things we have been saying there are three main divisions.

I.

Religious thought and life are today undergoing a profound reconstruction. In the soul of mankind there is a deepening hunger for the spiritual. Religion is on the way to a more commanding position in human affairs than it has ever occupied before.

In the natural development of normal events a reconstruction of man's spiritual life was already in process, but the great war in Christendom has brought with it a world-wide disillusionment with respect to the adequacy of conventional religion, and has set going many forces, constructive and destructive, which are making their impact upon the soul of mankind.

The moral and spiritual shock of this war creates a condition within which it is almost certain that, in less than a generation, the spiritual life of the world will undergo a remaking of its ideals and program more profound and far-reaching than it has experienced in many centuries.

The Church itself shares in the world's desire for a higher order of spiritual life, but stands, for the moment, bewildered and unable to meet its new task with a constructive and satisfying gospel.

The Disciples of Christ stand with the rest of the Church in much the same attitude They are conscious of the changing aspect of the whole religious problem, and of the futility and inconsequence of much that they have been contending for in the past. Their sense of a distinctive mission in the world is fading out. Large numbers of young men entering their ministry are leaking into denominational pulpits, seeing no principle at stake. Many of their leaders speak complacently of the Disciples' movement in terms that imply that it is simply another denomination among the denominations, and justify certain practices not by an appeal to the ideals of the movement but by any appeal to denominational expediency.

Among Disciples there is however the same yearning that aches in the heart of the rest of Christendom for a deeper spiritual life, a closer walk with God. But instead of building up a spiritual life of their own on the basis of their own historic principles, they have been content to accept as a standard the order of spiritual life obtaining in the Christian denominations and to imitate it.

It is now high time that the Disciples undertake earnestly and constructively to create an order of spiritual life within their fellowship, homogeneous with their own ideals. They have at hand a set of principles which they have always taken objectively, as applying to the organizational side of the Church, but which, if brought home to the inner life, will produce the very kind of spiritual character sure to be demanded by the new spiritual epoch upon which the world is now entering.

The Disciples' principles are not ecclesiastical principles; they are soul principles.

Their ideals are to be realized in the outer organic order of the Church only by first being established as spiritual verities in the inner life of those who cherish them.

By this reinterpretation of the Disciples' familiar ideals in terms of the spiritual life, our sense of mission will be restored, a sense of mission based not upon fiction, nor sectarian prejudice nor parochial views of the world, nor any sort of literalism, but upon indisputable realities.

II.

What are the familiar ideals that thus lend themselves to a reinterpretation, whose interior side we Disciples have not yet become intimately acquainted with in spite of all our handling of them?

There is, first of all, the ideal of Christian unity.

We Disciples have gone at the problem of unity, and rightly, in the spirit of specialists. But we have kept a consistently objective mind in all our thought about it. We have considered it in terms of Church organization and practice. But Christian unity, like the Kingdom of God, is within the soul, and until it gets itself established in the habitual attitudes and feelings of those who plead for it their pleadings are in vain.

The moral responsibility, the spiritual burden, of pleading for Christian unity has never been brought fully home to our souls. Do we think in terms of this imperial ideal? Do we love all Christ's disciples—those who call themselves Presbyterians, Methodists and other such names—with the same attachment we feel for those whose discipleship is spelled with a big D? Do we count them in as a vital and organic part of all our Christian enterprises? Have they unimpeded access to our inner spiritual fellowship, or do we, in our heart of hearts, hold an unfavorable presumption against them as compared with our very own folks?

Have we cultivated a clannish mind or the catholic mind?

It is out of the heart, out of the thought-life, that denominationalism, like all other sins, proceeds. And it is within the heart that organic Christian unity must begin.

* * *

A second ideal calling for reinterpretation is that of the restoration of primitive Christianity.

We have gone past the time in the world's history when primitive Christianity as a mere "ancient order of things" possesses any authority for us.

But primitive Christianity as an immediate spiritual experience of contact with Jesus Christ, is a perennial norm for the Christian life.

The appeal to the primitive Church for models of mere organization and ritual is a hollow appeal. But the appeal to the primitive Church for its secret of power, its spiritual dynamic, is a vital appeal, rewarded by rich results.

The greatest hindrance to Christianity after these nineteen centuries is the overgrowth of institutionalism which hides Christ.

Churchianity draws off spiritual energies which ought to be consecrated to Christianity.

It was not so in the beginning. It never is so in the beginning of any spiritual movement.

The restoration ideal is, therefore, a spiritual ideal. To get immediate contact with the live-giving Christ of the gospels and to open one's soul to him to receive his life, this is to restore primitive Christianity.

A third ideal calling for reinterpretation is that of the supremacy of Christ.

Our conception of Christ has so radically changed within the past fifty years that the old appeal to his authority in support of this or that doctrine of a creed or this or that device of ecclesiastical practice seems like an affront to him.

We cannot think of him as an ecclesiastical tinkerer.

He was a bringer of life. He possessed the secret of holiness and usefulness and inward peace. To make him supreme is to trust our souls to the spiritual laws by which he lived; it is to learn his secret and to apply it in our personal lives and in the social order; to work at the growing temple whose foundations his hands laid in the souls of his first followers.

The Disciples of Christ, if they were true to their plea for the supremacy of Christ, would be a living reply to such questions as: "Can we still be Christians?" and "Dare we be Christians?'' They would be known to the world as those who take Christ's moral laws seriously, as practical demonstrators of the divine wisdom and human worthfulness of the spiritual revelation Jesus gave to mankind.

To make Christ supreme is to be more Christ-like than are others who do not make him supreme!

* * *

And finally, there is a certain rational temper characteristic of Disciples which, while it has misled us at some points, has served us well in the past and is an invaluable asset for our future.

It is this rational temper that will keep our inner life sane and wholesome—free from the obscurantism and superstition that seems so naturally to haunt religious experience.

III.

Thus have we outlined for us our spiritual task.

It requires of us an unprecedented measure of personal devotion.

It calls upon us to reconstruct the practical activities of our churches and to set up spiritual standards.

It involves the enrichment, the simplification and the deepening of the service of worship.

It affords us a unique opportunity to create a literature of the spiritual life, through which many hands and hearts may work together at the great task. For it is not the task of a few, but of us all, laying upon all the duty of communicating whatever of experience or insight the spirit of God has vouchsafed to us.

Here is a goal and a way to it that should challenge the deepest loyalties of the Disciples of Christ. If our fathers had reason to feel that they were called of God to do a specific work for Him, we, their sons, have more. The ''plea'' God gave them to make is more vital today, more pertinent, and more convincing that it was then.

We will be held responsible in the sight of heaven if we are recreant to it!

Solving the Baptism Problem

BY ERRETT GATES.

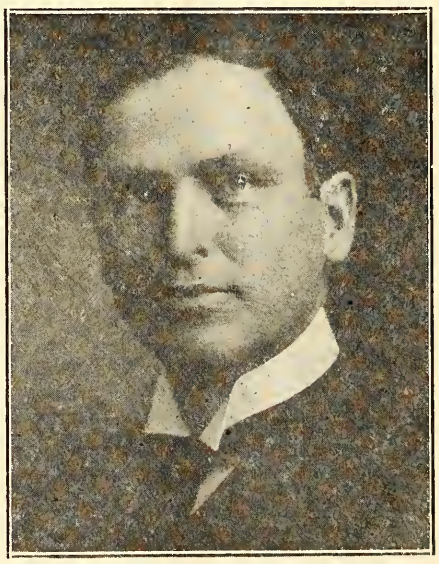
THE problem of baptism was not solved when immersion was conclusively demonstrated to have been the practice of the apostolic churches. Immersion continues to be the most conclusively proved apostolic custom. Yet baptism is the most perplexing and sensitive problem with which the Disciples have to do. Every serious undertaking by them, such as the evangelization of the world and the unification of Christendom, and every discussion of their own history and policy, runs sooner or later into the problem of baptism. We do not like it, but we can not escape it; and the reason for it is that the Disciples live and move in the twentieth and not in the first century.

The new book by Charles Clayton Morrison on ''The Meaning of Baptism'' is one more among many efforts which have been made by Disciples to adjust their conception of baptism to the growing knowledge of the New Testament and to the demands of the modern Christian consciousness.

There are two elements in this consciousness which make baptism troublesome to the Disciples: its spirituality and its fraternity. Baptism seems to have been regarded as more or less legal and separative, instead of spiritual and fraternal, as everything Christian must be to satisfy the consciousness of the modern followers of Christ.

BAPTISM IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

The main thesis of Mr. Morrison's book is that baptism in its New Testament use was the act of initiation into the Church, or into Christ (which in the New Testament was the same thing) and not merely a physical act of immersion; and that this was not called in question until the rise of the immersionist movements in modern times. Then, attention was called to the physical act, and the zeal of immersionist bodies to restore the New Testament mode perverted baptism from its New Testament meaning by conceptually isolating the mode, the physical act of immersion, from the functional act of taking one's stand as a Christian. So certain is the author of this that he ventures to use the word baptism in the sense of initiation into the Church without any reference to the particular physical act, though he holds that a physical sign of some sort is, of course, necessary in such an initiation, and makes a vigorous argument in favor of the Disciples' practice of immersion as the appropriate and adequate symbol. But he declares that the act of initiation, a moral-social act, is the major and essential part of baptism.



Professor Errett Gates, Ph.D.

The task he sets for himself is to restore the original New Testament functional meaning of baptism, and thus divest it of ''all elements of legalism and arbitrariness, and at the same time revive it as a preachable subject for the modern minister.''

AN ORGANIC FUNCTION OF THE CHURCH.

He achieves his result by showing that baptism was a social, an organic function of the Church, and this he evidently feels to be the chief contribution of his book. This is essentially the point of view of the mind trained and domesticated in the world of modern feeling and learning. The modern mind thinks in the categories of social origins, social ideals, and social ends; and finds its reasons in social uses. Mr. Morrison has brought this modern point of view to the study of baptism in the New Testament.

The various chapters of the book elaborate three principal themes: (1) The meaning of the original Greek word for baptism as used in the New Testament; (2) The origin of the use of immersion in the administration of baptism; (3) the functional meaning of baptism in the New Testament.

I.

In his discussion of the meaning of the word the author takes sharp issue with Alexander Campbell for translating the Greek word ''baptizo,'' by ''immerse,'' as he does in his version of the New Testament—''The Living Oracles.'' The author thinks that Campbell thus made baptism a physical act. This is the substance of the ''immersion dogma'' of which he is constantly speaking in derogatory terms—the identification of the religious rite, baptism, with the physical act, immersion, by which it was historically administered.

DISPUTED BY SOME REVIEWERS.

That this is a correct representation of Mr. Campbell's teaching is disputed by some of Mr. Morrison's reviewers, who point out that Mr. Campbell also made a distinction between the spiritual and physical elements in baptism. He said in 1831: ''There are no acts of worship or of religion ordained by Jesus Christ that are at all to be regarded as outward or external bodily acts;'' ''and no man of any sense pleads for these, as bodily acts, as of any importance whatever.'' In his debate with Rice he said, ''The present century is really retrograding in the understanding and veneration of the ordinances both of Communion and of the rite of initiation.'' Here is Mr. Morrison's own phrase used by Campbell of baptism in 1843—''the rite of initiation.''

But Mr. Morrison in his book anticipates this objection by showing that Mr. Campbell's conception of the ''spiritual'' element in immersion was a very vague and unanalyzed notion. Campbell thought he gave the specific act of immersion a ''spiritual'' significance by regarding it as a command of Christ. He imagined that because Christ commanded immersion, and because it is submitted to in obedience to Christ, it is therefore not a physical or bodily act! Mr. Campbell dwelt much on the ''antecedents'' of immersion—faith and repentance, and upon the consequents of immersion—the gift of the Holy Spirit, etc., and vaguely imagined that because immersion was implicit in a process that was spiritual, it could not itself therefore be regarded as a bodily act!

From Mr. Morrison's point of view even that does not satisfy the New Testament usage. Both Mr. Campbell and Mr. Morrison regard the conversion experience as a process whose stages may be set down in a series. With Campbell the series ran thus:

(1) Faith—(2) Repentance—(3) Immersion in Water.—(4) Salvation.

While Mr. Campbell, and Disciples generally, have connected initiation into the Church with the third item of the series, the initiation was a sort of chance by-product of obedience to Christ in immersion, and not a positive act beloging in the series.

Mr. Morrison's series would run thus:

(1) Faith—(2) Repentance—(3) Induction into the Church—(4) Salvation

Mr. Morrison contends that the third item of his series is inherently a spiritual, a moral act, and the immersion in water is but the incidental and customary physical sign by which the act is carried out.

With Mr. Campbell baptism was immersion in water. With Mr. Morrison baptism is the organic act of initiating a penitent believer into the Church.

HOLDS TO IMMERSION.

Yet Mr. Morrison pleads persuasively in the latter part of his book for immersion, and strives to show that, although the New Testament does not authoritatively fix a particular mode of initiation upon the Church, it is nevertheless desirable for many reasons to practice only the classic mode. The reasons given are "historic precedent," "natural symbolism," "impressiveness," "the cause of Christian unity," and as an "end to controversy."

So that both Mr. Campbell and Mr. Morrison come to the same practice after the linguistic controversy is over.

II.

As to the origin of the use of immersion in the act of baptism Mr. Morrison says that it arose out of the Jewish rite of proselyte baptism, which was a rite of initiation into the Jewish nation and church. John the Baptist, a Jew, took over this form and used it in the rite of initiation into his company of disciples. The disciples of John, when they became the first disciples of Jesus, took over this same form and used it in their rite of initiation into the new Christian company. If the Jews had used any other form it would likely have been taken over by the first Christians. It was not the form which was regarded as important so much as the use to which it was put. So that when Jesus commanded his disciples to go into all the world and make disciples of all the nations (and Mr. Morrison does not call this text of the great Commission in question), he was not commanding them to immerse but to incorporate their converts into the body of his disciples. The form of that initiation by historic custom and accident was immersion; hence immersion followed naturally and undesignedly in the organizing activity of the Church wherever converts were being made. Another form would have followed as naturally.

Hence the practice of immersion in baptizing did not originate in a specific command of Christ but in social custom. Jesus did not invent it; he found it in use by John and had no occasion to question it.

III.

As to the function of baptism in the Christian society, the author holds that it was the ceremonial induction of members into its fellowship. The Church needed it, as every voluntary society that defines its membership needs a definite initiation. Administered by immersion in water, it summarized and happily symbolized in dramatic action the moral cleansing which was the fundamental condition of fellowship in the Church. The initiation was the essential thing in it, the immersion the incidental, though not the negligible thing. The physical act was present though not thought of; it "was not a question of conscience, hardly a question of consciousness."

The author is conscious that the demonstration of the meaning of baptism as initiating function is the goal of his argument. It is affirmed in every chapter—almost on every page. If this is so, then the many things asserted of immersion on the assumption that it is baptism are not so. That immersion is an act of obedience to the will of Christ, or an act of submission to God, or a test of loyalty, or a means of regeneration, is not true.

BAPTISM AND SALVATION.

As to those passages in the New Testament which seem to make baptism a condition of remission of sins or of salvation, Mr. Morrison feels that these texts of Scripture "have stood like specters in the path of those who would interpret Christianity as an out-and-out ethical and spiritual religion." He admits that there is a "survival of a certain modicum of legalistic elements in early Christian thinking" which are irreconcilable with his thesis, yet he believes that the New Testament as a whole is a unity in the support of it. He does not quaver in the presence of the texts that connect baptism and salvation, because he regards salvation as Christian character developed within the fellowship of the Christian society. It is not contrary to ethical standards, therefore, to affirm that baptism (initiation into the Christian society) is a condition of salvation.

But the practical inference to be drawn from this conception of baptism, and the larger motive which inspired the book, is that those who have been baptized (initiated into the fellowship of the Church), whether they have been immersed or not, are Christians and members of the Church of Christ. He says: "Millions of Christians there are who have been buried with Christ in baptism who have not been immersed in water." "They have missed something valuable, something important. But they have missed nothing essential."

Thus the physical act of immersion, or any other particular physical form, is removed from the realm of moral or legal necessity, and is put in the realm of moral and social expediency.

SOME OBSERVATIONS.

1. There can be no doubt that this interpretation of baptism goes a long way toward, if it does not complete, the solution of the baptism problem. It makes it possible for the modern mind to hold to baptism without violence to its moral sense or to its appreciation of the pure inwardness of the religion of Christ. Baptism becomes an affair between the individual and the Christian society, and not an "abstract transaction" between the individual and Christ or God.

2. No other attempt (and there have been many of them) by a loyal Disciple has gone so close to the root of the whole difficulty.

Alexander Campbell wrestled with this problem during his whole life. He saw the dangers to spiritual religion, and to Christian fraternity and unity, in establishing a direct, causal relation between the act of immersion and the remission of sins. He solved the problem by resort to an extra-biblical distinction between "real remission" of sins by faith, and "formal remission" by immersion. He distinguished also between change of heart by faith and change of state through immersion. He seemed in this to have had a glimpse of the social function of baptism, but it was too remote from the center of his thinking to furnish a basis for reinterpreting the rite. It always remained with him a personal transaction between the individual and God, or Christ, and was related to the remission of sins "in some sense." He never gave a satisfactory explanation of what he meant by formal remission in immersion. He likened it to the marriage ceremony, which legalized the marriage relation, but did not constitute its essence. Immersion was necessary but in a different sense and in a lesser degree than faith. He was willing to go so far in his subordination of the act of immersion as to say: "I do not make baptism absolutely essential to salvation in any case."

A book appeared from the pen of A. B. Jones in 1901 on, "The Spiritual Side of Our Plea," whose confessed object was so to interpret baptism as to remove from the "gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ the repulsive aspect of a gross and non-Christian legalism." He found in Campbell's idea a solution for the problem.

MR. AYLSWORTH'S SOLUTION.

Another book appeared in 1902, from the pen of N. J. Aylsworth, on "Moral and Spiritual Aspects of Baptism," which was the most elaborate attempt that had appeared to bring baptism into harmony with "natural law," "spiritual law," "reason, conscience, the human heart, and all history." His scheme was to blot out as far as possible the distinction between baptism and its spiritual antecedents and to treat the whole institution "as one act, internal and external." Regard baptism as a spiritual-physical act, and all difficulties immediately vanish. The physical act of immersion is joined indissolubly to its spiritual antecedents, almost to the point of absorption with them, and its inviolable necessity to salvation is justified by an elaborate speculative philosophy. He treats it as a command of Christ, and as inseparable from the remission of sins. He knows nothing of Campbell's distinction between real or formal remission. It is baptismal regeneration rationalized and ethicized.

Mr. Morrison has completely severed the act of immersion from the personal authority of Christ, or from the remission of sins; but by construing baptism as initiation into a social, moral culture-medium—the Church; and by lifting the remission of sins out of an individualistic forensic act into a moral-social process, he is able to speak of baptism for the remission of sins.

There can be no doubt that Mr. Morrison has abundant ground in New Testament teaching for his view; but better, he has on his side all the probabilities arising from the history of the origin of baptism and the comparative study of the evolution of religion and of religious institutions. They are shown to be social in origin and social in function.

3. Mr. Morrison has taken his ecclesiastical life in his hands by writing this book. There are Disciples who look upon every effort to modify the Campbellian doctrine of the design of baptism as an act of treason to the brotherhood. Those of us who believe in freedom and progress owe Mr. Morrison a profound debt of gratitude for keeping alive among the Disciples the spirit of free inquiry. There are too many of us muzzled by our official positions as pastors and teachers; the prophetic office is likely to die among us if some one like Mr. Morrison does not speak his whole heart from time to time.

Women Boost American Made Goods

Pointing Out a Present Day Practical and Patriotic Opportunity for American Women.

BY GENEVIEVE CHAMP CLARK.

Miss Genevieve Champ Clark, daughter of the Speaker of the National House, is one of the honorary chairmen of the "Woman's National Made in U. S. A. League," recently organized in Washington, to promote the use of American made goods, articles and products. Other honorary chairmen and active members of the League include Mrs. Thomas R. Marshall, wife of the vice-president; Mrs. Champ Clark, wife of the speaker; wives of cabinet officers, of senators, representatives and other prominent officials, wives of governors, mayors, heads of great women's organizations, noted social leaders, and many other well known American women.

THERE is a great patriotic movement on foot in this country. It affords opportunity for practical patriotism to every person in the country. But especially is it a woman's movement. I refer to the "Made in U. S. A." movement.

It was the women of Germany who were the power behind the throne which made the trade mark, "Made in Germany," a synonym for excellence throughout the world. It is rather a curious circumstance that German products should be proudly marked with these words. I am told that it happened in this way:

England is a free trade country and the manufacturers of other countries are allowed to come into their ports without taxation. English cutlery, at the time to which this story relates, was the best cutlery in the world. German cutlery was very poor. So a phenomenal swindling arose in this way. English merchants put cheaper German cutlery into English boxes and sold them to their countrymen as English goods. So great did this swindle grow that the English government took the matter in hand. England informed Germany that in the future no German cutlery would be allowed in English ports unless clearly marked "Made in Germany." The German government took the hint and the German women were crestfallen. They did put "Made in Germany" not only on their cutlery, but on every article of manufacture. And it is a standard for high class.

WHAT THE AMERICAN CAN DO.

The American woman has the opportunity now to do for the United States what the German woman has done for Germany. In the past we have been foolishly dependent upon Europe. We have been enchanted by the word "imported." We have paid exorbitant prices for foreign labels and trademarks. We have unhesitatingly discriminated against our own country. Now the people in whose favor we have discriminated have ruthlessly thrown us upon our own resources and have answered the call to the colors in their respective countries.

They are now being our real friends by abandoning the needle, loom and work shop for the sword. They are being patriotic and we would do well to follow their example. And patriotism is strictly a home industry. In the past, the American manufacturer, actuated by a spirit of self preservation, has often put an imported label on his wares. It would be exactly the same goods if it carried the "Made in U. S. A." label and both we and the manufacturers and merchants would enjoy a lovely feeling of self-righteousness.

AMERICAN VERSUS "IMPORTED."

The other day a friend of mine was on a purchasing tour in some Washington shops. In one shop was a sale of crepe material. My friend asked the clerk if these materials were made in the U .S. A. In a desultory fashion, the clerk responded that she did not know. The manager of the shop, happening by, overheard my friend's remark. He stopped and explained to her that a part of the goods were made in American mills and a part in English. He showed the two samples in the quality of which she could discern no difference. He assured her that there was none. One of the pieces was forty cents a yard. This was American made. The other was seventy-five cents and was made in England. My friend asked him why that was, why he bought English goods when he could buy American made just as good at a lower figure. He replied that the women, who do the bulk of buying in this country, would rather pay the difference on the same goods if it is made in a foreign country. Is this not a lamentable commentary?

Miss Genevieve Champ Clark, who declare that the future prosperity of America is in the hands of the American women.

THE TAILORS IN CONVENTION.

My tailor once told me a story that made me feel like that proverbial "thirty cents." He told me that before he came to this country, he was a designer for one of the most famous dressmakers in Paris and that his talent had in no way diminished since his removal to this country. That now, however, he had to pay exorbitant prices for models designed by his own pupils because they remained in Paris and he came to the United States of America. It was resentment over such antics as this which I think prompted the American tailors several years ago to start a great propaganda for American clothes for American women. They held a great convention which was attended and enthusiastically endorsed by the leading tailors and modistes of this country. The designs were lovely, but did they succeed? They most certainly did not. We American women would not co-operate with them.

AN ECONOMIC RIDDLE TO BE SOLVED.

All these things are in the past. And as Perlmutter says, "There's no use crying over spoiled milk no matter who left the ice box open." But we have got some more milk in our ice box and let us be careful about the lid. We have a greater opportunity to solve an economic riddle confronting our country than any generation of women has had since our ancestors first established this republic. In those days the women were the manufacturers. Every house had its loom and every housewife was a factor of the great industrial world. Long since has this work passed from the hands of women. It has gone into the hands of men. And, in place of the loom in every modest home with the women of the household the workers, we have mammoth factories and mills with ear-splitting machinery, with thousands of men and women and boys and girls as operatives thereof. Now that the men are the manufacturers, we women discriminate against them. An inhabitant of Mars might be excused for mistaking such conduct for professional jealousy.

But there is a permanent constructive work that we American women now have the opportunity of doing for business. The present situation seems to be an economic riddle. The answer not only can, but must be found by women. It is an economic problem that is essentially a woman's problem, because women are the purchasing agents of the nation. It is an astounding fact that two-thirds of the nation's wealth is expended by its women. It is obvious then that the success of such a plan as the "Made in U. S. A." movement depends upon the women. It is an imperative patriotic duty. Let us look sharp lest we shirk and spend the rest of our lives, if not "in penury and woe." at least crying over another quantity of spoiled milk.

In order that this movement may be a compact organization, the Woman's National Made in U. S. A. League has been formed with national headquarters in Washington, D. C. It has for its sponsors, patrons and chairmen, the most prominent women in the country. It already has a tremendous membership made up from every state in the Union.

WHAT THE LEAGUE CALLS FOR.

To put the duties of a member of the Woman's National Made in U. S. A. League concretely and completely, they may be stated thus:

(1) Ask for Made in U. S. A. goods, products and manufactures. (2) Insist that the quality and price be right. (3)

PLEDGE OF MEMBERSHIP.

Woman's National Made in U. S. A. League.

I pledge myself for the welfare of our country, while the war lasts, to demand and buy everything, whenever possible, "Made in U. S. A.," and urge my friends to do likewise.

Name .....

Address .....

Buy with discrimination and intelligence. (4) Insist upon honest labels. (5) Encourage American designers, manufacturers and producers. (6) Respect good work and good workmen. (7) Tell your friends about it.

It is no small thing to be able to teach the youth of the land, boys and girls alike, over whom our influence extends, that a good day's work honestly well done in shop or mill or laboratory is constructive patriotism. It is a thing that none of us should forget, that any work well done is an honor to the doer. It will be striking at the root of evil that is responsible for our unemployed problem, if we teach the children to pay the same homage to work that in the past has been paid to money. Let us make our standard efficiency and the gold will take care of itself. When we have learned that lesson, it will not take a world war to shock us into appreciating and utilizing our own capacity.

A NATIONAL PRIDE NEEDED.

Let us develop a national pride in everything "made in U. S. A." Only with this pride to back it will our national trade mark be effective. We are proud of our great natural resources. Let us be able, by the time Europe has adjusted her differences and can give us her attention, to show her our new pride in our own manufactured products. Natural resources are accidents—products and manufactures we get by the sweat of our national brow. Let us quit bowing and scraping to things "imported" and give preference and honor to things made at home. This is the crux of the situation. We will demand made in U. S. A. goods, we will give preference to them on every occasion, and the most vital point in the whole affair is that American made goods must be worthy of this preference.

The Woman's National Made in U. S. A. League and the general committee in charge of this propaganda are going to see to it that the national trade mark is not used or misused as a medium of selling cheap, shoddy, unworthy goods and articles. The people who are interested in this are determined that the Made in U. S. A. trademark must be used only on standard goods. Otherwise, it would be decidedly false patriotism. It is a case of internal reciprocity. My father gave me a definition of reciprocity once and it is this:

"You pat my back and I'll pat yours."

So what we really want and what we really need to ensure the permanent success of this movement is that the American consumer shall give preference to American made goods and that the American manufacturer shall see to it that no man of any country excels him in his own line.

THE AMERICAN WOMAN HOLDS THE KEY.

The future prosperity of this country is now in the hands of the American woman. It devolves upon her to bear this solemn duty in mind even in individual purchases. We should carry this thought into the shops with us and in all cases ask first for American made goods. Doubtless there will be many things which we cannot get when we first ask for them. But some thoughtful manufacturer hearing of this frequent demand will begin at once to supply any article for which there is a sufficient demand. This would give a tremendous amount of work to the so-called unemployed, through the sheer force of the demand of the women purchasing agents which resulted in new American industries. It is patent that every new industry thus started would be the medium of work to a great many thousands of people. We would be knitting up the loose ends of our economic problem. Would it not give the American woman untold satisfaction to feel that it was her power, her purchasing power, which gave work to thousands of unemployed and made the American business world more prosperous? We have not lost our power. It was through us that the foreign label became the thing. Will we now refuse to use our power to make the American label equally in vogue?

Here would be the happy consequences of a conscientiously concerted action of this kind:

SOME RESULTS ANTICIPATED.

It will help every man and woman who works for a living. It will give employment to many out of work. It will raise the quality of goods, products and articles of manufacture. It will keep the looms of our big mills busy continually. It will bring better times. It will teach self reliance. It will teach us the wisdom of cooperation for our mutual benefit. It will make foreigners respect our goods, products and manufactures because we respect them ourselves. It will make American merchants, manufacturers and producers proud to make and sell "Made in U. S. A." things.

And last, but not least, it will keep many a wandering dollar at home.

Alas, the number of prodigal American dollars which helped to make this European war possible.

"OVERCOME EVIL WITH GOOD."

The Bible admonishes us to "overcome evil with good." So, out of this nerve-racking, heart-breaking war, the American woman has an opportunity for overcoming evil with good. She has an opportunity which she has never had before, and may not for many a day have, of freeing herself from the European mania. It is incongruous and un-American for us to be a "clinging vine" nation. I think that it is un-American to be dependent upon anybody for anything. As a nation we have been dependent upon no one politically. We asserted our independence in our cradle by sticking out our tongue at our mother country. We have never been from that day to this dependent in the slightest degree upon any nation politically. Why should we be industrially? At any rate, we have been in the past. But the sturdy oak has got other fish to fry. Pardon a mixing of metaphors. We have a rare opportunity to become industrially independent as "a hog on ice." I never saw a hog on ice and I have never been able to picture anything like what the freedom of such an animal in such conditions would be.

It will take real courage though to emulate that estimable animal under those enchanting conditions. It will not be an easy task. But nothing worth while is easy. It will take patience and some self-sacrifice and perseverance, and above all, co-operation. It will take a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull all together. But in these struggles we must not forget that it is in our power to make "Made in U. S A." a synonym of superiority in all branches of manufacture and industry. What if it is a little personal sacrifice at present? Would it not be, women of America, a monument well worth a little patience and self-denial, mutual co-operation and endeavor to have the United States of America the mistress of the world of fashion and manufacture?

LIFE LATENT IN THE DUST.

The potentialities of life that lie in a few ounces of soil, as illustrated by a writer in Answers, may prove a matter of interest to gardeners and other botanical experts. "One year, in the month of February" says the writer alluded to, "Mr. Darwin removed from three different parts of a small pond three tablespoonfuls of mud that weighed in all six and three quarters ounces. He placed it in a breakfast cup and kept it covered in his study for six months. At the end of that time he had removed from it five hundred and thirty-seven distinct plants.

"Another interesting experiment was carried out by a Scotch gentleman a few years ago. In a patch of soil taken from a hedge, about twenty-eight inches long by eleven inches wide and twenty-eight deep, he planted a dozen acorns, and took note of the number of plants that grew from seed naturally contained in the soil.

"At the end of a year he had taken out, as they came up, fifty-five plants; the following year, fifty-six more plants were removed, and in the two succeeding years, two hundred and eleven."

THE TRUE STRENGTH OF NATIONS

THERE is something primitive, crude and unprogressive in the spectacle of a civilized nation, composed of millions of clever people, trusting for its defense to forts and ships. With all the resources of business, of science, of thought, to depend on force today is a lazy, even cowardly, shirking of the higher possibilities of national strength. To be surrounded by "gunmen" holding the drop on all commercial rivals is a sorry conception of a nation's greatness. This attitude has been as destructive to England's own peace of mind as it has been menacing to the world's welfare. For our republic to follow an example like this would be an ignominious surrender of democracy to medievalism.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

HAS THE CHURCH COLLAPSED?

AN ARTICLE in the January number of the Century Magazine affirms that the Church has collapsed, that it is gradually losing its hold upon the community and sinking into helplessness in the face of the complex interests of modern life.

There has never been a time since the apostolic age when an observant critic could not make the same charge against the Christian society. The Church has always been a gradually changing organism and change to many minds implies decay. To see customs, practices and beliefs once held venerable and authoritative gradually losing their hold alike upon the Church and its environment is no doubt disquieting to those who regard such things as a part of the fixed order of Christianity.

And just such lamentations have been voiced through all the centuries since the Master was among his people in the flesh. And such changes will always be experienced. They are as necessary in the Church as in nature. The trees put away bark and leaves when they have served their purpose. Birds and beasts understand the laws of change and the discarding of outworn and useless belongings. These are not signs of decay, but of growth.

We believe the Church in the present generation is facing more difficult problems than ever before in its history. We believe that it is recognizing the futility of many of its former occupations and pronouncements. But that which is interpreted by some of its critics as disintegration is merely the attempt which good and wise Christians make to adjust themselves to a changing social order and to discard useless materials in the effort. We believe that the Church has some distance yet to go in this seemingly destructive process. But it is only to make way for a more efficient response to the world's need. The only discouraging sign of the times is the refusal of some parts of the Church to meet the demands of the changed conditions. Wherever the Church depends upon ancient forms and formulas for its influence over society, it must fail. It is only a genuine and timely contact with the living needs of the world today that can give it the influence it craves.

The best proof of the vitality of Christianity is its constant readjustment to the most outstanding needs of the time. The astonishing thing about the Church today is its new activities easily planned to touch the social order at the points most critical and needed. It is the mark of a living organism that it thus adjusts itself to new conditions and puts forth new organs when there is need. Never was this so true of the Church as today and in spite of all deficiencies which are numerous enough the Church was never rendering a more timely and effective service than at the present moment.

PRESIDENT WILSON ON THE BIBLE.

"HE alone can rule his own spirit who puts himself under the command of the Spirit of God revealed in his Son, Jesus Christ, our Saviour.

"No great nation can ever survive its own temptations and its own follies that does not indoctrinate its children in the Word of God. As schoolmaster and as governor I know that my feet rest with the feet of my fellow men upon this foundation, and upon this foundation only, for the righteousness of nations like the righeousness of men must take its source from these foundations of inspiration.

"I am sorry for the men who do not read the Bible every day. * * * It is one of the most singular books in the world, for every time you open it some old text that you have read a score of times suddenly beams with a new meaning.

"There are problems which will need purity of spirit and an integrity of purpose such as have never been called for before in the history of this country. I should be afraid to go forward if I did not believe that there lay at the foundation of all our schooling and of all our thought the incomparable and unimpeachable Word of God.

"The providence of God is the foundation of affairs, and only those can guide and only those can follow who take this providence of God from the sources where it is authentically interpreted."

PUT THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY INTO EVERY HOME IN YOUR CONGREGATION!

AS THE unselfish and essentially missionary character of the Disciples Publication Society gradually dawns upon the minds of pastors and churchmen the suggestion occurs to many of them that the churches and Sunday-schools of the brotherhood should add this Society to the list of their benevolences and take an annual offering for its support.

This suggestion was made on the floor of the open meeting of the Disciples Publication Society held in Atlanta during the convention last October. It has been repeated in perhaps a score of instances in recent conferences. A number of individual donors to this great work have said in remitting their gifts that they intended to secure an offering from their churches for Christian journalism as represented by this brotherhood publication house.

This is a perfectly reasonable sentiment. If a college deserves to be represented in the budget of church benevolences, the Disciples Publication Society deserves such representation, for it is an educational institution of farther-reaching and profounder influence, perhaps, than any single college among us. If missionary funds may be properly applied to the publication of the various monthly organs of the several societies the churches that give such funds will readily see the appropriateness of making an offering to religious journalism, which, as Isaac Errett declared, does more for the missonary cause than any other single agency.

All this is clear. Nevertheless, we have consistently advised such friends not to make a church benevolence of the Disciples Publication Society. Why? Because this Society through increasing patronage of Sunday-schools and churches will, in four or five years, be on a self-supporting basis, and instead of asking gifts as it must do now it will be itself an almoner to Christian education and missions. We do not wish to further complicate the work of our present societies by adding another society to the list of claimants for the offerings of the churches.

The problem of financing the Disciples Publication Society during these few years of its infancy must be worked out through personal gifts from individuals who perceive the significance of such an enterprise and who desire to devote their means to its accomplishment.

Yet the churches as churches may share substantially in this work—if not by gifts, then by putting The Christian Century into the homes of their congregations. A number of churches have already expressed their desire to do this very thing. Such wholesale subscription would not be made in the spirit merely of a compliment to the recipient, but based upon the principle of efficiency. The practical value of such a plan as set forth in the advertisement in this issue will not be disputed by any one.

We are pleased to call attention editorially to the advertisement and to reinforce the office manager's lucid and convincing statement of the case.

ANTI-CATHOLIC CRUSADES.

THERE is a large amount of attention given in these days to the anti-Catholic propaganda. In many of the Protestant churches there is a definite and persistent effort made to create prejudice against Romanism. Much of the Protestant press is dominated by strong anti-Catholic feeling, and there are certain journals and speakers whose chief, if not only theme is the creation of hostility to the Roman Catholic church by every conceivable method.

With the sentiment of disapproval of certain Roman Catholic doctrines and practices we have the fullest sympathy. In all the controversies in which Romanist and Protestant have divided we are definitely and enthusiastically on the Protestant side.

We believe that the centralization of the Roman Catholic church in its ecclesiastical and political policies is wrong, un-American, undemocratic and doomed to gradual collapse and failure. We believe that many things have been done in the name of the Roman Catholic church subversive of the best interests of Christianity, and contrary to sound morals and human progress. We believe that there are grave dangers in some of the practices of the Roman Catholic church, such as the celibacy of the clergy and the use of the confessional.

Nevertheless, we are convinced that the anti-Roman crusade carried on by a certain type of Protestantism, whether through the press or in public speech, is wrong and foolish. It causes strife needlessly. It magnifies errors of policy and administration into crimes against the public welfare. It points out the errors and sins of individuals as if they were the deliberate program of the entire institution. And worst of all its result is rather to strengthen than to weaken the Catholic sentiment in any community. No cause need ask for better aid than that which is furnished by vituperative denunciation on the part of its enemies.

The Roman Catholic church is fighting the battle of life and death within its own ranks. The spirit of modernism and liberty is gradually winning its way even in the Curia. Its ecclestiastical system is doomed to disintegrate in the face of the spirit of democracy, the spirit of liberty and the spirit of Christ. The old and outworn doctrines of the middle ages in spite of their time-honored place in Roman theologies are no longer convincing even to the priests of that church. And a pope who, like the late Pius X, was essentially an obscurantist and reactionary in his views, was already discredited in the more progressive circles of Catholicism long before his death.

In the meantime there is a vast work which Roman Catholicism is accomplishing and for which as yet Protestantism is not prepared. It is able to minister to wide areas of modern life totally unreached, and seemingly unreachable at present by Protestant ministration. Times are changing rapidly and this condition will not always prevail. But meanwhile, the Protestant who can see the throngs of people entering or leaving Roman Catholic churches on any Sunday and not feel a sense of satisfaction that their religious life is being fostered, even in ways which do not fully approve themselves to his interpretation of the gospel, is surely lacking in sensitiveness to the meaning of religion in modern life.

We disapprove heartily of much that Roman Catholicism reveals. We cannot share its intellectual attitude nor approve many of its practices. But we cannot doubt that in the final unity of the people of God that church or its later representative will have a part. If there is one thing which we dislike more than some of the teachings and usages of the Roman Catholic church it is the vitriolic, un-Christian and futile crusade which is made against it by good people who ought to be wiser judges of human nature and better interpreters of the truth.

A NATURAL COALESCENCE.

NEWS reported in Church papers and conveyed by correspondence makes clear the fact that the spirit of unity is working in many local fields. Particularly are Baptists and Disciples becoming aware of the fact that in places where one or the other, or both of these groups are weak wisdom and the Christian spirit both dictate the advisability of some proper combination of forces.

To be sure, there are many places where the Baptists and Disciples would find it more difficult to unite with each other than with almost any other Christian body. The very fact of their nearness in teaching and polity sometimes magnifies the distance between them. Ancient controversies that should have been forgotten long since are likely to be revived in the minds of older members at the mention of union.

But in many instances there is a genuine spirit of good will prevalent between the members of the two bodies and in such cases it is often true that the kingdom of God would be promoted in the community by union into one congregation. Such we hope will ultimately be the case everywhere, and every experiment in this direction is an aid to the final consummation.

The questions on which Baptists and Disciples differ have largely faded out of mind. There is no reason why any of these questions should longer divide the two bodies. In the admission of members to the churches the Disciples may well imitate the Baptists in the care exercised by the officers of the church lest any candidate come over hastily to baptism or enter the Church from other than the proper motives. And the Baptists might well imitate the Disciples in the practice of extending the invitation more frequently so that any worshiper might know that the call of the gospel is presented to him whenever he worships with such a congregation.

In the practice of baptism there is no difference between Baptists and Disciples. In the administration of the Lord's Supper there is coming to be no difference between them as to the right of all children of God to participate. Some Baptist churches, especially in the south, still practice close communion, but the tendency among the Baptists generally is away from this custom. In the frequency of the administration there is usually a difference. The Disciples have always enjoyed the practice of weekly communion, though many of their churches, to be sure, meeting less frequently, observe the ordinance monthly or even less often than that. The Baptists usually observe the first Sunday in the month as communion Sunday, but many Baptist churches in this country and most of those abroad spread the table every Lord's day. There should be no difficulty therefore in reaching an agreement on this point.

In all other matters wisdom and the spirit of fairness will dictate the best means of reaching common ground. The missionary offerings can be divided between the boards of the two bodies, either equally or in some other equitable way. And in the choice of officers a just consideration of former relationships will preserve entire good will until within the united congregation there ceases to be any consciousness of any difference.

Such a united church ought not to consider itself as standing alone but rather as doubly knit up with the great Christian bodies to which it is joined in sentiment and loyalty. In all things pertaining to the organized work of the Baptists it will be a Baptist church. In all that relates to the broader interests of the Disciples it will be a church of the Disciples. But it will be first and foremost a church of Jesus Christ attempting to do his work in the community and to interpret the spirit of unity along with the other fundamentals of the Christian faith.

"ALIEN IMMERSION" AND SOUTHERN BAPTISTS.

RE-IMMERSION of candidates whose baptism, though originally performed by immersion, was not performed by a Baptist minister, obtains much more widely among southern Baptist churches than most people of the North imagine. A Baptist editor has been collecting data on the subject. He finds that "alien immersion" is acceptable in a very small percentage of the churches. According to states the churches that will accept it are as follows:

Alabama, a negligible number; none in Arkansas; Florida, only two churches; Georgia, not half a dozen; Kentucky, probably twenty-five; Louisiana, possibly one; Maryland, all; Mississippi, none without protest; Missouri, one-fourth of the churches; New Mexico, none; North Carolina, about 25 per cent; Oklahoma, 1 per cent; S. Carolina, probably 25 per cent; Tennessee, 1 or 2 per cent; Texas, practically unanimous against alien immersion; Virginia, 25 per cent.

A Disciple who applied for admittance to one of those Baptist churches could not get in unless he submitted to another immersion by a Baptist clergyman. And these Southern Baptist Christians really believe that they are honoring Jesus Christ in their practice!

FOR CHURCH EFFICIENCY!

Put The Christian Century Into Every Home in Your Congregation!

THINK what uplift would come to your entire church from it! Think of your entire congregation reading every week that dynamic message of John R. Ewers on the Sunday school lesson!—that delightful and helpful interpretation of Woman's activity by Ida Withers Harrison!—that illuminating study of the prayer-meeting topic by Silas Jones!

Think what enlargement of interest and vision would come to your entire church if your people were reading from week to week the graphic and comprehensive accounts of what is going on among the Disciples and what is going on in the larger Christian world! You have often deplored the provincialism, the parochialism, of your church membership. The Christian Century in every home is the sure cure for it!

Think of the great articles on religious themes: missions, social service, the spiritual life, that your members would read—written by the most thoughtful Christian leaders and the ablest writers! Think of the editorial interpretations of current Christian events and movements being read by the membership of your church! For example, imagine what whetting of mind and searching of soul there would be among your church members right now if they—all of them—had had access to that series of "opening editorials" on the Spiritual Life! Again and again our pastor-readers and lay-readers have written the office in the past few weeks expressing their profound desire that all the members of their congregations might have had the "Century" in their homes if for no other reason than that they might have had the inspiration and benefit of that series!

The Christian Century in every home will treble the intelligence of your congregation with respect to the things you preach about, Brother Pastor! And it will treble their responsiveness and service.

It will cost your church treasury very little to put it in: You will be surprised how little! It will prove to be the most productive investment the church ever made.

It will cost you, Mr. Generous Layman, very little to pay the total cost of The Christian Century for one year as your gift to every member of your congregation. And there is not another gift you ever made from which you derive greater satisfaction than you will derive from this.

Write to the publishers telling approximately how many homes there are in your church and we will amaze you with the liberality of our proposition.

THE "CENTURY" IS ALIVE!

This so-called "wholesale plan" of subscriptions has been tried somewhat extensively among the Disciples by some other papers, and has not been a noteworthy success. It has therefore been practically discontinued. The publishers of The Christian Century have ample reason to be convinced that this failure is not the fault of the plan. They believe that into whatever congregation The Christian Century goes it will signally demonstrate its indispensableness to the life of that congregation. The venerable Dr. B. B. Tyler, of Denver, described the "Century" to a caller thus: "It's alive, man, it's alive!" That is saying a good deal for a religious paper! But every reader knows that it says the truth about The Christian Century, and your membership will soon find it out if you send the "Century" to them.

What Other Church Leaders Say About The Christian Century.

REV. FRANK WALLER ALLEN, Springfield, Ill.: "Deserves the loyal support of all Disciples."

PRESIDENT R. H. CROSSFIELD, Transylvania University: "Always stimulates thought."

REV. B. A. ABBOTT, St. Louis, Mo.: "Its influence on us has always been wholesome."

REV. CLAUDE E. HILL, Valparaiso, Ind.: "One of the best edited religious papers in the country."

JUDGE FREDERICK A. HENRY, Cleveland: "Vigorous, without being quarrelsome or censorious."

REV. PETER AINSLIE, Baltimore: "One of the most readable papers in America."

REV. EDGAR D. JONES, Bloomington, Ill.: "A new day has dawned for The Christian Century. The night of misunderstandings and misrepresentations has passed away."

DR. F. E. LUMLEY, College of Missions, Indianapolis: "The Christian Century has a great future."

MRS. PERSIS L. CHRISTIAN, Eureka Springs, Ark.: "The Century is to thousands a bright and shining light. I think I would skimp the larder before I would do without it."

REV. E. L. POWELL, Louisville: "The Christian Century works under a supreme sense of loyalty to Christ."

REV. ROGER T. NOOE, Frankfort, Ky.: "The Christian Century is an inspiring visitor to my study. It comes with morning freshness."

REV. V. W. BLAIR, Eureka, Ill.: "I believe in The Christian Century because it has proved its honesty, love of truth, constructiveness, spirituality and vital touch with today's problems."

HON. HARRIS R. COOLEY, Cleveland, O.: "Future years will demonstrate the great service The Christian Century has rendered to our movement."

REV. A. B. PHILPUTT, Indianapolis: "Success to you. 'The Open Mind' is the slogan for our times."

REV. T. E. WINTER, Philadelphia: "The Christian Century is of very great constructive value to the Disciples' movement."

REV. H. P. ATKINS, Birmingham, Ala.: "The character of its journalism is splendid."

REV. GEORGE W. KNEPPER, Ann Arbor, Mich.: "The Christian Century seems to be the only paper which recognizes the fact that as a communion we are not the end, but only a means."

PROF. CHARLES T. PAUL, College of Missions, Indianapolis: "The pages of The Christian Century are full of pure gold."

REV. CAREY E. MORGAN, Nashville, Tenn.: "I look forward eagerly to the coming of The Christian Century."

REV. W. H. BAGBY, Taylor, Texas: "A journal that holds to the higher levels."

REV. E. B. BARNES: "It has a field as long as it maintains its open platform where good men with worthy messages may be heard."

PROF. J. G. McGAVRAN, College of Missions, Indianapolis: "The Century is making us think."

REV. C. M. SMAIL, Beaver Falls, Pa.: "The more I read it, the greater becomes my delight in it."

MR. SAMUEL HARDEN CHURCH, Pittsburgh, Pa.: "The Christian Century puts life ahead of the foolish intellectualities which men have heretofore called religion."

REV. ROBERT L. FINCH, Maryville, Mo.: "I have been getting the "Century" since the Atlanta convention, and wonder now why I impoverished myself by not receiving it all along. The tone of the paper is superb and your editorials especially are most helpfully instructive and constructive."

Can Your Church Afford to be Without The Christian Century?

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Great Endeavor Convention Coming.

The Fifth World's and Twenty-seventh International Christian Endeavor convention will be held in Chicago July 7 to 12. The promotion committee is very optimistic in its advance pronouncements and insists that sixteen thousand delegates will be present. Among the celebrated speakers who will be present are President Woodrow Wilson, Secretary of State William Jennings Bryan, Dr. F. B. Meyer, J. A. MacDonald and Jane Addams. Rev. "Billy" Sunday will conduct noon meetings throughout the convention. A great chorus of a thousand voices will lead the singing of the convention.

Gen. Joffre a Protestant.

The religious lines are all confused in the present war in Europe. Catholic fights against Catholic, Protestant against Protestant, and even some of the few Greek Orthodox in Austria are fighting against their brethren of Russia. It would be assumed that the French are Catholic, but it is stated that Gen. Joffre, the great French leader, is a Protestant.

"Pastor" Russell Repudiated.

For several days the Chicago Tribune printed the sermons of "Pastor" Russell as paid advertisements in its pages. On the protest of the Chicago Church Federation Council, these paid advertisements were refused. The newspaper began looking up the record of Pastor Russell and the result is a series of articles exposing his career, much on the order of those formerly published by the Brooklyn Eagle. The story of the millennial dawn leader's divorce is told. His operations in "miracle" wheat are laid bare. The story is one that has attracted wide attention in Chicago.

"Father Endeavor" Clark Visits Chicago.

The founder of the Christian Endeavor movement, Rev. Francis E. Clark, visited Chicago for a great meeting of the Chicago Union on Feb. 9. He spoke in Moody church to delegates from the Endeavor societies all over the city. Other speakers on the program were Dr. Ozora S. Davis and Rev. C. G. Kindred. The music for the evening was furnished by the United Vested Choirs of New First Congregational church.

British Envoy to the Pope.

British traditions have been recently violated by the appointment of a "special" envoy to the pope, the first to be sent in four hundred years. Were it not for the war, Protestant England would be making more violent objections than it is. At the meeting of the London Council of Protestant Churches, recently held, the following protest was adopted and ordered presented to the government and the opposition leaders as well: "That this council strongly condemn the action of the government in advising his majesty the king to appoint and dispatch a special envoy to Pope Benedict XV. The secrecy with which this proceeding was planned and the omission of the government to consult Parliament with reference thereto, the council specially deplore. The council further protest against the nation being made to pay the expenses of the mission. They condemn and reject the specious and unsatisfactory excuses set forth in the 'White Paper,' as reasons for the dispatch of the envoy, and they hereby declare their intention publicly to oppose to the utmost of their power, in such manner as time and circumstances may require, the continuance of this mission. The council call upon the government forthwith to bring to an end the mission to the pope, which is in defiance of our religious and national faith and policy, is a betrayal of our national convictions, is humiliating subservience to the foe of civil and religious freedom, and is a step that is calculated to weaken the ties which cement us to our allies in the present war and to neutral nations."

Rebukes a Congressman.

Rev. Charles Bayard Mitchell recently received several packages of seed from Washington and a letter from Representative Mann full of polite wishes about the flowers the seed would produce. The minister acknowledged the receipt of the flower seed in a note in which the following words occur: "We do not want your flowers. Give us your influence for driving out the liquor traffic, which allows no flowers to grow where its curse blights." This rebuke was administered because of Mr. Mann's vote on prohibition.

Congregationalist Gain in Great Britain.

The Congregationalists of Great Britain have issued their new year book and the figures indicate a gain for the past year. In the British Isles there are 5,004 churches, branch churches, and mission stations, with seating accommodation for 1,822,658 persons. The church members number 492,898, with 71,935 teachers and 664,432 scholars in the Sunday-schools. Compared with last year, this shows a decrease of 19 churches and mission stations and 5,425 sittings. It is stated that there is an increase of 1,635 church members, but a somewhat serious decrease of 12,877 Sunday-school scholars. This decrease in the Sunday-school scholars has been analyzed, and shows the decrease of 9,505 in England, 389 in Wales, 2,655 in Scotland, and 328 in Ireland. There are 3,125 accredited ministers, and of these 204 are temporarily without pastoral charge, 96 are engaged on tutorial or other professional work, 38 are occupied in secretarial work, and 407, by reason of age or ill-health, have retired from pastoral duty. In addition there are 240 evangelists and lay pastors, and 5,002 lay preachers. During the past year 8 new churches have been formed, 11 new chapels and halls have been opened, and 7 new schools built. In the ministerial section 54 new settlements took place, and 51 ordinations were reported. There were 18 ministers who left for other denominations, and 3 ministers entered from other communions into the Congregational ministry.

English Non-Conformists Organized.

The various denominations in England are now organized into the National Free Church Council. This enables them to act in concert in all matters that involve their common good. Rev. F. L. Wiseman is the president this year. Since the middle of September Mr. Wiseman has visited twenty-one districts, ranging from Northumberland and Durham to Devon and Cornwall. He resumes his campaign on January 18, when he visits Wolverhampton for meetings of the West Midland Federation, proceeding the next day to Hanley for North Staffs Federation. Mr. Wiseman then gives two or three days in each week until the end of February On each of his visits the president has been accompanied by Dr. Meyer and a lady speaker from the women's auxiliary.

Dr. Campbell Morgan Still Ill.

Sir William Robertson Nicoll gave the address to the Westminster Chapel Literary and Social Guild on a recent date, taking the place of Dr. Campbell Morgan. There was a large audience, over which Sir Robert Laidlaw presided. Dr. Morgan, who is still at Mundesley, is making excellent progress towards recovery.

Prayers Continue at City Temple.

Though interrupted by the holiday season, the noon prayer-meetings for the war victims at the City Temple in London have been resumed. Dr. Clifford recently spoke at this noon meeting. Towards the close of his helpful address, Dr. Clifford said: "Do not let us imagine that we are the first people that have been in the dark. Trustful souls have been in gloom before, they have been overwhelmed before with their anxieties and apprehensions, they have had their difficulties and they have gone to God in prayer, and have found not only strength but illumination, not only fresh force, but fresh methods of interpreting life." The chairmen of the meetings for the month of January were as follows: The Rev. R. J. Campbell, M.A., Dr. F. B. Meyer, B.A., Rt. Rev. Bishop E. R. Hasse, D.D., the Rev. J. Clifford, D.D., the Rev. J. Scott Lidgett, M.A., D.D., the Rev. R. J. Campbell, M.A., the Rev. F. L. Wiseman, B.A. These are also set down as the speakers, except on January 20, when Rev. F. C. Spurr, and on January 22, when Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, M.A., were expected to give the address.

Christian Literature for Moslem Children.

Bishop J. C. Hartzell, chairman of the World's Sunday-School Association's committee on Moslem work, has reported from North Africa that the work of providing Christian literature for Moslem children is making good progress. The following are ready for publication, and at Bishop Hartzell's suggestion will be produced by the World's Sunday-school Association without delay: An Arabic hymn book, with fifty or sixty good hymns selected for their value in developing Christian life and character; a simple catechism, already being taught from manuscript; notes on the Lord's prayer, the Ten Commandments and the Apostles' Creed; some bi-lingual tracts in French and Arabic, for use in the French colonies; a catechism for immediate use among the Kabyles; and four tracts containing stories which have proved to be very effective among the children. Concerning these tracts Bishop Hartzell says: "They are sure to be learned by heart, and will be recited far beyond the points of regular missionary visitation. It is in the line of the old Arab method of education. Our Sunday-school scholars and those in the week-day classes have learned by heart the story of the creation and the promised redemption, and chant it after the manner of the traveling Arab minstrels."

Roman Catholic Rules for Lent.

Archbishop Quigley, of Chicago, has issued the rules which faithful Roman Catholics are expected to observe during the lenten season, which began Feb. 17 and continues until Easter Sunday, April 4. Some of these rules are as follows:

"The sick, the very poor, and in general all who, because of old age, weakly constitutions, or hard labor, cannot fast without detriment to their health, are exempted from fasting.

"Those obliged to fast are restricted to one full meal in the day, which should not ordinarily be taken before noon, and to a collation not exceeding the fourth part of an ordinary meal in the evening, though the use of some warm drink, such as tea, coffee, or chocolate, with a small piece of bread in the morning, is authorized.

"Abstinence from flesh meat implied in this precept of fasting is, in this diocese, dispensed with on Sundays without restriction, and at the principal meal on all other days, except Wednesdays and Fridays and the Saturdays in Ember week and holy week.

"Workingmen and their families are allowed to use flesh meat on all fast days, except Fridays, Ash Wednesday, Wednesday and Saturday of holy week. They are also urged to abstain from intoxicating liquors."

Preacher Sued for Libel.

U. G. Robinson, a former minister, who in recent years has been publishing in St. Louis a paper that has devoted itself to fighting the Anti-Saloon League, and the source of whose revenues has been a subject of much interesting speculation, has been sued for libel by W. E. Johnson, editor of "The Republic," and though the case was tried in St. Louis, the jury has awarded a verdict in favor of the prosecution and has assessed damages against Mr. Robinson of $1,500. This disposes of the challenge long issued by Mr. Robinson, asking why the Anti-Saloon League did not sue him for libel.

Christian Science in Senate.

It is the privilege of any United States senator to make a speech on anything in the universe and use the government frank to disseminate the speech to any part of the United States. Recently Senator Works of California spoke in the Senate on Christian Science. It is a very unusual procedure to introduce sectarian matters on the floor of the national assembly in a government which is founded on the principle of separation of church and state. It remains to be seen whether the Senator will use his franking privilege to send the sectarian teaching broadcast.

Denominational Arbitration Fails.

The Methodist circles have been much agitated about a controversy over jurisdiction which has arisen between the northern and southern bodies in the city of Atlanta, Ga. The northern Methodists have started to establish a church in the parish of a southern congregation. The committee on arbitration called the federal council has declined to assume jurisdiction in the matter and give as their reason the fact that their council "had been called into being for the ends of peace and good will and not for the increase of discord." The incident is regretted by many large-minded people in each communion on account of its tendency to delay the union of the two bodies.

Dr. Stone Ill.

Dr. John Timothy Stone, pastor of Fourth Presbyterian church of Chicago, has been ill and was taken to Henrotin hospital recently for an operation. He is reported as convalescing and he will be back in his pulpit again very soon.

Reassures the Japanese.

Dr. Shailer Mathews is now in Japan, in company with Rev. Sydney Gulick, representing the interests of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. They have recently held a conference with prominent Japanese, among these being Count Okuma, the Premier. The American delegation has expressed to the Japanese the desire of American Christians for peace with Japan. They also brought assurances from Governor Johnson of California that he is adverse to any further legislation against Japanese in his state. The results of the meetings in Japan are regarded by American church leaders as being distinctly favorable to peaceful relations with the Japanese.

Honor Aged Baptist Leader.

A reception will be given to Dr. Adoniram Judson Rowland in Philadelphia this month in honor of his seventy-fifth birthday. Dr. Rowland has been for twenty years secretary of the Baptist Publication Society. Under his leadership this society has come to great efficiency.

President for Rochester Seminary.

Dr. Augustus H. Strong resigned the presidency of Rochester Theological Seminary in 1912 and since then three committees have been at work trying to secure a president for this leading Baptist institution. A straw vote of the trustees revealed a great deal of sentiment in favor of Rev. C. A. Barbour, D.D., who is connected with the religious work department of the International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association. Dr. Barbour once served as supply teacher of homiletics in this institution and two of his former pupils are now teachers there. He is a well-known Baptist and his call insures a loyal support from the numerous alumni of the institution.

Dr. Broughton Resigns.

Rev. Leonard G. Broughton, D.D., of Christ church, London, continues in a very precarious state of health and he has handed his resignation in to his church. He has not announced his intentions with regard to future work when he regains his health.

Patent Medicines and Methodism

A libel suit is pending in which John A. Patten, one of the most prominent laymen of the Methodist church and the leading stockholder in the company that manufacture and sell a patent medicine called Wine of Cardui, is suing the American Medical Association for an article which appeared in their official journal. The article characterized Wine of Cardui as non-medicine and drawing its popularity from its intoxicating affects. Meanwhile great agitation is abroad among the Methodist churches as to what action the church should take with reference to a man whose money has been made in selling as a medicine a concoction whose label states that it is twenty per cent alcohol. The official journals of the church last week published a statement signed by seventy preachers and laymen of Illinois asking that the church consider the question as to whether, independent of the result of the libel suit, the church can approve the sale of a remedy requiring so large a percentage of alcohol. In the list of names are some of the most eminent clergymen of Illinois and most of the district superintendents. This statement recites that the prescribed doses of Wine of Cardui introduce into the system the same amount of alcohol daily as though the woman using the medicine drank two-thirds of a bottle of beer, or nearly an ounce of whisky. Mr. Patten is chairman of the book committee of the Methodist Book Concern that employs all the editors of the official Methodist papers. These papers out of courtesy to Mr. Patten have not discussed the case until early in February when the signed statement of the seventy referred to was put in all the papers the same week. The character of Mr. Patten in his private relations is not in question, as he is highly esteemed for many good works. The question among Methodists arises from a seeming inconsistency between private character and business ethics. The whole case is an interesting instance of the way in which the modern social conscience is changing things in every communion.

Protestant Churches Grow

The religious bodies of the United States have no cause to be discouraged over the results of the year 1914, according to the statement sent out by the federal council of the Churches of Christ in America. The new communicants or members added made good all the losses by death, expulsion, or withdrawal, and left a surplus of nearly three-quarters of a million, or, to be exact, 763,078. This is an average increase of 2 per cent for all bodies, great and small, Christian and non-Christian. The statistical tables were prepared by Dr. H. K. Carroll of Washington, D. C. The grand total of church members in the United States is now 38,708,149. All the larger denominations share in the increase. Baptists gained 122,125, Eastern Orthodox churches 36,500, the Roman Catholic church 136,850, the Lutherans 56,248, the German Evangelical synod, representing the State church of Prussia, 29,315; the Methodists 231,460, the Presbyterians 56,019, and the Protestant Episcopal church 28,641. The Episcopal church crossed the million line, having gained 86,468 since 1910, and over 300,000 since 1900. The Roman Catholic church gained nearly a million and a quarter since 1910 and more than five and a half millions since 1900. The Methodist Episcopal church, the second largest denomination, gained 187,487 in 1914 and nearly 700,000 since 1900. The thirty churches constituting the federal council of the Churches of Christ in America report, as will be seen, nearly 17,500,000 members, somewhat less than half of the aggregate for all denominations, with 103,000 ministers and nearly 139,000 churches. These bodies have a net increase of over 500,000 members, or more than two-thirds of the entire increase of all bodies.

Here and There

Dr. Horne's Tribute to Athanasius.

"Theology today is for the most part a product of the academic life," says Silvester Horne in his "Romance of Preaching." "In the days of Athanasius it was hammered out in the wilderness and the cell. Men forged their beliefs, like thunderbolts, at the center of the storm. The faiths that clothed their souls were tested in the furnace heated sevenfold. You can still tell the difference between the article of a creed cunningly worded to evade a difficulty, conciliate a doubter or confound an enemy, and an affirmation which is the cry of a great soul for some truth which is a fixed star in its firmament and without which it will blunder along its way. It is this passionate sincerity that lends dignity to controversy. As we read the story, all Athanasius' extravagances and personalities drop away from him, and we only see the prophet who cared so supremely for the glory of his God and the honor of his Savior, that he was prepared to stand alone against the world, until the truth he saw was recognized and acknowledged by all. . . . It belongs to the glory of Athanasius that, even living when he did, he had no belief in the coercion of conscience by force. He was, rather, like the dear old priest in Praed's poem, who "Held, in spite of all his learning,

That if a man's belief is bad
It will not be improved by burning."

This zealot for truth, and even for dogma, believed in fighting his battle out with the weapon of argument, reason and persuasion, and winning the only victory that is honorable to a Christian combatant."

Magnify The Type!

Have we ever considered the effect of miserably printed books upon the eyes? In the days of our youth all print looks alike, and the difference becomes apparent only when we begin to go blind. When sight was undimmed all print was legible; when sight becomes dim all print is execrable, except the largest and the best. Occasionally, we see a minister or layman reading a New Testament, a vest-pocket edition, printed in microscopic type. The day will come when all such follies will demand a terrible reckoning.

The eyes of school children suffer beyond all computation because of badly printed newspapers and books. Soon spectacles will be needed to magnify the type. Why not magnify it in the beginning and do away with much of the spectacle business?

Some day men of discrimination will buy only those books for themselves and their children that will not be injurious to the sight. When that time comes publishers will yield to the demand for large type or legible type at least, and though the books will cost more, the satisfaction to the reader in saving eyesight will be worth more than money can buy. For what is the cost of a good book compared with the calamity of semi-blindness which we all know is hastened by the plague of bad printing.

Questions About Prayers.

Should prayers at the communion table be general or particular, for many things or for one thing? Likewise, when one is asked to pronounce the benediction, does that give him the liberty to make a long or formal prayer, or to do anything except what he is called upon to do? At the conclusion of a sermon it is well to dismiss a congregation as quickly and as quietly as possible. Such is my observation.

A Thesaurus for the Theological Controversialist.

The late Dr. Charles Silvester Horne, in his refreshing volume, "The Romance of Preaching," gives us this instructive observation: "Dean Stanley made a careful but not exhaustive collection of his (Athanasius') favorite epithets for his theological opponents—"devils, anti-Christs, maniacs, Jews, polytheists, atheists, dogs, wolves, lions, hares, chameleons, hydras, eels, cuttlefish, gnats, beetles, leeches." Dr. Horne adds, "His vocabulary, it is plain, might have won for him distinction in a political career." From the subterranean character of this language, Athanasius must have been the "Billy" Sunday of his time. To the credit of this illustrious church father, be it said that the precepts of the New Testament were not very widely diffused in day.

If his theological opponents were all these things after their conversion, what must they have been before?

There is no doubt that Athanasius used these terms in a brotherly spirit, having always in mind the proprieties which must ever be observed between those of the same faith. It's a glorious thing to be roasted on a spit, provided the operation is begun, continued, and ended with prayer, and in a spirit of gentleness and forbearance.

We are profoundly thankful that the illustrious Dean did not make an exhaustive collection of Athanasius' choice epithets. Probably the Dean discovered that if he had gone much further he would have had an encyclopaedia on his hands. By pulling an ecclesiastical wire or two he managed to have the game called in the fifth on account of darkness.

A Training School for Janitors.

Why has no training school for church janitors ever been founded? Let all mirth be restrained for a moment or two while we consider the need of such a school. In the first place, a janitor should be a man of tact, one who knows how to open and close a door on occasions without turning a service topsy-turvy. He should know when to raise or lower a window without being told. He should be a master in the fine art of ventilation at all times. Why in the estimation of the average janitor must the auditorium be viewed as a jug, the sworn duty of the janitor being to keep the cork hammered in so that no foul air can get out and no fresh air can get in? The janitor could be made a very useful man in his day and generation. As matters now stand, we may well pray to be delivered from men of good intentions who as janitors are doing the best they can under the circumstances.

The best janitor I ever knew was not really a janitor at all. He had been a trained mechanic for many years, and gave his services at a small cost to the church as caretaker. He knew nothing about the work, yet he did it as if he knew everything. He could sweep and dust without leaving the impression that the dust from the highway had been carefully gathered up and strewn on the seats where it would do the most good—to the eye. The fact that he was an unprofessional janitor brought him near to my heart. The dear, good man is dead and in heaven, and, unfortunately, left no successor in that holy apostleship devoted to the wondrous work of doing things right and keeping things clean. Such an apostolate lives, but scattered and solitary, far from the church with which most of us have to do.

The Problem of Perpetual Discussion.

A writer in a certain Disciple journal denies that such churches as go by the name Methodist, Presbyterian, etc., are churches of Christ, though he cheerfully admits there may be Christians in them. But what is the use of continuing such a discussion? If there are Christians in churches which are not churches of Christ, they are saved, nothwithstanding the heretical character of the church. And may it not be true that in the church of Christ of which our brother is a member there may be persons who are not Christians? So while there are Christians in spurious churches, there are also spurious Christians in genuine churches.

Now if the genuine Christians will save the spurious churches, and the genuine churches will save the spurious Christians, "we will come rejoicing bringing in the sheaves." Emerson would revel in such an illustration of his law of compensation as this!

The First Sunday in March.

Everybody in our churches knows what this day means as surely as the children know the meaning of Christmas. It is the day on which we pay tribute to Him who is king of kings and lord of lords. It is the day on which we are reminded of our membership in the glorious army of all times, and in all lands. It strengthens our belief in human brotherhood, in the purpose of God to bring the world to himself, in the possibility of the "greater works" which the Christian may undertake for the conversion of his fellow-men; and the day gives to us renewed inspiration as we recount the wonders that God hath wrought. This year should witness a great advance all along the line, in the investment of life and in the increase of our gifts. Here is the common ground, the mountain-top, where every Disciple can have fellowship with every other Disciple and with Christ in the redemption of the world.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that he may send forth laborers into his harvest.

E. B. Barnes.

It is inevitable that choices must be made between the supreme and the secondary, between the lofty and the low, between self-pleasing and God-pleasing. And these choices are of tremendous importance, for their result is to start or to strengthen springs of moral issue, both in our own lives and in the lives of others. We need, therefore, to be aware of the ever-present necessity of watchfulness, if we would avoid that which has brought shipwreck to many a nobly begun life.—J. Stuart Holden.

Said Dr. John Watson (Ian MacLaren) after he had retired from the pastorate of the Sefton Park church, Liverpool: "If I were beginning instead of closing my career I would be careful about three things in particular: I should preach shorter sermons, I should be more attentive to my English, and I should preach more comfortingly."

SAUL ANOINTED KING.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR MARCH 7.

1 Sam. 9:17-10:1 Memory Verse, 10:1.

Golden Text: Fear God. Honor the King. 1 Pet. 2:17.

American Standard Bible.

9. (17) And when Samuel saw Saul, Jehovah said unto him, Behold, the man of whom I spake to thee! this same shall have authority over my people. (18) Then Saul drew near to Samuel in the gate, and said, Tell me, I pray thee, where the seer's house is. (19) And Samuel answered Saul, and said, I am the seer; go up before me unto the high place, for ye shall eat with me today; and in the morning I will let thee go, and will tell thee all that is in thy heart. (20) And as for thine asses that were lost three days ago, set not thy mind on them; for they are found. And for whom is all that is desirable in Israel? Is is not for thee, and for all thy father's house? (21) And Saul answered and said, Am not I a Benjamite, of the smallest of the tribes of Israel? and my family the least of all the families of the tribe of Benjamin? wherefore then speakest thou to me after this manner?

(22) And Samuel took Saul and his servant, and brought them into the guest-chamber, and made them sit in the chiefest place among them that were bidden, who were about thirty persons. (23) And Samuel said unto the cook, Bring the portion which I gave thee, of which I said unto thee, Set it by thee. (24) And the cook took up the thigh, and that which was upon it, and set it before Saul. And Samuel said, Behold, that which hath been reserved! set it before thee and eat; because unto the appointed time hath it been kept for thee, for I said, I have invited the people. So Saul did eat with Samuel that day.

(25) And when they were come down from the high place into the city, he communed with Saul upon the housetop. (2) And they arose early: and it came to pass about the spring of the day, that Samuel called to Saul on the housetop, saying, Up, that I may send thee away. And Saul arose, and they went out both of them, he and Samuel, abroad. (27) As they were going down at the end of the city, Samuel said to Saul, Bid the servant pass on before us (and he passed on), But stand thou still first, that I may cause thee to hear the word of God.

(10) 1 Then Samuel took the vial of oil, and poured it upon his head, and kissed him, and said, Is it not that Jehovah hath anointed thee to be prince over his inheritance?

Verse by Verse.

BY ASA MCDANIEL.

17. When Samuel saw Saul. Read 1. Samuel 8:1-10:27. Note the description of Saul in chapter 9:1, 2.—Jehovah said unto him. Heb. answered him RVm. The question about the future leader of Israel was answered in the mind of Samuel.—Shall have authority. Literally, shall restrain my people.

18. In the gate. The public meeting place of the people.—Seer's home. The word translated seer is the oldest designation for prophet. The word marked the method of receiving the divine communication in its early usage.

19. Go up before me. Samuel gives the place of honor to Saul. Note the graeious way Samuel gives place to his suecessor.—All that is in thy heart. Indicates that Saul had more and greater questions to ask, than those about the asses. The one about the animals was answered at once, and the others waited for the coming of the new day.

20. Set not thy mind on them. Be not anxious about the lost asses for they have been found.—For whom is all that is desirable in Israel? The exaet meaning is not entirely clear; but the question and its answer by Samuel, and Saul's reply in the next verse, would indicate that Saul's interest in the offiee now in sight had been stimulated by the statement.

21. Am not I a Benjamite, of the smallest of the tribes, and my family the least of all the families of the tribe of Benjamin? Saul's answer shows becoming modesty. The statement, however, must not be taken too literally, for we have seen in v. 1. that Saul's father was a man of standing in the eommunity. Humility is the root of all true values in life.

22. The guest chamber. The room in which they are brought is probably a hall built especially for worship in their sacrificial feasts.—Made them sit in the chiefest place. The simplicity of their customs is indicated by the fact that Saul and his servant reeeived equal treatment at the feast.

23. Bring the portion which I gave thee. The visit of Saul had been anticipated by Samuel, as is shown by his command to the cook.

25. The thigh. Or shoulder. RVm. The exact translation is very uncertain; but it is clear that the choiee piece is meant. The rest of the verse is obscure and apparently corrupt. (Smith.)

25. He communed with Saul upon the housetop. They talked over their future plans on the flat roof of the house, a comfortable and eommon place for rest and eonversation in Palestine.

26. The spring of the day. About dawn. Samuel accompanied his guest to the city limits. v. 27.

27. Bid the servant pass on. Samuel desired to be alone with Saul.—That I may cause thee to hear the word of God. The time had come for Samuel to make known to Saul the fact of his divine appointment as king.

10:1. Vial of oil. Heb. flask of oil. This was the ancient ceremony of investure with the royal offiee. (Judges 9:8).—Poured it upon his head. A description of the act of anointing.—Kissed him.. The evidence of personal affection.—That Jehovah hath anointed thee. Samuel was but carrying out the divine will and the desire of the people to have a king.

A Good Beginning to a Bad Life

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

Saul was a failure. But not yet. It is difficult not to read back into these earlier narratives the facts which will later color our estimate of him. As we see him in today's lesson he is a modest, capable young man. Later he will become spoiled through power. Power is the element, like fire, which tries the souls of men. To abuse physical power makes one a bully and a beast; to abuse money-power, makes one a scornful aristocrat; to abuse mental power makes one a cold and unsympathetic recluse, to abuse social prestige creates class hatreds. There may be even a kind of so-called spiritual power which only ministers to hypocrisy. Saul is modest and fine in this story of today.

A BENJAMITE.

There was a note of deep pride in the declaration of his tribe. For he came from a brave, warlike clan whose battle-glory was widely recognized. Only a little tribe, yes, but a tribe of heroes. Greece was a little country, Palestine was only a little country. The famous Lion of Lucerne commemorates the bravery of the Swiss guards. Switzerland is only a little country. Small colleges send out an unusual proportion of great men and women. Little towns and country places must be reckoned with. The king—Israel's first king, head and shoulders over his fellows, brave, modest and clean—was a Benjamite.

WHY WAS HE CHOSEN?

That is the question that perplexes many young men. They cannot understand why some young men are advanced and others held back. Every employer is a Samuel on the lookout for capable, dependable men. "Nothing is so rare as an honest and capable man," said a big employer to me recently. "There are plenty of selfish irresponsibles who have plenty of ambition and surprisingly little quality." Samuel saw possibility in Saul.

COMMUNION.

Can you command your mind to paint that oriental picture? Samuel the old man, handsome of feature, with a delicate spiritual power written on his face; Saul, the large, open-countenanced, free proudly-bashful youth. The housetop, the hills, the valley, the flowing streams, the flocks and herds, the clouds swept by the breezes. Saul never forgot that luminous hour! Do you remember that talk with the college president? Do you recall that memorable hour when some old friend of your family told you about the fine things for which your people were noted? Blessed is the man who makes you believe in yourself. In that house-top communion no doubt Samuel reminded Saul of the noble traits of the Benjamites, of the good points in his father's house, and of the potential energies of his own young life.

CROWNED.

Early in the morning the old judge and the inspired youth walk side by side. Suddenly the old man stops and taking a vial of oil he declares God's will that Saul shall become the first king of Israel and anoints him there and then.

THE PITY OF IT.

So far the story reads like a romance. But we know the ending for we have already the story to its mad and fatal end. With Saul it was the breakdown in middle life. The most terrible strain upon the bridge of life is to be found in the middle span. The fires and storms of youth are as nothing compared with the frightful strains of the dangerous age, 45 to 55. The boat leaves the harbor in a comparatively smooth sea, but in mid-ocean the fierce storm awaits.

The wise youth goes forth well protected against dire emergency. Saul, with his gigantic body, is lacking in mental and spiritual equipment and the storm shall beat out his miserable life.

We think it a gallant thing, to be fluttering up to heaven with our wings of knowledge and speculation; whereas the highest mystery of a divine life here, and of perfect happiness hereafter, consists in nothing but mere obedience to the Divine will. Happiness is nothing but that inward sweet delight, which will arise from the harmonious agreement between our wills and the will of God. There is nothing in the whole world able to do us good or hurt, but God, and our own will: neither riches nor poverty, nor disgrace nor honor, nor life nor death, nor angels nor devils; but willing, or not willing, as we ought.—Ralph Cudworth.

Who knows what influence Lebbaeus had in the first discipleship? He is a man of no historical account; he does not figure among the three mighties; but Lebbaeus means "hearty, cheerful." Who can tell what influence the man had by virtue of his cheerfulness?—Joseph Parker.

Disciples Table Talk

R. A. Long Speaks in Meeting.

Evangelistic services are being held in a mission hall by the men of Independence Blvd. church in Kansas City and large audiences have been in attendance. When R. A. Long, who had gone to the meeting with the delegation from the Christian church, was asked to make a few remarks he said he could think of no better text than the one he just had heard at prayer meeting: "Fret not, for He loves you; faint not, for He holds you; fear not, for He keeps you." "Doubtless many hearts feel faint and are overcome because of burdens pressing down upon them," said Mr. Long. "This does not occur in only one walk of life. It is felt in every walk. There are periods in the life of every human reared by Christian parents and knows the tenderness of a mother's love, when at times the heart is fainting. There is something wonderful in the knowledge that somebody somewhere loves us. God is not partial with His love, He is not discriminating. That heart which beats in the breast of the lowest of the unfortunates tonight, beneath the worn garments of the man who has given up all hope, is just as valuable in the sight of God as the heart which beats beneath the silken robes of a prince or a potentate who controls the commerce of a kingdom."

Evangelist Arraigns Politicians.

The political conditions in Paris, Ill., have been widely advertised as being about as bad as can be. It is openly alleged that votes are bought and bribes given and received. Herbert Yeuell in his evangelistic services there paid his respects to these conditions. In emphasizing the need for open declaration of faith in Jesus Christ he said that a paralysis had crept over the churches of Paris because the public ideals were of such a character that man could be a corrupt politician and if he had money, a church member and in good standing, at the same time. He said the commission form of government is well enough, but held that the hearts of the people would have to be changed first, for the same fellows have their hands upon the public affairs of the town. He said the preachers of Paris are helpless because their supporters are among these political gangsters, and until there is a demand made by the righteous people of Paris that the church people stand clear of all public venalities, the churches will continue to be dead and Paris a stench in the nostrils of the nation. He said that he had made no statements for which he saw the need of making any apology and under no circumstances had he authorized any paper or persons to explain his statements or apologize for the same. The thing he said he had been contending for all through this campaign, was a clean conscience in all public and private life and he declared that no man has a right to continue a member of the church whose hands are in any way besmirched by political corruption. There were 80 confessions of faith during the special services.

New Pastor Does Things.

Arthur Stout recently celebrated the beginning of his second year at Bowling Green, Mo., and his work has been greatly blessed. The Sunday-school has more than doubled in his ministry and there are 59 in the young men's class. The C. W. B. M. auxiliary has 90 members. The church will conduct an every-member canvas on March 28. Mr. Stout is leading a movement to have a municipal playground established. His civic interest has brought good-will to the church.

Growth Compels Building Operations.

The Sunday-school at Alexandria, Ind., is growing so as to compel the congregation to build an addition to their building. On a recent Sunday there were 57 men in the Bible class taught by the pastor, G. W. Winfrey. There have been 23 accessions to the church since last summer.

Over Five Hundred New Members.

A gain of over five hundred members in one year, is the striking record of University place church, Des Moines. The net gain for the year has been 347. There are 3,116 members of this church, 2,061 living in Des Moines. During the coming summer, it is expected that a new organ will be installed in the auditorium and the inside of the building will be frescoed afresh. There was a special installation service for the new officers recently.

Church Extension Receipts Make Gain.

The receipts of Church Extension made a good gain in January. The gifts by individuals were nearly twice as great as last year. The offerings of the churches were $1,400 as against $960 last year.

Community Helps Get Up Sermons.

Frank Waller Allen has all Springfield helping him get up his sermons these days. He has written letters to prominent people in various walks of life all over the city and these are being asked their opinion about various matters in connection with the church. On the evening of Sunday, Feb. 14, the subject was "The Church and the Largest Life," and on that occasion all of the replies were read to the second question, which was, "In your judgment is the modern church fulfilling its mission and if not what would you suggest?" On Sunday evening, February 24, the subject will be "The Church and the City," and on this occasion the introduction will consist of the reading of all the replies to the third question which is, "What relation should the local church sustain to local politics?" Then on Sunday evening, February 28, the subject will be "The Church and All the People," in which the replies to the fourth question will be read by way of introduction, which is, "Is the church of today in your opinion reaching all classes of society? If not, what plan have you to offer?" Sunday evening, March 2, the concluding sermon of the series will be preached, the subject of which is, "The Beautiful Kingdom of God," in which the sum of the whole matter will be discussed. During the preaching of the series a question box will be placed on a stand in the foyer wherein serious questions that pertain to the subjects under discussion may be deposited, with the assurance that they will receive sincere attention.

In and Around Chicago

H. L. Willett spoke in Evanston in the First M. E. church on the evening of Feb. 14 before a large audience composed of the students and instructors of the Northwestern University, as well as of townspeople who are always ready to welcome him back to the city.

Mr. Myron C. Settle, of Gary, Ind., who will be chief speaker at the meeting of Chicago Sunday School people on March 8

Charles M. Sharpe is in the south on a trip connected with the interests of the Disciples' Divinity House. During his absence, the pulpit of the Monroe Street church is being supplied by Prof. W. D. MacClintock and W. C. McDougall.

C. G. Brelos, pastor of First church at Waukegan, read a paper before the Disciples' Ministerial Association on Feb. 15.

The pulpit of the Metropolitan church was filled by Lin D. Cartwright on the evening of Feb. 14. Metropolitan church has not yet secured a pastor. E. C. Mobley of Gainesville, Tex., was in correspondence with the church recently but decided to remain in the southland.

The choir of Jackson Boulevard church will give a musicale operetta on the evenings of Feb. 18 and 19. The piece rendered will be "The Nautical Knot, or the Belle of Bannabapool." Over eight hundred tickets have been sold.

Asa McDaniel preached at Douglas Park church again on Feb. 14 and his pulpit at Harvey was filled by an elder of Jackson Boulevard church, M. K. Compton, who though a layman, preaches on occasion.

The early days of March will gather Chicago Disciples to Jackson Boulevard church twice. On the evening of March 5, the C. W. B. M. will give a banquet there. Three missionary speakers will furnish the program. These will be Emory Ross of Liberia; W. C. McDougall of India, and G. B. Baird of China. The Sunday-school organization of Chicago Disciples will hold a banquet on the evening of Mar. 8, at which function Myron C. Settle, who conducts a school of religion in connection with the public school system of Gary, Ind., will be the chief speaker.

Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Bowman have been sailing in the Gulf of Mexico this winter and visited the Bahama islands. They are at home again in Chicago after a very pleasant trip.

O. F. Jordan addressed an audience that filled the large Grace M. E. church of Chicago on the evening of Feb. 14, speaking to the Knights of Pythias. His topic was "Forces Making for World Peace." These forces he enumerated as being The Woman Movement, Education Social Movement, Fraternalism and Modern Religion. He said, "Never have the optimist and the pessimist clashed over the future of the world as during the past six months. Paragraphers are busy writing short articles for magazines which lugubriously record the failure of the church and the down-fall of civilization. On the other hand, the optimist notes that the conscience against war has grown more in America the past six months than during the previous thirty years and as soon as the war is over, he predicts a great peace movement in Europe. The war is so terrible that we would never smile again if we could realize its horrors. Yet with all its evil, there is coming this good, that the world is discerning as never before that war and civilization are not compatible. The forces that shall abolish war are so invincible in their character that we need have no fear for the future."

Evanston church is planning some features for the deepening of the spiritual life during the Lenten season. A New Testament League is being formed to read the New Testament through before Easter. Other plans are in process of formulation which will be announced later.

L. D. Cartwright, a student in the Disciples Divinity House, preaches regularly at Sanktown, Ind. Dr. Errett Gates visits Morocco, Ind., church regularly.

A Busy Preacher.

W. G. Conley is pastor of the church at El Centro, Cal., in the Imperial valley. In addition to his pastoral labors, which include building a great church, he is founder of the town of Seeley, and president of the First National Bank. The El Centro church is installing a $3,500 organ. Bruce Brown held evangelistic meetings in this church recently and as a result there were 49 accessions.

Goal is Reached at Atlanta, Ill.

When R. H. Newton went to Atlanta, Ill., four years ago, he had some great aims. These have all been accomplished. They were a new building, a Bible school of five hundred with trained teachers, and a church membership of four hundred. It is only recently that the five hundred pupils for the Sunday-school were secured. F. B. Thomas has just closed evangelistic meetings in this church and during these meetings there were 104 accessions. Mrs. Thomas assisted with the music during the meetings and sang gospel solos.

Enthusiastic Missionary Meetings.

Mrs. Elizabeth Ross, mother of Emory Ross, the Liberia missionary, and Mrs. O. W. Lawrence, state C. W. B. M. worker, have been holding a missionary conference in Maryville, Mo. The greatest interest has been attending these meetings and 21 women have asked for life membership in the C. W. B. M, and have paid twenty-five dollars each for this privilege.

T. A. Boyer Now a Doctor.

Thomas A. Boyer, pastor of First church in Oakland, Cal., who will soon go to Richmond, was recently honored by Berkeley Bible Seminary which conferred the degree "Doctor of Divinity" upon him. This degree was given in recognition of the religious work which has been done by Dr. Boyer upon the Pacific coast.

Movies of John Barleycorn.

San Jose, Cal., church has installed the moving picture machine. On a recent evening, the pictures illustrating "John Barleycorn," by Jack London, were given. These proved very popular since many of Jack London's stories are located on the coast. It will be recalled that these pictures were produced under the direction of Hobart Bosworth and represent one of his greatest triumphs. The liquor interests were so aroused by the fear of the effect these pictures might have upon the public mind, that they offered the producers $25,000 to withhold them from circulation until after the fall elections. In this story Jack London prophesied that prohibition will surely come and since that prediction was made six states have been added to the dry list of the United States and the billion-dollar traffic in strong drink in Russia has been wiped out.

Twenty-five Hundred Calls Made.

The visitation campaign made by Broadway church, Los Angeles, in January, was a success. Twenty-five hundred calls were made. The church provides a report blank by which each member reports the calls he has made in detail and also reports his own church attendance. Each church visitor is provided with calling cards indicating that he is calling in behalf of the church. The goal of church attendance for the members is to be present every week. The pastor, Charles F. Hutslar, has been appointed chairman of the banquet committee for the national convention. All banquets in connection with the convention will be arranged through this committee.

Efficiency Campaign at Washington, Pa.

John Ray Ewers of East End church, Pittsburgh, is in Washington, Pa., assisting Walter Mansell of First church in an "Efficiency Campaign." The Sunday-school of this church has an attendance of over six hundred.

Christian College Abolishes Social Sororities.

By co-operative action of the faculty and of the sorority members themselves, social sororities at Christian college, Columbia, Mo., have been abolished. President St. Clair-Moss, as chairman of a committee on the investigation of the sorority question, has been gathering data for the past two years. The results of this investigation and study were placed before the executive committee of the faculty and the members of the sororities. The reasons alleged for this action is that there is no social need for sororities where the junior college provides dormitories. The sororities are believed to consume too much of the student's time, to establish sectional spirit in the school and to be used for political purposes in influencing class elections. Each of the three sororities owns an attractive bungalow on the west campus so the change is made difficult by reason of the property interests involved.

Church Extension Grants Loans.

At the board meeting of the Church Extension organization on Feb. 4, the following loans were promised, all from six per cent money, other worthy applications being carried over for lack of funds: LaFontaine, Ind., $2,500; Albuquerque, N. Mex., $3,500; Salem, Ore., Court St. church, $2,000; Chehalis, Wash., $800; Rush Hill, Mo., $1,500; Robersonville, N. C., $3,000; Bay City, Tex., $1,000; Tacoma, Wash., Pine St., $1,200; Memphis, Tex., $1,000. The following loans were closed during the month of January: Belhaven, N. C., First church (Annuity fund), $3,300; Capitol Heights, Md., $400; Port Arthur, Tex., (Annuity fund) $4,000; Hattiesburg, Miss., (Annuity fund) $2,000; Kimberly, Ida., (Dr. J. W. Gill fund) $687.48; Electra, Tex., $700.

COLLEGE TO CELEBRATE BIRTHDAY

Washington's Birthday comes as an important event in this brief month of February, and tends to perpetuate the memory of the man of Mount Vernon.

WILLIAM WOODS COLLEGE

Celebrates its twenty-fifth birthday in May, 1915, with a Grand Pageant illustrative of its successful quarter-century history. The affair will be elaborate in its every detail and gorgeous to a marked degree.

Young women are given a full Literary Course, including Bible, and instruction in Music, Art, Expression, and Home Economics, at this standardized Junior College.

(Owned by the Christian Churches of Missouri.)

FULTON, MO.

Pastor's Son Wins Appointment.
Elton Clarke, son of G. H. Clarke, an Indianapolis pastor, is a senior at Butler College this year. He has been appointed assistant instructor in zoology in the university of New York and will begin his work there shortly after his graduation from Butler next June. Mr. Clarke has specialized in zoology and is now in his third year as assistant in that department in Butler college.

Twenty-three Enlist for Christian Work.
The Men and Millions team was recently in Beardstown, Ill. The speakers were Dr. Royal J. Dye, Dr. R. H. Crossfield, Dr. H. C. Hurd, and Geo. W. Muckley. The young people of the community were greatly interested in the work of the team and twenty-three signed cards indicating their desire to devote their lives to some kind of specific Christian work.

Dr. Gordon Undergoes Operation.
Dr. A. McNeil Gordon was operated on at the Battle Creek Sanitarium on a recent date. It was supposed she was suffering from stomach trouble but it was found she had a long-standing case of appendicitis. The trouble with her eyes has grown better since the operation and she is on the way to recovery.

Missionary and Mother in Des Moines.
Mrs. Elizabeth Ross and her son, Emory Ross of Liberia, will visit a number of the Des Moines churches in February, and hold C. W. B. M. day services in them. The "Billy" Sunday meeting prevented these churches from observing the day in December as usual.

Farmers' Institutes in the Church.
Farmers' institutes are being held in many of the churches this year. On Jan. 19, there was such a meeting at Metz, Ind., and Mrs. Walker of Indianapolis delivered two addresses. On Feb. 11, an institute was held in Lakemont, N. Y., church. On Jan. 25, an institute was held at Macy, Ind.

Furnish Food to the Poor.
Lorain, O., church has established a soup kitchen and is giving away food to the poor several days a week. The first day the church opened its doors for this work, fifteen gallons of soup and forty loaves of bread were given away.

School of Methods at Steubenville, O.
The Ohio Christian Missionary Society is holding schools of methods in different parts of the state and the last week in January a school was held at Steubenville. Among the teachers were Dr. J. D. Darling, general secretary of the Ohio Sunday School Association, Miss Lillie Faris, W. S. Goode of Cleveland and Prof. H. Newton Miller, who holds the Moninger chair of religious pedagogy at Bethany. Wilford H. McLain, State Bible School superintendent, was also present and lectured on "Teen Age Problems."

Dedicated Atkins Hall.
An addition to Linwood Boulevard church, of Kansas City, costing $60,000, was dedicated on January 31. Atkins Hall, the new structure, has a seating capacity of 1,500. Seven thousand dollars was needed to clear the building of debt. This was quickly raised. Resolutions neatly engraved on parchment were presented to J. C. Hill, who labored faithfully on the building committee.

Union Evangelism in Montana.
Four churches at Lewiston, Mont., are cooperating in a union evangelistic effort. The Disciples are prominent in the effort to unify the community in religious work.

Pastor Treats Friend's Novel.
David H. Shields, of Kokomo, Ind., is a friend of Harold Bell Wright and they still maintain a correspondence. Mr. Wright was pastor at Pittsburg, Kans., when Mr. Shields was pastor at Salina. The two often met and talked over the problems of religion and life. On a recent Sunday evening, Mr. Shields reviewed "The Eyes of the World." He said the essential message of the book was wholesome but considers the character "Sibyl" rather too unearthy in its goodness.

Minister Passes Away.
O. P. Snodgrass, formerly minister at Union City, Ind., passed away recently at his home near Alexandria, Ind.

Ladies Lead Civic Movement.
The ladies of Frisco, Tex., church have led an important civic movement. They had shade trees set out around the church and have urged all the householders of the city to do the same. The result is that in a few years a town that was peculiarly lacking in this kind of adornment will be filled with trees.

Minister Prepares Catechism.
Realizing the need of a manual of instruction that would in some measure be analogous to the older catechisms of the liturgical churches L. O. Bricker, of First Church, Atlanta, Ga., has prepared a booklet which will be used in his church this year. He says: "Other religious communions take better care of their children than we do. The very backbone of Presbyterianism and Lutheranism is their catechism, by means of which their children are instructed and brought into the church and made adherents to these faiths. Our weakness is that we depend upon adult evangelism, or upon some emotional revivalist breaking into a Bible-school, like a wild horse into a flower garden, and persuading a lot of untaught and unready children to confess a faith they do not understand. It is for the purpose of teaching clearly all the things belonging to the Christian life, that this little book has been prepared. It will be used in all classes in the Junior and Intermediate departments of our Bible-school, beginning next Sunday and continuing until Easter, which will be a day of decision and dedication for all those who desire to become Christians, after knowing what it means. The minister also invites parents of children to take a copy of this little book and go over it with their children. It contains five chapters, under these titles: Becoming a Christian, The Church, The Lord's Supper, The Christian Life, About This Church."

Rev. C. R. Scoville, who is holding a union meeting in Akron, O., for which more elaborate preparations have been made than for any other meeting in the history of the Evangelist's work.

Reception to the Bride.
W. T. Mullins, pastor at Middlesboro, Ky., was married recently and on a recent evening over two hundred of the members of the church gathered in the church parlors for a reception to the bride. The evening was very pleasantly spent and refreshments were served.

Begin Use of New Edifice.
Though the auditorium of the new church edifice is not entirely finished at Port Arthur, Tex., the congregation began using it for worship on Sunday morning, Jan. 31. The work of completing the structure will be rushed to completion at an early date.

Methodist Reviews Disciple History.
Dr. Matt. S. Hughes, pastor of First Methodist Episcopal church in Pasadena, Cal., is preaching a series of Sunday evenings on the history of American denominations. He spent a Sunday evening recently on the history of the Disciples, in which he dealt with the Campbells and their followers with insight and sympathy. He especially praised the Disciples for their contribution to the cause of Christian union and for their service in reaching the pioneer sections of the country. He called attention to the fact that the Disciples were the first great religious body born on American soil.

Sees Every Pastor in State Move.
To live long enough to see every Disciple minister in the state move would seem to involve an almost patriarchal experience, but G. B. Van Arsdall has lived in Denver five years only, and yet in this time every pulpit in the state has had a change. It is a striking commentary on the unrest among churches and ministers.

Carry Soup to the Poor.
The Apron Committee of the Whatsoever Circle of Independence Blvd church, of Kansas City, recently established a soup kitchen for the poor in a needy district of the city. The place was open for twenty-four hours without a single application for food. This was not due to any lack of poverty, but to the fact that the factory people of the district. The churches at Hobbs, Cultsville and duced to the most dire straits. When the women saw that the people would not come, they put the soup into buckets and carried it to where they knew it was needed.

Indiana District Work Succeeds.
An example of the efficiency of the district service in Indiana is furnished by the work of Guy I. Hoover, in the eastern district. The churches at Hobbs, Cultsville and Union Chapel have been formed into a pastoral group. The three churches have voted to approve the plan. They will now have a resident minister and a far more efficient service.

Christian Union Experts Meet.
The Commission on Christian Union met in Kansas City recently and among those present were W. F. Richardson, H. K. Pendleton and S. B. Moore. Plans were made for an extension of the message of this commission.

Great Banquet at Kalamazoo.
When Dr. H. L. Willett went to Kalamazoo recently, he was astonished to see the large audience of men that was gathered together by the Inter-church Brotherhood of the city. Over six hundred men sat down to dinner together at the Pythian hall dining room. Dr. Willett spoke to the men of his experiences in conducting a travel study class of the University of Chicago around the world. His discourse dealt with the missionary observations of his trip.

Fire Damages Edifice.
On Jan. 24, the Bible classes were assembled at Berthoud, Colo., church when the fire in the stoves got connected with the wood-work of the building in some way and the floor of the church was burned out, occasioning a loss to the congregation of about six hundred dollars. The quick work of the fire company saved the building from complete destruction.

Conflagration at Athens, O.
There was a fire in Athens, O., church recently but no one tried to put it out. The pastor, George J. Owen, burned in the presence of the congregation the notes representing the entire indebtedness of the congregation. The officers had sold the old parsonage and had raised enough additional money to leave the present property clear of debt. The church now owns the lot where it meets, also the cottage and lot in the rear of the church house, and the valuable lot at the corner of State and Congress streets, where some day in the not far distant future they will erect a commodious house of worship.

Pastor Reconsiders Resignation.

J. Irving Brown resigned at Sac City and accepted a new pastorate at Adel, Ia. His church people were so loath to see him leave that they asked the Adel church to release Mr. Brown from his contract that he might remain with them. This the Adel church has graciously agreed to do.

Flames Consume Church Edifice.

The church edifice at Louisville, Ill., burned recently, being a total loss. It had been recently erected at a cost of five thousand dollars. A. H. Bennett, the pastor, had labored most diligently in erecting the building. It is planned to erect a new building at an early date.

Sunday School Workers Meet.

A meeting of Sunday-school workers at Des Moines recently brought out some interesting discussions on religious education. "That the reading of the Bible a few minutes daily in the public schools will fortify the moral life of the children or equip them to meet the temptations of life is unthinkable," declared Myron T. Settle of Gary, Ind. His subject was "Religious Education and the Public Schools." The speaker further emphasized the fact that such a course does not even give the school children a fair knowledge of the Bible. The restoration of the Bible in all of the public schools will not solve the problem, in his opinion. Mr. Settle cited North Dakota, where Bible study is recognized by the state board of education. In his home town of Gary the churches have five paid instructors, and 750 grade pupils get two hours' religious instruction a week. Eight different denominations conduct day schools where this training is given. Children are admitted to the church class rooms upon the written consent of their parents. This Gary plan was originated more than a year ago. Other interesting papers were read at the meeting by R. M. Hopkins, Cincinnati, national Bible school superintendent; W. E. Frazee, Lexington, and J. H. Jones.

Disciple Pastor Becomes Naturalized.

Not many Disciple pastors in the United States have had to become naturalized, but this has been the experience of William Garnett Alcorn, pastor at Monroe City, Mo. He is a native of Australia and he recently declared his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States. With this object in view, he appeared before S. A. Birch, clerk of the United States court. Mr. Alcorn's witnesses were three preachers, B. H. Cleaver, J. T. Bloom and Mr. Alderton of LaGrange.

Another Church Building Burned.

The edifice at Bellefontaine, O., has burned to the ground and the officers and members are busy taking subscriptions to erect a new edifice. The church has a membership of 550, 130 new members having been added since Traverse Harrison became pastor last November.

Visitation Work Brings Results.

The visitation campaign which has been on the past month at Broadway church, Los Angeles, Cal., has borne fruit. Among the important results are 22 accessions to the church the past month. This church will keep open house to eastern friends during the summer.

William Woods College Has Pageant.

William Woods College, an institution for young women at Fulton, Mo., conducted by the Disciples of Missouri, will observe a celebration of twenty-five years of history in May. The celebration will take the form of a historical pageant. This school has enjoyed a large patronage from Disciple young people the past year.

Gas City (Ind.) Church Makes Headway.

J. Thomas Luckey has been pastor at Gas City, Ind., for three months. In that time a serious deficit in the treasury has been wiped out. There have been 89 accessions to the church, 52 by baptism and 37 by reinstatement. The pastor has officiated at 13 funerals in the period.

Classes Study "Church School."

The book by Walter S. Athearn of Drake University, "The Church School," has evidently "caught on" among Disciples, for it is being used in many communities as a text for special classes. Calvary church, Missoula, Mont., has a class studying the book under the leadership of the pastor, Harold H. Griffis. Quincy, Ill., church has a class under the leadership of W. D. Endres. The latter class at Quincy has an enrollment of forty.

G. B. Van Arsdall Begins Sixth Year.

G. B. Van Arsdall has begun his sixth year with Central church, Denver. There are but few pastors left in the state that were there five years ago. There have been 737 accessions to the church in that period, and the net gain in membership has been 387. The present resident membership is approximately 750. The most notable advance in the church has been the enrichment of worship, a vast improvement in the educational work of the Sunday-school, the placing of the finances of the church on a business basis, a great increase in missionary interest and giving and the use of the prayer-meeting for some of the larger purposes of the congregation.

Dr. Powell on Unemployment.

Establishment of a municipal employment bureau to find positions for Louisville's jobless men and to relieve the suffering in that city, was advocated recently by E. L. Powell in his month-end sermon at First church. This plan, in brief, provides for a commission of five members, composed of the mayor, the county judge, a factory owner, a representative of the mercantile interests and a representative of the civic clubs and churches. The commission's work he outlined thus: Employ an agent to learn conditions; establish registration points at various places where needy men may give their names and be known as seeking work; obtain the names of business houses, factories and families willing to give employment, and last, establish a lodging house if public lodging houses now being operated are unable to cope with the situation. Dr. Powell said this plan was put into effect in Sioux City, Ia., and proved a success. He said he would submit it as a tried, workable plan at the conference to be held soon at the city hall.

Pastor Opposes Pugilism.

A prize fight is scheduled for Juarez, Mexico, just across the line from El Paso. The pastors of the latter city, led by Perry J. Rice, have been very actively engaged in trying to prevent the fight. Owing to the lack of any well recognized government in Mexico, it seems nearly impossible to secure action. One of the principals in the contest, the negro Jack Johnson, is a fugitive from justice in the United States and it may be impossible for him to reach the place of the fight. The El Paso people have tried to secure action on the part of the federal government, but no practical plan has yet been evolved.

Large Audiences Hear Evangelistic Pastors.

In Missouri, two prominent pastors are holding evangelistic services in their own churches. G. A. Campbell had 120 accessions at the close of his second week and the meetings are still going on. They are conducted quietly on a high spiritual plane. Burris A. Jenkins is continuing his meetings a week longer than originally planned and at the last report there were 189 accessions. His audiences have ranged from four hundred to a thousand. Both congregations are quite sure that it has been profitable for them to hear their own pastors in these evangelistic services.

Columbus, O., Church Thrives.

Wilson Avenue church, Columbus, O., had 73 accessions by baptism last year and 40 by letter. They now have over seven hundred members. The pastor, J. J. Tisdall, officiated at 14 funerals and 7 weddings; preached 170 sermons, delivered 56 special addresses, made 1,014 calls and in other ways entered deeply into the life of the community. The financial reports show $10,581.77 raised for all purposes, and $866.80 was given to missions and benevolence. Mr. Tisdall began his fifth year with this church on Feb. 1. When he began the church membership was 229. The debt on the church building has been reduced from $16,000 to $6,500.

Business Man to Care for Churches.

L. O. Knipp was for twelve and a half years pastor of the church at Plymouth, Pa. He had business talents and has become a leading officer and director of several coal mining enterprises. He has not forgotten his preaching interests, however, and he recently went to Scranton, Pa., and organized a new congregation there, with a membership of fifty. The men in the new church are leaders, one being prominent in the affairs of the Lackawanna railroad; another is a manager of the Lackawanna Woolen Mills, and still another is the manager of the Commercial Institute. Mr. Knipp has accepted a relationship to the work of the American Christian Missionary Society. He will care for the interests of the society in the east and will visit churches as opportunity offers.

Mission Churches Reaching Maturity

BY GRANT K. LEWIS.

At the age of twenty-one a young man reaches majority. Many a boy becomes self supporting under that age, however. The average time for a church to attain self support under the American Society, according to a statement by Secretary Grant K. Lewis, is five years. The board of directors keeps careful watch over all churches receiving appropriation. Both, general office and the state secretaries are continually pressing upon all such congregations the desirability and need of declaring themselves independent of the boards as soon as possible. Every contract drawn with mission pastors specifies that consent is given to gradual reduction. The rule is a twenty per cent reduction annually. There are few exceptions. Many churches reach self support under this time.

Recently a number of churches have been declaring themselves able to walk alone. Tampa, Florida, ministered to for a number of years by E. W. Elliott, became self supporting November 1. The Third church in Wichita, Kansas, has developed such strength under the ministry of W. T. McLain that it became self supporting January 1. H. F. Lutz has for two years been successfully leading the work at the H. Street church, Washington, D. C. Recently special evangelistic meetings held by Evangelists Wilhite and Shaw added a large number of recruits to the membership and enabled the church to become self supporting. Mr. Wilhite is conducting other meetings under the American Society, immediately supervised by the Maryland Board. While some of his meetings are with self- supporting churches, the one held at Ocean View was at a mission point and gathered sufficient results to make the church self supporting by co-operating with Millville, Delaware.

R. E. Dunlap, in addition to the important labors of supervision in Arizona, has held some evangelistic meetings and in November organized two new churches, one at Glendale and the other at Tolleston. These meetings were successful. Twelve hundred dollars were raised for local support and O. E. Ames was called to the pastorate. A church was also organized at Bowie, Arizona, and attached to the pastorate there of Willcox. Arizona was thus credited with two self-supporting fields this fall.

The American Board is arranging for special evangelistic meetings to begin this spring at Lynn, Mass. Conditions indicate that a profitable meeting will result in a self-supporting church in this important New England city.

Under the immediate supervision of our affiliated board in South Idaho, Evangelist C. R. L. Vawter will begin a series of meetings. Arrangements have been made for Evangelist Vawter to conduct meetings at Twin Falls, Caldwell, Boise, Nampa and Payette. The American Board hopes to secure funds to use him in one or two other fields which are crying loudly for the gospel.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR MARCH 3.

The World Purpose of Jesus. John 3:16; 10:14-16; 8:12; 12:32.

The Christ of our faith claims dominion over all men and over all the customs, laws, and institutions through which men express their lives and by which they are governed. The individual is called upon to form his life after the Christian ideal. The political and business organizations of the world are being summoned before the tribunal of Christ and asked to give an account of themselves. "The fundamental idea of the gospel may be stated in a sentence. The glad tidings consist of an ideal incarnation of God in the interest of a universal incarnation."

The Divine Character.

The teaching of Jesus is that God is the sum of moral perfection. "The Mohammedan affirms that Allah is good," writes Dr. H. L. Willett, "because good is dependent upon his will. If he chose to do what we call evil, it would be good because he wills it. Strangely enough, this view seems to be held by some Christians, who insist that even if God chose to do evil, it would be good because of his choice; and they point to certain episodes in the Old Testament for proof. Not so did our Lord teach. To him the Father was evermore supremely good. To the young man he said, 'Why callest thou me good? One there is who is good—God.' The loving tenderness of parents in seeking the best for their children was used by him to illustrate the perfect goodness of God, in comparison with whom all men were but 'evil.'"

What Will It Cost?

If programs could save the world, there would be an excess of virtue upon the earth now. Two loafers meet and at once plans for setting the world right are proposed. At every convention of church people there are presented schemes for curing men of their wicked ways. The teachers in colleges and universities are quite willing to tell us how to get out of our difficulties. The farmers are coming forward with their suggestions. Diplomats draw up peace treaties in order to save the nations from the horrors of war. But the trouble is that too many of us are like the man on the sinking boat who grabbed one of the few life preservers, making sure of his own safety, and then cried out, "Fifty dollars to the man who will save my wife." The cost of identifying ourselves with the world of men and of accepting the consequences of such identification is great, so great that we often decline to pay it. With successful men and good men we like to associate, but the bad man and the failure are disagreeable fellows, they do not understand us, they abuse our confidence: let us therefore keep away from them.

The New World.

The new world of Christianity is the old one made over. It exists as an ideal; and in part as a reality. "The problem of religion," says Dr. Hyde, "is to present Christ as the representative of all humanity; so to hold up the cross of Christ as to make every man who is doing wrong feel that he is rolling up the mighty mass of misery which Christ and humanity must bear. It must show that every deed of dishonesty or lust, every word of unkindness or insincerity, every indulgence in sensuality or selfishness, is an addition to the burden Christ came to bear; a crucifying of him afresh in the person of his brethren." We know in a way the effect of sin. When we are fully Christian, we shall be able to see the moral issue in every situation and we shall have the courage to control our actions in harmony with the demands of truth and right. We shall not spend more money to foster suspicion among nations and to punish crime than we spend on religious and moral education.

Matt. 1:21; 18:11-13; John 18:36-37; 2 Cor. 10:3:5; Phil. 2:10-11; Heb. 8:11; Rev. 14:6; Rom. 15:3; 2 Cor. 8:9.

Faces Problem of Unemployed.

L. J. Marshall of Wabash Ave. church, Kansas City, spoke recently on the question of unemployment. His sermon was liberally reported by the press: "That the present industrial system is wrong is admitted," said Mr. Marshall. "This was admitted last week on the witness stand before the industrial commission by such men of affairs as Guggenheim and Gary of the steel corporation. Gifts to educational institutions do not solve the problem, although they may relieve it by teaching men their true relationship with each other. The responsibility which every man should feel for every other man alone will solve the problem. We must adopt Christ's view—that all men are brothers. Every man's duty is to relate himself to every other man according to the doctrine of Christ. When we begin to think more of character than clothes and more of our duty to our fellow man than we do of food, then the problem will be solved."

SERVICE WANTED.

Service is desired with churches one-fourth time, one-half time, or all time for one church, or holding protracted meetings. Forty years of continuous experience in the ministry of the gospel of the Christ is the equipment, with all needed references, offered as an inducement for the desired service.

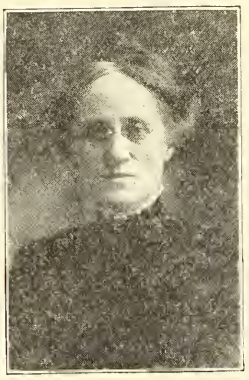
Meeting Life's Problems

Conducted by
CELESTE B. GIVENS

A Department of Friendly Counsel



Celeste B. Givens

Readers of "The Conquest" are invited to send questions to Mrs. Givens for her answer. If you are troubled about some problem that has come into your life, tell her about it. We are assured she will give you help. Sign your name, although it will not be printed with your question. Address Mrs. Givens, as follows: Mrs. Celeste B. Givens, 3121 Cottage Grove Ave., Des Moines, Ia.—EDITOR.

To the Girls of the Conquest Family—Greetings.

It is a happy task I have assigned to me—this one of writing letters to you—girls. For do you know I find girlhood in its wondrous unfoldment the most fascinating thing in the world—(unless it be boyhood.)

We think of girlhood as a half blown rose, in all its wonderment of purity, beauty and promise. The sunshine of love and holy teachings creeping silently into the secret heart awakens new power and joy and wondrous miracle! The bud bursts, and lovely womanhood crowned with queenly graces comes forth.

My rose garden gave me hundreds of glorious roses last summer, but as the season waned I began to notice a blight falling on the sweet pink buds, and before I knew it ugly half-formed roses were trying to look up into the sunshine.

Oh! I said, what is here?

And we found the tiny rose worm eating the delicate petals and finding its way into the heart, there like a poisonous canker eating out all its beauty and life.

Listen, girls! Do you know that is just what sin does? You may grow into girlhood, protected and screened from its withering power; but when its scorching winds touch you, at first like the rose, only the sweetness of expression is marred, and the delicate soul beauty shining forth in that sweet face is changed.

We cannot trace it. We cannot define it. We only feel it.

Then, if the influence is not checked, it sears its way into the fibers of the very heart and life, and ugliness replaces beauty, and like the rose the soul of life is blasted.

Oh ye sheltered ones on life's pathway! Let us hold out the strong hand to lead the tossed souls into safety. Girls, girls! Keep thy heart pure; for out of it come life's issues.

May this sacred corner of this splendid paper be now dedicated to loving helpfulness in solving many a problem for you, girls, and grow into the most glorious of personal fellowships.

CELESTE B. GIVENS.

"The Conquest"

Our attractive weekly, is building character into the lives of several thousands of young people in our brotherhood. Are you giving it an opportunity to win your school to its high ideals?

The above is one of our new departments which we have lifted bodily out of "The Conquest" onto this "Century" page that you may see what your people are missing.

Rev. C. R. Stauffer, of the great Norwood (Cincinnati) school, gives a fine "Big Brother" talk every week to young men. Mrs. Givens is one of Iowa's leading women, prominent in the literary and musical life of Des Moines, her home city, where she is also a member of Central Christian church.

We feel justified in promising Disciples schools that this department is going to be the finest feature ever promoted by any young people's paper.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desire nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

The Christian Century and the Spiritual Life: An Editorial Consecration

DURING the past three months there has been appearing on this page of The Christian Century a series of editorials on the spiritual life, dealing especially with the relation of the Disciples of Christ to the religious demands of the new age into which the world and the Church are being rapidly ushered.

From the beginning of the series it was hoped that these articles would be regarded by our readers as possessing more than ordinary significance. However, we did not call particular attention to the fundamental nature of the articles, preferring rather to let them stand on their own merits, and watching meanwhile for the tokens of favor or indifference with which they were being received.

Now that the series is completed we feel that these tokens are by far the most significant feature of the series.

No article or series of articles has been published in The Christian Century in the past ten years which has called out such expressions of gratefulness and hopefulness from our readers as has this series. Hardly a letter has been received by the editor during the past six weeks, hardly a communication to the business office from our subscribers, in which there was not some appreciative reference to the call we were making for the deepening and reconstruction of the spiritual life.

An aged minister, now retired, in his day an aggressive campaigner for Disciples' principles, gives this autobiographical touch:

> Your editorials on the spiritual life have warmed my heart and fired my imagination. I confess that as I have had leisure in my declining years to study more widely and to observe more fairly I had begun to lose interest in our own people and what we have called "our plea." I had lost my zeal for many of the things I used to preach, and had come to think of the Disciples as just another denomination like the rest, perhaps little better than the rest and in some points not so good. As I follow you the old flame seems to be rekindled. I can see now the wide and unoccupied place to which the Disciples are divinely called. I feel as if youth had come again to my mind and I wish it might come to my body too, that I could go out as a preacher of the spiritual message which you have shown so clearly is the kernel of all our basic principles.

A young minister in his first pastorate who had corresponded with us some two years ago, while in the seminary, about accepting a pulpit in a denominational church writes:

> I am glad now I remained with our own people. At that time I could have left without a single conscientious scruple. But since reading your "reinterpretation" of the Disciples' ideals I could not get the consent of my conscience to go now. I see more in our principles than I ever saw before and I believe we have a distinctive work to do in the modern world.

These two are merely samples out of the big basket of grateful sentiments we have received. But we cannot give space for more. Such tokens greatly encourage us.

But they do more: they confirm the aim and purpose that are in us to give to the "Century," increasingly, the character of an exponent and interpreter of the spiritual significance of the historic ideals of the Disciples.

This has always been the point of view from which we have approached the treatment of any theme.

Not in specific instances only, but in the tone and atmosphere of the whole paper have we endeavored to make this spiritual point of view dominant.

But in projecting the series of articles on the spiritual life we felt that the time had now come when that point of view should be made more explicit both to readers and editors, and that both they and we should consecrate ourselves afresh to the highest ideals.

Our brotherhood has been passing through critical and turbulent times for the past decade and more. The air has been rent with controversial strife. The normal ongoing of our purposes as a people has been deflected into by-paths of contention over personalities and technicalities.

It seems evident that if this condition of mind continues to be fostered by our journalism the Disciples will altogether lose their testimony and become a by-word in Christendom. The centrifugal forces among us are very strong. Our individualism and congregationalism are almost anarchic.

Our differences of opinion are radical and serious—when they are considered merely on the level to which our journalism has dragged them. If no higher ground for our common effort can be found than that upon which the discussions of the past have been carried on, a division in our ranks is altogether inescapable; the work of our amiable peace-makers is hopeless. Strong forces are now consciously at work to create this division. The integrity of our movement can be preserved only by carrying our problems up from the level of opinion and personality onto the higher level of the spiritual life.

We are menaced with division because our discussion has degenerated to the level of prejudice and crass partizanship and commercialism. All sensitive men and women among us are disgusted with the unspeakable contentions for which our journalism is mainly responsible.

As for The Christian Century it proposes definitely and positively to abandon whatever participation it has had in this newspaper strife. Our role in the past has been imposed upon us by the coarse attacks that have been made upon certain men and institutions. This newspaper was the only organ through which the facts could find a voice. Altogether against our taste we accepted an obvious duty.

We believe that duty is now fully discharged. We are face to face with a new duty. It is not now necessary to defend the right of certain men and churches to a place in the Disciples' movement. The present duty of a journal representing the Disciples of Christ lies quite outside the field of controversy with its newspaper contemporaries.

It is a constructive task that we now face, a task at which we can work in total disregard of whatever tirades and recriminations other newspapers may choose to indulge in.

The only newspaper that can serve the cause of the Disciples of Christ is one that has a constructive attitude and vision. Any organ that continues the bitter newspaper controversy of the past two decades with all its bickering and backtalk is harming the true cause of Christ.

We need an inward reconciliation.

At both extremes of our differences there is need for a reconciling reinterpretation.

If our so-called "conservatives" come to see that our historic principles have to do first with our own souls, and only secondarily with the outer organization of the Church, their pride of opinion will vanish, and with it will go the unspiritual belligerancy that is too common among them.

And if our so-called "progressives" come to see that these principles upon which the Disciples have historically laid so great emphasis are the structural principles of the highest ethical and spiritual life they will surely recover again the conviction of a distinctive and worthful mission for our movement which not a few of them have lost.

* * *

It was to make the suggestion of such an interpretation of these principles that our recent editorials were written. Our treatment merely touched the high places of the great subject. Lying between these peaks are rich valleys in which it is our intention to walk in the future, in company with our readers.

To a constructive spiritual ideal we renew our consecration.

For partners in fulfilling the high purpose involved in such an ideal we covet the support of all our readers, and especially the pastors of our churches, who, more than any other class, have felt the baneful influence among their people of a type of journalism lacking in vision and delicacy and spirituality.

In humility and awe at the magnitude and seriousness of the task that confronts us, we ask all who cherish the ideals of the Disciples of Christ to join us in petitioning God for his guidance and blessing on all our work.

George Hamilton Combs, Preacher

BY EDGAR DeWITT JONES.

It is a rare privilege when a preacher has a chance to hear another preacher. The rule is that whenever he goes to church he has to hear himself preach. Most pastors therefore would covet the privilege that Rev. Edgar DeWitt Jones enjoyed of sitting in the congregation while his pulpit was occupied every evening for two weeks by Dr. George H. Combs. The brotherly and discriminating appraisal of the Kansas City pastor, which Mr. Jones has prepared, not only sets forth the great qualities which, taken together, make Dr. Combs one of the most effective preachers and gracious personalities in the American pulpit but also reflects an equal graciousness on the part of Mr. Jones as a hearer. It is almost as admirable to hear eloquently as to preach eloquently.

SOME ministers are born preachers; others acquire the art; still others never do, and are used of God for widespread good through consecrated personalities rather than pulpit power. George Hamilton Combs is a preacher born, who through his more than twenty years of ministry has cultivated assiduously his heaven-sent gift of public speech, focusing, as it were, his cosmopolitan observations, his extraordinarily wide reading, and his fruitful reflections upon the supreme task of preaching.

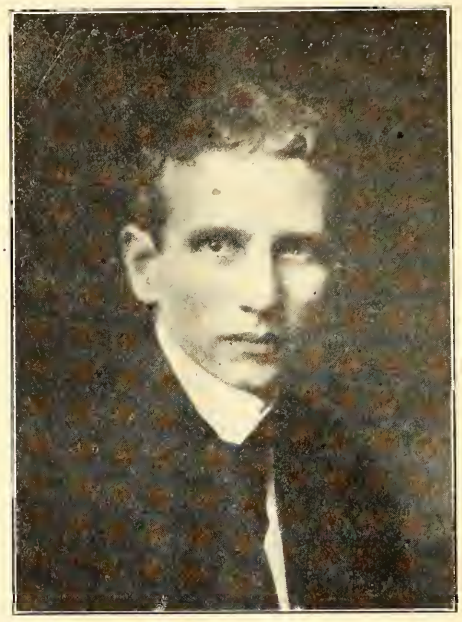
As a lad to whom public speaking was always fascinating I heard George H. Combs in his glorious youth preach Sunday after Sunday for more than two years; later I heard him in his notable convention and other occasional addresses. I have read his three published volumes, most of his contributions to our religious journals, and recently I listened to him through a series of twelve sermons in the church of which I am minister. I feel, therefore, in a small measure, at least, prepared to estimate this gifted man's ability as preacher, and I am anxious to put this estimate on paper while the spell of the man's message, like the haunting harmonies of a great oratorio, is still upon me. I shall attempt to estimate this preacher's power under five headings, as follows: Asset of Presence, Asset of Voice, Asset of Vocabulary and Diction, Asset of Evangelistic Passion, and Asset of Human Element.

I. ASSET OF PRESENCE.

Dr. Combs is not, physically, impressive, that is to say—in a crowd you would not look at his figure twice unless you got a good view of his face. Then possibly you would look at him two or three times. The man is slight of build, slender and of medium height, and his face is most interesting. Dark, deep-set eyes, and mobile lips, a face that preaches—an actor's face if you please. Years ago I used to think George H. Combs resembled the pictures of Matthew Arnold, now I am told that it is not uncommon for people to observe a resemblance between him and Sir Forbes Robertson. It is when the man preaches that his rather slight figure expands and fills out measurably.

In the pulpit Dr. Combs transgresses many of the conventional rules; he puts his hands in his pockets—most any pocket, leans against the desk most any old way—does a dozen and one eccentric things—yet he is never aimless in movement nor ungraceful; every move fits in, dovetails as it were, into the sermon which is supreme. There is an oratory of presence where the very figure of the speaker impresses and sways; there is an oratory of light where the speaker, by lucidity of statement and cogency of argument, illumines whatever subject he selects; and there is also an oratory of passion so fervid and tumultuous as to transfigure the speaker even though he be slight of build. Combs' oratory is the oratory of passion for the most part, though of light, also.

In passing it may be observed that Dr. Combs does not often look straight at his audience in the delivery of his sermon,



Rev. George H. Combs

but oftenest, like some other noted speakers, above their heads into space.

II. ASSET OF VOICE.

Dr. Combs' voice as a voice is not extraordinary. That is to say, I suppose we have in our communion over a hundred or so ministers with voices as good, but I know no minister, or public speaker of any kind, who uses his voice so fully and with such results as George H. Combs. His voice, though pleasant, is not especially musical and in the higher registers, like most men's voices, it is thin, but in the middle and lower registers his voice is full, resonant, and possesses a sort of electric timbre. I say again that I know no public speaker who uses his voice so fully as Dr. Combs. In the course of some sermons he trips upstairs and down, in that vocal house of his, ever so lithesomely. Years ago I do not think this preacher used the higher register much. In his convention addresses he seldom if ever does, and wisely so, for the voice in alternately high and low pitch is not a good speaking voice before a big assembly. Half the audience will lose the low note and a third will not be sure of the words spoken in the higher register.

In the course of a sermon with us one evening Dr. Combs told most dramatically the story of Thomas Hardy's "Tess," and when he came to the description of the killing by the wronged woman of the man who had wronged her, the preacher cried out in a shrill, high tone that went to the marrow of one's soul the word "DEAD," then in the deep register and with expulsive tone and with a timbre tingling with terror he exclaimed, "DEAD." No actor could have surpassed the thing, and its effect was marked by a stillness profound. One could have heard the proverbial "pin drop." However, I should say, and in so saying I believe I speak for the average auditor, Dr. Combs' voice is most effective in the middle and lower registers. For one thing, everybody hears him when he so speaks, and when he employs the higher and lower tones auditors with defective hearing, and there are always a number of such present, miss much of the discourse and frequently lose the entire thread of thought.

I have heard only one other notable preacher who employs the high note right along and with dramatic power, and that is John McNeill. Campbell Morgan occasionally resorts to a somewhat similar use of his voice and is particularly effective in a sort of sibilant or stage-whispering in some dramatic passage. I am believing, however, it is a use of the voice which should be rarely, not regularly employed even where the minister can use it effectively. For one reason the high notes put nervous folk on the anxious seat speculating whether the voice will hold out to the tip-top or break on the way.

III. ASSET OF VOCABULARY AND DICTION.

Here it is that George H. Combs is in a class quite by himself in our ministry. For brilliant phraseology, scintillating diction, rich and varied vocabulary I never heard anywhere Combs' superior. I know preachers who are his superior in sustained diction of a more scholarly style, but I know but one who equals him in rhetorical versatility and that is Bishop William A. Quayle. Combs' sentences are unique and variable, sometimes they are as forked lightning, sometimes like patter of raindrops in summertime, sometimes like biting wind; or to change the figure, sometimes they are as a broadsword, sometimes as a bludgeon, sometimes a rapier—so brilliant and beautiful they are occasionally as to quite bewilder the hearer.

Combs' syntax is occasionally eccentric, many of his words unusual, some of them not in the dictionary, a few he may like overmuch, as for example, "full-throatedly," "bottomed," "worthwhileness," etc., etc.—words I set down in my mental notebook as I heard them fall frequently from his lips. Such a vocabulary as Dr. Combs possesses can be acquired only by wide reading, hard study, and a great deal of writing. A hint as to this preacher's method: he told me he wrote for twelve years practically everything, now he writes practically nothing. He doesn't need to write, that is apparent. Some of the sermons he preached for us he prepared in his room at the hotel; he showed me how he did it. He took the pasteboard case that his shirts came in from the laundry—he says for years he has depended upon his laundry for his sermon-making stationery—and upon that rather cumbersome piece of pasteboard he sketched in slender fashion a sermon in outline. Just a few lines or heads, and all on a piece of pasteboard surface big enough to write the full text of the Declaration of Independence. Before going into the pulpit he transferred the outline to a hotel letterhead, carried this with him into the pulpit, and consulted it very seldom in the course of his sermon. It all seemed very simple, very easy, and doubtless was —for him. But back of such ease is painstaking labor such as only Dr. Combs, his wife, and maybe an intimate friend or two, can know or appreciate.

IV. ASSET OF EVANGELISTIC PASSION.

I know not how it may be with George H. Combs in his own church Sunday after Sunday, but I do know that in the services with us he manifested an evangelistic power and passion that amazed me. Especially was this true in the invitational part of his sermons. Here he was direct, hortatory, appealing, winsome. He frequently gave a third and fourth invitation; what is more important, quite a number came after the second and third invitation. His evangelistic message was linked closely and securely to the great fundamentals of the faith which he preached dogmatically but with widest tolerance and gracious spirit toward those who might differ from him. Holding tenaciously to the miraculous he said he believed our attitude toward those who had intellectual difficulties with the miracles should be that of tolerance and "widest fellowship."

Dr. Combs is not afraid of humor in his sermons, he does not avoid a laugh when it comes in his way even at a Sunday morning service, neither does he turn aside to get a laugh. He is exquisitely tender at times and some passages in his sermons are fraught with pathos such as to stir his hearers to the deeps of their emotions. Combs' preaching is thoughtful. Those who hear him must think. He supplies much food for thought. His is an intellectual appeal but not scholastically so. In his earlier ministry he probably permitted the literary and rhetorical side of his sermons to sway him overmuch—indeed, he says this of himself. But today the content of Combs' sermon bulks larger in his conscience than does the form. The form can now take care of itself, it is "of age" so to speak. Combs is not a "literary preacher." He is a gospel preacher of persuasive power, whose message is always worth while and never commonplace in arrangement.

V. ASSET OF THE HUMAN ELEMENT.

George H. Combs is very, very human and for that I love him all the better. He tells with considerable chagrin how in his early ministry he sought for the Christian life a brilliant minded politician who was not a communicant but a regular attendant at his church. For that man the preacher worked overtime polishing his sermons, embellishing, ornamenting. One day this noted man said to Dr. Combs: "Doctor, I wish I had your scrapbook;" and as the pastor of the Independence Boulevard church told this, his eyes flashed fire. "Think of it, he wanted not my Christ, by my SCRAPBOOK, and" he added, "from that time Christ has been in my sermons more and my scrapbook less." I think we have often misjudged George H. Combs. I am sure I have. We have deemed him selfish sometimes because he lives so much to himself. As a matter of fact, he has had to live much to himself if he live at all. Physically he is not strong, never has been, probably never will be, though he is stronger now than he has ever been in his life. He is a bundle of nerves and as sensitive as a magnetic needle to anything that distracts or annoys. His strength is easily exhausted. He cannot spend more than two hours at a time in a social way without having to withdraw, go to his room and rest. When he is through preaching he is limp. The great and good people to whom this man ministers know, though perhaps only partially, this condition of their pastor's health and his high-tensioned temperament, and they have royally safeguarded and protected him, else they would not have him now.

Finally, to the many accomplishments of George Hamilton Combs there is a crowning one I wish he might be privileged to add ere God calls him home. I wish this man might be called upon some time to deliver the "Yale Lectures on Preaching." We have no man better qualified both by experience and natural gifts for that task than he, and as yet our communion has not been represented in that historic cause. Lecturing to preachers is a privilege that this magnetic minister much enjoys and in which he is superb. The memory of his address to our own ministerial association on "Preachers and Preaching" lingers with me as linger the flute-like notes of Tetrazzini in an aria I heard her sing five years ago in Covent Garden, London.

Greater praise than this I can pay no man.

France Learning to Call Upon God

In this time when many are losing faith in the power of good, as a result of the great war now overwhelming the lands across the sea, it is heartening to find a thinker who sees a silver lining within the present cloud of war. Mr. Vance Thompson writes thus hopefully in the New York Sun: "France has found unity, and has learned in the darkness to call upon God." In these two facts, he declares, there is a hint of what Europe may be. He states that he is hopeful also of Germany, Austria and the other powers engaged in the struggle but he writes of France because he knows more about her. We quote the following startling words from this article:

EXTRAORDINARY things—things that had seemed impossible to the wildest prophet or dream-reader last July. There is no exaggeration (for I have no need of it) in saying that a new France has been born—as in war-pains unspeakable. For fifteen years France has been in the hands of the politicians, whereof you know.

When you looked out of your window what you saw was moral, political, social anarchy.

Came the war.

France had done brave things in every sphere of human activity. Her musicians were in the front of all nations; she was at the head of science and scholarship; from painting to flying she led; but it seemed that her high spiritual destiny was to end in the gutter and the mud, and that her political destiny was to die in the appetites and greeds of the politicians.

MEN REBORN IN A DAY.

In a day—in an hour—war knit together the old energies of the race. (And it was a strange thing to see laughter die in France. After the first horror of unexpectedness was conquered, the faces of men and women were wiped clean of fear and, also, of laughter—as soap-suds is wiped from a plate. It was strange to see the new faces—grave and steady, awed but courageous. Faces of Gaulish men and women.)

The old energy came back; and the old unity. Priest and Socialist, cleric and revolutionnaire, were merely Frenchmen. And the old high idealism came back. It was a strange thing—unfamiliar and uncomfortable—to the middle-aged generation.

CROWDS THRONG NOTRE DAME.

Some day the history of the war will give a page to that strange scene when Paris—the shrill, derisive Paris you know—swarmed and jammed its way into Notre Dame. And they filled the vast cathedral, from wall to wall. They hung like bunches of grapes on the ancient pillars. And outside the parks and the square were black with humanity—kneeling.

No matter what happens to France, she is facing things in a new way.

If this war were merely a dirty squabble of greeds—trade-grabbers jostling for places in the sun—there would be small hope for civilization. But the men who have watched it—as I have—coming slowly to an issue, since 1907, know it is the inevitable struggle between the old forces of democracy and armed aristocracy. And it is already bearing fruit in all the nations. I know more about that in England and France, but I am sure it is true of the others. Humanity is knit pretty close in these days. . . .

NATIONS "SHED SELFISHNESS."

In the first anger and surprise of war lots of foolish, bad things were said and written in England, as elsewhere. What you hear now is different—and what you read. I think Lloyd-George voiced it first; and his words are worth knowing. He said the nations were "shedding themselves of selfishness," and making a new Europe—a new world. That view is worth while. And the newspapers are dropping the tone of brag and anathema. The London "Times" in a fine way denounces those who exult over the enemy—or envy them. This article in The Times—and if you know that essentially English newspaper you will agree with me—shows definitely how new and splendid an ideal has risen up in the public mind of England. A new ideal has risen where there were sloth, obscurity, and fatted insolence. You can see it in this: "The comparison we have to make is with our own ideal, not with other existing men or nations. It does not matter whether we are inferior or superior to them in any respect; it matters only whether we are doing our best to reach our own ideal. In that effort men and nations alike would neither hate themselves nor others, but only forget themselves and all comparisons with others; and when comparisons were forced upon them by the struggle for life they would not suffer them to trouble the peace of their souls with pride or hate or envy."

Flying Above Europe's Battle Front

BY JOHN T. McCUTCHEON.

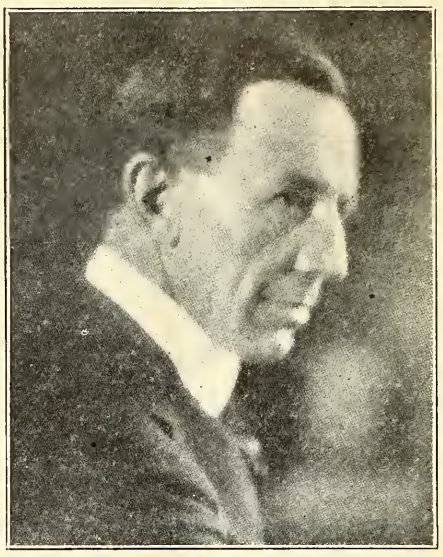
Mr. John T. McCutcheon, cartoonist for the Chicago Tribune, was sent to Europe by that paper a few weeks ago. He had often since the beginning of the war expressed a desire to go up in one of the war aeroplanes, but he did not dream that such a desire would ever be gratified. To his surprise, a German aero captain took up the matter at once with his general, and the following narrative, from the Tribune, indicates the result:

"WHICH one of you gentlemen wished to go up?" asked Capt. Walter, chief of the flying corps. I was indicated as the candidate.

"This is the man," said Consul Robert J. Thompson, American representative at Aachen, who was one of our party. "He is the only one of our party who is not married."

"We will use this 'double-decker' over here," said Capt. Walter, "and you will be taken up by one of our greatest flyers, Ingold. He has made many records for Germany. For a long time he held the endurance record, having flown for sixteen hours without landing. We have now beaten that record, however."

The captain led the way across the field to where a great, massive, gray biplane was standing. I was impressed by the strength and size of it. No American machine that I had ever seen was nearly so heavy and strong. A crowd of aviators, staff officers, and our party of civilians followed and watched the preparations for the flight.



Mr. John T. McCutcheon

MAKING READY.

"What size is your hat?" I was asked, after which a leather helmet was given me to try on. It seemed all right, but the captain sent for another. Evidently it was important that the helmet fit properly. Two pairs of goggles were tried on before a snug and secure pair was found. Then a Bavarian staff officer gave me his leather coat to slip on over my heavy ulster. It came only to my hips, and the effect was such that I looked like a tribesman from central Asia.

"This coat has my officer's shoulder straps," said the owner of the coat, "so that if you fall into the hands of the enemy you will be treated as a prisoner of war and not a spy. If you were captured in civilian clothes you would be shot as a spy."

I was conscious of a new thrill of interest. It was evident that going up along the battle front was not entirely devoid of serious possibilities.

Another officer then brought a woolen muffler, which was wound tightly around my neck. The goggles were given a final adjustment to see that they were windtight, and I was asked to climb on board.

Ingold had already taken his place in the rear seat, a sort of cockpit, above which only his head and shoulders appeared.

A SWIFT CLIMB.

The engine was started, and there was a tremendous roar as the speed of the great propeller forward was speeded up and slowed down in a preliminary test.

In another moment the roar rose to a high key and the aeroplane moved forward with increasing speed and within only a couple of hundred feet left the ground.

We climbed swiftly. In an incredibly short time the houses and wagons and roads below shrunk to toy proportions. A long wagon train of ammunition became tiny objects on a white road, which stretched off for miles to the north. Railway trains, loaded with troops, contracted in size until they were toy trains.

I did not know what the pilot's instructions were, but at first we flew northward, away from the battle front, just to the south of Laon. This was a distinct disappointment. But all the time we were climbing to higher altitudes, and I soon realized that the wind was fitful and treacherous. The machine gave sudden and disquieting lurches, and occasionally would fall for a few feet. . . .

Below me, like a relief map, stretched the vast plain, dotted with clusters of houses, with railways and roads and checkered with beautiful fields and patches of wood.

Ahead of me was the propeller, but so high that the blast of air from it passed over my head. In my pocket there were two handles of steel to which one might cling, and along the forward edge of the pit was a leather-padded rim that would break the shock of a bad landing. There was no altitude gauge in my compartment and so I could not determine how high we were. Above me the clouds were very close, and the expanse of country unfolding below me was vast.

THE GREATEST BATTLE FRONT IN HISTORY.

When we swung about we were several miles north of Laon. In a wide half circle we sheered about until the city lay dead ahead. We were still climbing, probably for the serener air levels above, and the wagon trains and long lines of motor trucks below were microscopic in size. Soon we passed the aviation field and left it behind. This meant that we were to fly south of Laon and thus see the greatest battle front that has ever been known in history.

The town of Laon is perched on a hill 600 feet high. The great cathedral, rising 200 feet above the street levels, dominates the town as the Cologne cathedral dominates Cologne. From its towers one may see Paris, and from the chateau, or prefecture, where the general's staff is quartered, one may see, day and night, the fierce artillery duel that is rising six or seven miles to the south. And yet, notwithstanding the crowning eminence of the town and its cathedral, they now looked like toy houses far below. The cathedral had become squat and had flattened out to the altitude of the smaller buildings around it. It seemed incredibly small. The great normal schools which now are field hospitals and which look off from the rim of the crescent hill across the rolling valleys and hills to the south were like miniature blocks which seemed hardly to be higher than the valleys below them.

Elevations had flattened and instead of hills the country to the south of Laon was like a plain, crisscrossed with roads, spattered with houses and villages and checkered with green and yellow fields. Off to the south was the ribbon of the Aisne, along which the mightiest battle of the ages has raged for weeks. Farther away to the southwest were the dim outlines of Paris, seventy miles away.

TRAGEDIES ENVELOPED IN SMOKE.

It was a wonderful sight. Human beings were specks, and I could not see the tragedy of their movements, but the huge clouds of belching smoke from the French and English batteries and the answering bursts of unfolding white billows from the German batteries told how savagely the great artillery duel was raging and meant that at every moment men were being torn to pieces and others were soon to be carried away from the field on stretchers. . . .

The noise of the motor in the aeroplane was so great that it drowned the sound of the firing. I could not hear the deep growl of the guns. And if by any chance a balloon gun of the allies had bombarded us as we flew, we could not have known it until we saw the white balls of smoke around us or felt the sudden and violent convulsion of the air. And if a hostile aeroplane had hovered over us, as the events of the next hour proved to be possible, we could not have heard the noise or felt the throb of the propellers.

Ingold steered the plane south of Laon, passing over the Faubourg d'Ardon at a great height and swinging off in a wide circle as we reached the edge of Bruyere.

BACK TO EARTH.

In the skies there was no sign of a hostile flyer, although at that moment a French machine was rising into the clouds from somewhere back of the line of battle.

As we passed over Laon, northward bound, I felt the head of the machine dip and start on its long and gradual drop to the aviation field, which at that height was so tiny that the long white cross of bunting on the ground was a mere mark in the flat plains. The wagon trains still crept in, a procession of ants, and the toy engines were still pulling their endless trains of wounded going north and of fresh troops coming south.

We made a beautiful landing on the white bunting and bounced along for a few rods until the machine was safely on its wheels. Then a wide swing about and in another moment we were climbing out. The flight was over and I had the happy consciousness of having safely undergone an experience which, of all others, I would rather have had than any other in the battle zone. A crowd gathered about the machine as I got out of my leather coat and the helmet of leather.

It was then that we saw for the first time the French flyer high in the clouds to the south of us.

Christianity's Advance in India

With a Statement of Some Obstacles to be Overcome in that Country.

BY GEORGE W. BROWN.

A CENSUS report is not usually considered interesting reading. But there are usually a number of interesting things to be found in an Indian census report. I have to hand the report for Central India. Central India as a whole is one of the most difficult fields in all India. This is because it is a group of native or feudatory states, the rulers of which have certain rights, but are not permitted to do all things they might like to do. There are twenty-nine states considered of sufficient importance to be named in the report. There are many others, some of them merely a village or two in size. The total population of Central India is a little over nine millions. It is of importance to us because it borders on much of our field.

Part of a Dispensary and Hospital in India.

The petty rajas or kings are all non-Christian, most of them Hindus. They are on the whole very much opposed to the preaching of Christianity in their territories, though some of the larger ones permit preaching. The chief mission at work in this area is the Canadian Presbyterian, and they are a fine lot of missionaries. They find most ready entrance through their medical work, for this mission believes much in the missionary doctor. Another opportunity for entering a field is found in their uplifting work among the jungle tribes, and many of these have been turned to Christ.

SOME CENSUS REVELATIONS.

But to the interesting things in the census report. One of them is that some of the petty rajas and village owners gave particular instruction before the census was taken that no one in the village was to report himself as a Christian. So many Christians reported themselves as belonging to the caste in which they had been born. In some cases this matter was found out and corrected. But prejudice, though strongest against Christians, was not confined to them. There are several dialects of Hindu. One of them is known as Urdu. It differs chiefly from the other dialects in having many Persian and Arabic words in it, in its use of the Persian or modified Arabic character instead of the ordinary Hindu character, and in being the tongue of the Mohammedan community. The census officer tried to find out the number of persons speaking each of the different languages and dialects. In the chief Mohammedan state in the group there was a strong feeling that simply because the state was Mohammedan, all the subjects thereof should be returned as speaking Urdu, regardless of the actual facts. The census officer insisted on recording the truth, and then the matter was taken up in one of the leading Mohammedan papers, and an attempt was made to make political capital out of the affair, since the census officer was thus trampling down the sacred and inalienable rights of the Mohammedan religion!

EARLY MARRIAGE THE RULE.

As in other parts of India, early marriage is the rule, especially among women. At the age of twenty, 84 per cent of all the girls are married. Those who are not married by the age of twenty are as a rule either defective physically or morally, or else immoral. And so the census report goes on, "It may thus be said without exaggeration that ordinarily a genuine 'old maid' is unknown in the Agency except among Christians or others." "Others" refers to Parsis and few of the reformed Hindu sects, whose numbers are quite small. Yet the Hindus are themselves becoming conscious of the great evil these early marriages entail, and a certain social reform society in the area has advocated a rule that the minimum age of marriage for boys should be twenty and for girls sixteen, but there is no public sentiment to support them, so the rule will be for a long time unheeded.

Widows there are in abundance, from a month old upward. Except in the castes considered low in the social scale, widow remarriage, even of the mere child widows, is rare. Hence non-remarriage of widows, like the seclusion of females, is an index to one's position in the social scale. Tribes which formerly practiced widow remarriage are gradually abandoning it.

To persons interested in missions, of course, the most interesting matter is that connected with the spread of Christianity. The superintendent of the census feels that while progress has been made in the conversion of the inhabitants to Christianity, this progress will be checked, because the castes from which converts have been chiefly drawn are being gradually drawn into the vortex of orthodox Hinduism, and their conversion will be continually a matter of more and more difficulty. On the other hand the returns of the chief mission at work in the area show a steadily increasing number of converts. But here is what the census officer has to say in regard to the spread of Christian influence in general.

CHRISTIANTY SPREADING.

"While on the one hand circumstances militate against the rapid extension of Christianity through the agency as an active religion, the extension of civilization will tend to facilitate the spread of its educating influence, and this is more apparent every year. Although the states of Central India are very conservative and more slowly permeated than British India by the influence of western ideas and ideals, yet the steady rising of the ethical plane due to this influence is sufficiently obvious."

As to actual results achieved, the report remarks that the Canadian Presbyterian Mission had increased its adherents by over 1,200 during the last decade, a gain of 127 per cent. Surely this is something worth striving for, especially when one knows that all possible forces short of absolute murder are brought to bear to prevent people from becoming Christian, and it is with the utmost difficulty in many places that one may preach. For us who live in British territory where restrictions are less numerous, the encouragement is great. We too have had a large growth in the same time, though the Canadian Mission is a few years older than ours and has a large number of missionaries at work.

Two Poems

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

DARKNESS AND LIGHT.

The man who hath within
No guiding light,
Walks 'neath the blazing sun
As in the night.

Whom God illumines dwells
In undimmed day;
Through storm and night he treads
A clear, sure way.

—From The Sunday School Times.

THE OPTIMISM OF FAITH.

Above the raucous cries
Of world-old wrong,
Faith hears, in accents deep,
Truth's battle-song.

Athwart the fearful gloom
Of sin's black night,
Faith hears, slow-conquering,
Love's kindly light.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

DON'T APOLOGIZE!

WHATEVER else you may do, brother pastor, or fail to do, when you go into your pulpit on Sunday, March 7, do not apologize to your people because you are asking them on that day to give money for foreign missions. It is no time for a whining tone. It is no time for "ifs or ands" or any kind of qualifying phrases.

It is a time for a straight thrust at the pocket-book and the bank account through the conscience. If anybody pleads hard times, you are to plead the incomparably harder times of the missionaries and the missionary cause!

If anybody complains that his income is cut down, you are to declare it as the will of God that in these days of world-wide suffering every Christian's expenditures ought also to be cut down, down to the bone of absolute necessity, so that he may have even more than in ordinary times to give to Christian work.

It is time for churchmen to practice a sane but drastic asceticism. The mission work of all Christendom rests upon the American Church while Europe is at war.

If Christ's churchmen fail this year to support His work adequately it ought not be because you, brother minister, fail to show them plainly their unprecedented privilege.

COLLEGE CREEDS.

OUR ATTENTION was recently called to some correspondence in which the president of a college among the Disciples asked for suggestions regarding some form of agreement or bond that should insure contributors to the college against the danger of any future departure from the form of doctrine held at the time of the gift.

The statement was made that donors to educational institutions might desire to have their gifts so safeguarded against the danger of being used to support teachings contrary to their views. This college president offered as a suggestion to meet the emergency a creed of some eight or ten articles such as almost any individual Disciple would be willing to endorse as a private expression of his religious views.

We think it would have been an interesting adventure for any man to have offered Alexander Campbell, W. K. Pendleton, O. A. Burgess, James A. Garfield, B. A. Hinsdale or any other of our pioneer educators a creed of this sort with the suggestion that it should be embodied either in the charter of a college or in any agreement made between the institution and a donor. The Disciples have certainly drifted a long way from their original moorings to be able to contemplate without indignation such a perversion of their earlier ideals.

The difficulty with such a creedal statement in connection with any educational institution, congregation, missionary society or other Christian organization, is that it is both futile and subversive of the fundamental principles of the Disciples. It is futile for the reason that if our simple principle of faith in Jesus as Lord and Savior is not sufficient to hold an institution or an individual to loyalty, then no set of propositions, however elaborate they may be, can accomplish that purpose. And it is subversive of all that is basic in the history of the Disciples because we have always insisted that there was but one item in our faith which we cared to make a test of fellowship, and that any addition to that central confession was impertinent and arbitrary.

Another evil feature about all such creed-making in the administration of educational trusts is the fact that no man can write a creed which does not have to be revised within a generation. It is a singular fact that the very people who have contended for "the creed that needs no revision," meaning by that the simple confession of faith in Christ, could gain their consent to elaborate a new creed which is bound to make trouble for their educational foundations within a generation.

Donors to religious institutions, like donors to every other good work, must either trust to the wise and faithful administration of funds by those to whom they are committed or else keep their gifts to themselves. There is no way of endowing an opinion or of entailing a dogma. The truth of the gospel may be trusted to vindicate itself to every generation. And a man of means must be singularly distrustful of the truth he holds if he cannot commit it in the spirit of Jesus to the men who are charged with the administration of educational funds.

We will not go back upon the fundamental principle of our religious history. Having come out of Egypt we will not now return to the flesh pots of the past.

THE KIND OF PREACHER WANTED.

SOMETIMES we hear of the care which churches ought to exercise in the choice of ministers lest they should find in their pulpit a man of unsound and latitudinarian views. In a certain type of religious journalism one reads frequent references to the necessity of choosing with care the men who are to be the interpreters of the Word of God.

This is proper and right. No church wants a minister who is lacking in character, in education, or in loyalty to the Word of God. The gravest danger is likely to arise in the instances in which these requisites to ministerial success are neglected.

But if some of our churches are careful to choose men who are "sound" in the faith, meaning by that expression an adherence to the orthodoxy of a past generation, a literalistic interpretation of the Bible and a legalistic message, there are other churches, and their number is increasing, that demand a different sort of leadership and are careful to secure what they need.

Recently a letter came under our observation which was representative of this newer and growing class of churches. It was written by an elder of the congregation, the superintendent of county instruction, and it set forth in unmistakable language the desire of the church to secure a man modern enough in preparation and in spirit to meet the needs of the time. It was specified that he should be an educated man, one broad enough in intellectual horizon not to be scared at evolution and the higher criticism, capable of meeting educated men upon their own level of thinking, and acquainted in some adequate way with the great social movements of the time through which Christianity is so urgently and effectively expressing itself.

This church officer represents the point of view of a very large and increasing number of laymen in our churches. The average intelligent Christian desires to sit under the preaching of a man who has faced without fear the burning questions of scholarship and of the social order and is trying to give them an adequate and convincing interpretation.

No such layman wants a minister who is either an intellectual coward or shirker, one who trifles with truth thinking to keep friendly with everyone thereby, one who backs under the protecting cover of dogma at the approach of an idea. The day of such a ministry is rapidly passing. The churches are asking for men of consecration, intelligence and courage. For such men there is a great and growing place in the ministry of the Disciples, as in that of all the churches.

THE PEACE SPIRIT.

THE Church of Christ is set for the promotion of peace. Its Master was hailed as the Prince of Peace and the bringer of good will among men. The terrible collapse of international amity in Europe has aroused in the hearts of Christian men of all the neutral nations, and especially in the United States, the desire to stop the conflict and to bring in an honorable and lasting era of peace.

It is now acknowledged by most of those who speak and write upon the subject that the armaments of the European nations now contending were the most serious element among the many that caused the war. Every ship added to the fighting force of a navy is an added argument in favor of conflict. Every regiment of men enlisted and every cannon cast strengthens the possibility of war.

Yet so strong is the obsession of militancy even in America that people who on general principles are advocates of peace join the clamor for an increased army and navy with the affirmation that America is now able to see how necessary a strong war footing is to safety. It is difficult to understand the logic of such statements. An adequate police force we may need by land and by sea for emergencies such as occasionally arise through labor disturbances or the necessity of safeguarding our citizens in other parts of the earth.

But we neither need, nor can we secure a larger army and navy except at the price of conscription. The average American citizen has little use for the routine of military or naval life except when he feels there is need for it. The men who enlist in the army and navy in such numbers under the stimulus of a war rumor, such as we had a few months ago on our southwestern border, desert again the moment the scare subsides; and the business of recruiting is constantly the despair of the sergeants at the recruiting headquarters.

The war lobby, supported by the makers of arms and ammunition and the money lenders, keeps up its ceaseless agitation regarding the danger of war and the need of preparation. This war party is equally active among all the nations, for it knows no country. It has had its way with unhappy Europe in a manner which no man ten years ago would have believed possible. It will embroil America with Germany, with Japan or with any other nation if it can possibly do so. But if war arises with any other people it will be because we have been seduced by this war party into those very acts of preparation and aggression which are always the prelude to conflict.

If America comes to the issue of arms with any other people on earth the fault will lie with us and our selfish and criminal instigators of animosity.

IOWA'S RETURN.

IOWA'S famous mulct law, passed nearly twenty years ago, the effect of which was to inhibit the operation of the Prohibition law that had made that state celebrated in the pioneer days of the Prohibition movement, has now itself been repealed by legislature.

This brings into force again the fundamental Prohibition statute, and adds Iowa to the list of states in which the saloon is outlawed.

It is interesting to recall that Governor Drake, whose signature carried the mulct law into effect, was a Disciple, and that Governor Clarke, whose signature now repeals it, is also a Disciple.

JUDGING "BILLY" SUNDAY.

AS a phenomenon requiring to be analyzed and judged the Rev. "Billy" Sunday has set the opinion of the whole American Church crossways. Some declare that he is profane, mercenary, shifty, "a very defective Christian," a plagiarist, a hypnotist, impertinent, a plyer of a trade.

Others welcome him as a prophet of God, a vessel of divine wrath and grace. They say that his language is no more profane than was Jesus', that his generosity is shown in his giving to the Lord a tenth of all that he receives, that he is as sincere as any man, that his whole ambition is to serve Christ who has with marvelous grace saved him.

Still others are able to make many interesting combinations of those diverse judgements. One religious newspaper, published in Chicago, calls him a great many names and then abruptly closes its editorial with the simple declaration that if Mr. Sunday comes to Chicago that paper will heartily support him, will pass no criticism upon him, and will allow no other body to criticize him through its columns. No reasons are given for the promise of such unqualified loyalty.

The Christian Century has little if any interest in the discussion of Mr. Sunday's personality and motives. After the Church is done with Mr. Sunday's personality there will have to be considered Mr. Sunday's significance. In that discussion we have profound interest. We can perhaps suggest the opening questions in such a discussion.

What does it signify that the modern Church produces such an evangelist as Mr. Sunday? After all, Mr. Sunday is not to be judged as a mere personality; he is to be judged as a sample of the fruit that the modern Church produces. It is a great illusion to imagine that Mr. Sunday is unique. He is essentially no different from all modern revivalists. His alleged profanity, mercenariness, and other such qualities are but idiosyncrasies, not essentials.

The essential thing about typical modern revivalism is its artificial manipulation of the stimuli of mass psychology as a means of reaching the individual.

The question to be asked about "Billy" Sunday is the same as the question to be asked about Mr. Scoville or Mr. Chapman or any other revivalist: What is to be said about a religion that has to propagate itself that way?

To our mind modern revivalism is the Church's confession that its membership is lacking in inner spritual life. It reveals the fact that our religion is not individualized, that the locus of our motives is in an artificial group rather than in our individual souls.

Mr. Sunday has special significance because he makes this hollowness of our spiritual life so much more obvious than does any body else.

EAGER FOR SPIRITUAL MESSAGE.

THE hunger of our people for a spiritual life would be pathetic if it were not so heartening. Our first page editorial this week refers to the widespread interest awakened by our recent series of articles in which we undertook to set forth the outlines of the spiritual task to which Disciples of Christ seem to be divinely called. Many pages would be required to print the letters we have received. But we cannot forbear to quote these three, not for self-praise but because they indicate the quality and tread of sentiment among the Disciples.

A Missouri pastor writes:

> You have discovered the true irenicon. Our divided Disciple household can be reconciled by your interpretation of the principles of our movement. We have a great plea—far greater than we have realized—and we have not been equal to it. Your articles should be printed in book form and circulated by the tens of thousands among our people.

A minister in one of the most important city churches of the brotherhood, writes thus:

> I have thanked God a hundred times for those articles. You know how enthusiastic I have always been for the "Century." I have always believed that you were leading us aright, that you were taking us forward in the way God would have us go. But I always felt that you were taking us away from the historic ground of the Disciples, and I believed it was right that you should do so, for those historic contentions had lost their appeal to me. Imagine my gratitude and joy when I opened my eyes to find that this "progressive" movement of ours led directly to the ground on which Thomas Campbell stood! You have rendered me a service for which I cannot ever fully reward you.

An accomplished woman writes:

> Oh, how we need your message of the spiritual life! Our former pastor was, I think, groping after just such a message as you are giving us in this series. I wonder if he is a subscriber to the "Century." If he is not, I wish you would send him the copies containing this series and send the bill to me. I am sure he is hungering for just such spiritual bread as this.

CHINA PRAYING FOR EUROPE!

EMBARRASSED missionaries in China who know not what to say when the "heathen" point to warring Europe and ask if that is what Christianity means, welcome gratefully the proclamation of President Yuan Shi-Kai appointing a national day of prayer to the Christian's God for the peace of Europe. It gives the missionaries a chance to make confession to God, in the ears of the Chinese, that Christendom itself is far from being Christian.

One can hardly imagine a more remarkable token of the new day in China than is this proclamation of her President.

Native Christians and missionaries are thus enabled to make clear the distinction between Christianity itself and those who profess it, and to set forth the opportunity faced by every oriental nation to overtake and, perhaps, overpass Christendom itself in embodying the grace and principles of Christ.

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Would Make Chicago Religious Center.

J. Gilchrist Lawson, the head of the Family Altar League, has interested religious leaders considerably with his plan of erecting in Chicago a great building to be the home of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. Dr. Biederwolf, who is secretary of the commission on evangelism, has agreed to submit the plan to the council at the next meeting of its executive committee. Mr. Lawson proposes that the building should be built on lines similar to those of the British Museum and that a great religious research library, the greatest in the world, should be housed in this building.

Dr. Eliot Says Church is Inefficient.

In an address before Philadelphia Unitarians, Dr. Charles W. Eliot charged the church with impotency in the face of the present war and said the war had in part resulted from the message of fear that has been presented by the church. His address has been published in pamphlet form by the American Unitarian Association. Dr. Eliot says of the "future religion": "It is a Christianity which will be the friend and ally of all that is good and ennobling in literature, science and art, and will avail itself without fear of all the new means of teaching and helping men which successive generations shall discover, and of all the innocent enjoyments and social pleasures, while resisting effectively every unwholesome or degrading influence on human society. It is a Christianity which will recognize that the pursuit of happiness in this world is legitimate for every human being, and that the main function of government is to protect and further men in that pursuit by securing to the community health, education, wholesome productive labor and liberty."

Teach Ethics to Young Ministers.

A course on the professional ethics of the minister will be inaugurated shortly in the Union Biblical Institute which is connected with Defiance College, an institution of the "Christian" denomination. It is stated by the authorities of the college that there is much friction among ministers because of unfraternal conduct and that ministerial courtesy needs more accurate definition. There is no textbook on the subject and it is stated that there is nowhere else in the United States where such a course is being given.

Minister Wins A Thousand Dollars.

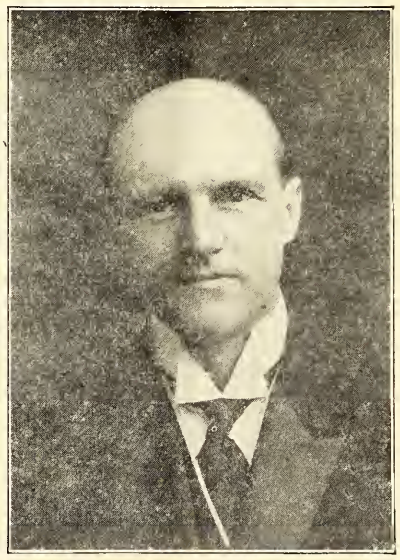
Rev. Robert A. Ashworth, pastor of the First Baptist church of Milwaukee, recently won a thousand dollar prize for an essay on "The Union Christian Forces in America." His statement contained 55,000 words. The prize competition was conducted by the American Sunday School Union of Philadelphia. The essay will be published in book form.

Dr. Broughton To Return to America.

Dr. Len G. Broughton, pastor of Christ church, London, who has been ill and recently resigned, has accepted a call from the First Baptist church of Knoxville, Tenn. He is expected in the United States before the end of February. The Knoxville church makes arrangement for a salary of six thousand dollars. Dr. Broughton will rest for a month before taking up his work at Knoxville, but expects to assume active work there about April 1.

Moody School Calls New Teacher.

The Rev. Robert McWatty Russell, D.D., LL.D., president of Westminster college, has just accepted the call of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago to the Chair of Doctrine and Homiletics, and also will be associated with the dean, Dr. James M. Gray, and other members of the faculty, in evangelistic and Bible conference work throughout the country as well as in the editing of the Christian Workers' Magazine. Dr. Russell is a native of Pennsylvania, where he received his college training and acted as principal of McKeesport academy before graduating from the Allegheny United Presbyterian seminary. He has held two pastorates, one for six years in Caledonia, N. Y., and the other for nearly sixteen years in the Sixth church of Pittsburgh, both being marked by evangelistic and missionary enthusiasm. During the period of his Pittsburgh ministry his church contributed more than $1,000,000 for home and foreign missionary purposes. In 1905 Dr. Russell accepted the presidency of Westminster college, since which time the plant has been completely renovated, and a total of more than $200,000 secured for betterment and endowment. Dr. Russell represented his denomination at the Pan-Presbyterian Conference in Edinburgh in 1896, and served as moderator of the General Assembly meeting in Atlanta in 1913.



Mr. Charles M. Alexander, famous gospel singer, who is leading in the work of the Pocket Testament League in England.

Pastor Plans to Fight Saloons.

Rev. Charles F. Wishart, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, of Chicago, announces that his church is planning a program by which it will enter into competition with saloons in its neighborhood. According to Mr. Wishart a recent survey revealed the following conditions in the district bounded by Sixteenth and Twenty-sixth streets and State street and Lake Michigan: thirty-three saloons, three churches, free lunch served in every saloon, twenty-one saloons furnish music, nineteen tolerate gambling, ten have private back rooms and four are equipped with booths."

Church Mission to Japan Closed.

Dr. Shailer Mathews and Dr. Sidney L. Gulick have finished their work in Japan as the envoys of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. Dr. Mathews spoke to large audiences at the Imperial university and at the Waseda university, where he discussed certain aspects of American life. He was the guest of Count Okuma at a luncheon. The addresses given in Japan have done much to help establish confidence in Japan in the good intentions of the United States.

Blind Song Writer Dies.

The life of Fanny J. Crosby, the blind hymn writer, has been a tragic one. She has been blind since childhood and has lived to the age of ninety-four years, dying recently at her home in Bridgeport, Conn. Among her songs in use in the churches today are "Jesus Is Tenderly Calling Today," "All the Way My Father Leads Me," "Awake, Awake," and "Jesus, Keep Me Near the Cross." The writer's blindness is implied in some of her songs, as is especially manifest in the following verses:

Some day the silver chord will break
And I no more as now shall sing;
But Oh, the joy when I shall wake
Within the palace of the King.

And I shall see Him face to face
And tell the story—Saved by grace,
And I shall see Him face to face
And tell the story—Saved by grace.

Fanny Crosby wrote 8,000 hymns of Christian worship which are sung throughout the world in Protestant churches.

Extension Fund for Church.

The trustees of the Christian Publishing Association of Dayton, O., the official publishing agency of the "Christian" denomination, met in Dayton recently to plan the raising of an extension fund of twenty thousand dollars for home mission work. Twenty per cent of the profits of the church publications go into this work. They plan to increase the circulation of the Herald of Gospel Liberty by 5,000.

Prayers for the Dead.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, the Primate of England, has issued a statement approving prayers for the dead. The Bishop of Stepney has compiled some prayers under the title, "A Memorial Service for Those Fallen in War." These prayers the archbishop approves, and he also offers to consider favorably other prayers submitted to him by the clergy. He said: "I desire loyally to maintain the distinction markedly drawn by Bishop Andrews and other great Anglican divines, between those beliefs based upon definite Scriptural proof, the teaching of which is incorporated in our public formularies, and on the other hand opinions and beliefs which fall short of such definite proof." The Primate concludes by saying that the whole matter is so important, and so much depends upon our practical action at this solemn time being at once "wise, faithful, and tenderly considerate," that he shall be glad to give further counsel on the subject to any of his diocesan clergy who may desire such help.

Dr. F. E. Clark Stirs Chigago.

The coming of Dr. F. E Clark, founder of the Christian Endeavor movement, has aroused great interest in Chicago recently. The evening that he spoke at the Moody church the crowd was so great as to overflow until four auditoriums in the neighborhood were filled. Dr. Clark has seen the Christian Endeavor movement grow from twenty members until it now numbers 80,000 societies with 4,000,000 members. Dr. Clark spends his time visiting societies in different parts of the world and is said to have traveled two million miles in this work. Dr. Ozora S. Davis spoke the same evening and he said the chief asset of Christian Endeavor was the spiritual character of the founder who had imparted of his spirit to the movement.

Book Causes Agitation.

Two Baptist papers, the Baptist World of Louisville, and The Standard of Chicago, are engaged in a discussion just now over a book by Professor S. J. Case that has recently been published by the University of Chicago Press. The title of the book is, "The Evolution of Early Christianity" and its author is a teacher in the Divinity School of the University of Chicago. The Standard endorsed the book, whereupon the World made charges of Unitarianism against Dr. Case and took The Standard to task for its sympathetic review of the book. The Standard, in its reply, says that the World does not seem to know the difference between history and theology.

Baptist Pastor Willing to "Take Orders."

A highly significant consequence of the consecration of the Bishop of Spokane which recently took place in Chicago and the pulpit message delivered on that occasion by Bishop Lawrence of Massachussetts was a sermon preached in Hyde Park Baptist Church, of Chicago by its pastor, the Rev. Charles W. Gilkey, in which he took the objective fact of the consecration and the interpretation of the office of the bishop given in the Bishop's sermon, as the only standing ground for a reasonable Christian unity. He professed himself willing to be found within this "inclusive circumference" of faith, and furthermore prophesied that the solution of unity must come, if it ever comes, in this direction. Mr. Gilkey's congregation in Chicago is composed largely of university professors, and more than thirty ministers of various denominations are members of it. He is a graduate of Harvard University, has studied and taken degrees in German universities, and is a close fried of Dr. Page, who became the Bishop of Spokane.

Protestant Missions Not Failure.

A Catholic organ asserted last fall that Protestant missions in Cuba had been a failure. It made the statement that the Episcopalians had spent a hundred thousand dollars a year in that island and three other denominations almost an equal amount. The paper said, "There were no Protestants then; there are none now." The Spirit of Missions has brought together statistics from several of the boards operating in Cuba and publishes them. From 1904 to 1914 the Episcopal mission shows an increase from 6 to 50 congregations, from 75 to 1,300 Sunday-school pupils, and from 200 to 1,800 communicants. The contributions for self-support have gone up from $1,000 to $28,000 per year. The largest expenditure the denomination has made is $35,000 per year. There are 3,686 Methodists in the island and other denominations have prospered correspondingly.

Dr. Forsyth Recovering.

Dr. Forsyth of England has been ill recently and went to Matlock for treatment. He has just returned home with his health greatly improved. Dr. Forsyth resumes his duties as principal of Hackney college with the new term.

Dr. Mann Elected Bishop.

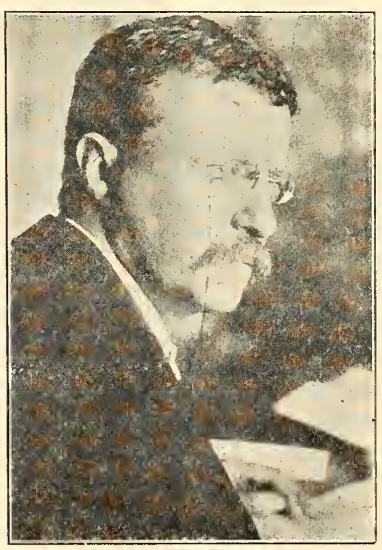
Rev. Alexander Mann, D.D., has been elected bishop suffragan of Newark. He comes to the episcopate from being rector of Trinity church, Boston, which was the church once the scene of the labors of Phillips Brooks. Dr. Mann is the son of a bishop, his father being now the missionary bishop of southern Florida. He took his B. A. at Hobart college and graduated from the General Theological seminary. He declined election as the bishop of Washington in 1908. He was president of the House of Deputies in 1913. His nearest competitor in the election was Rev. Edward L. Parsons, D.D.

THREE PRESIDENTS ON MISSIONS.

President Harrison (after a speech by Miss Singh, an Indian convert, at the New York Ecumenical Conference), "If I had a million dollars and had invested it all in missions and this was the only result, I should not want my money back."

* * *

President Roosevelt: "When I came back (from Africa), I wished I might have conveyed my experience to those people, often well-meaning people, who speak about the inefficiency of foreign missions. I think if they could have realized but the tenth part of the work that had been done they would understand that no more practical work, no work more productive of fruit for civilization, could exist than the work being carried on by the men and women who give their lives to preach the gospel of Christ to mankind."



Ex-President Roosevelt, who declares that no more productive work is being carried on for civilization than that being done by missionaries of the Cross.

* * *

President Taft: "Until I went to the Orient I did not realize the immense importance of foreign missions. No man can study the movement of modern civilization from an impartial standpoint and not realize that Christianity and the spread of Christianity are the only basis for hope of modern civilization in the growth of popular self-government. In the progress of civilization you can not over-estimate the immense importance of Christian missions. If in China today you try to find out what the conditions are in the interior, you consult in Peking the gentlemen who are supposed to know; and where do you go? You go at once to the missionaries."

Bishop Protests Divorce.

Bishop Moreland of the Episcopal church in California has been making a study of the divorce situation in his state. He finds that in 1910 San Francisco broke the divorce record of the world with one divorce to every 2.9 marriages. The increase in the last three years has been 400 per cent for Los Angeles and 486 per cent for Alameda. The bishop has also published statistics showing how many remarriages were performed by the different denominations. He gives the order as Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, Congregational, Lutheran, Roman Catholic and Episcopal. Forty per cent of the children in the orphanages of the state come from divorced parentage.

Baptists Go to Coast.

Many religious gatherings will go to the Pacific Coast this summer on account of the Exposition. The twenty-second Convocation of the Baptist Young People's Union of America will be held in Oakland, Cal., July 7-11. The Exposition will observe July 10 as Young People's Union day and a session will be held on the Exposition grounds.

Religious Tendencies in Brooklyn.

Recent statistics make clear that Brooklyn is not entitled to the proud title of "City of Churches." This former home of Henry Ward Beecher has some great churches, but in a population of two million people there are only 350,000 church members, Protestant and Catholic. The Congregationalists have three churches in Brooklyn of over two thousand members each.

Rector Is Acquitted.

The Socialist rector of the Episcopalian fold, Rev. Irwin Tucker, who was arrested along with others for marching in the streets of Chicago without a permit, has been acquitted. It has been found that the ordinance requiring such permit had been declared invalid by the supreme court several years ago. The actions of the rector were therefore entirely proper in the eyes of the law. The speeches of some of the anarchist leaders that day may result in their being arrested for seditious utterances but this is not yet certain.

Unitarian Missionary Work.

The Unitarians organized the American Unitarian Association ninety years ago. It is projected on broad lines for home missions and foreign missions, as well as certain forms of benevolence. The income of this society is fifty thousand dollars a year. The leaders of the denomination point out that aside from twenty-five leading churches, the remaining ones give but seventy dollars a year on the average for all forms of mission work. There has been opposition to missionary work in the denomination from the beginning, as being an effort to impose religion on others who did not desire it. This opposition is lessening.

Here and There

THE SURE DEFENSES OF A NATION.

They are not huge guns or battleships or millions of men. Older civilizations than ours had formidable armies and spread their influence over the world, but today they are only a name, their brilliant history almost moves us to tears as we think of their descent from glory to the grave, while their vast possessions are only a handful of dust. Why did not their arms save them?

Neither will our horses and chariots save us. The campaign now on to build up greater fighting forces will only impoverish the masses of the people if it succeeds, and in case of war will open wounds that the centuries can scarcely heal. The fundamental fallacy that underlies this bellumist agitation is that guns are the only means of settling international difficulties, that the soldier is the great figure on whom the nation must depend for its life. Once get rid of the fallacy and the agitation for further appropriations for military purposes will cease.

Suppose the bellumist policy prevailed in our communities, what would be the result? When my neighbor and I have a difference, according to the bellumist policy, we should resort to force. I should arm and so should he. In that case the gunmaker would be the most useful citizen in the community. The fighting man would be an ideal citizen. But when we have differences we settle them in the courts, unless we can settle them out of court. Certainly no man with any regard for law will try to blow his neighbor's brains out because of differences of opinion. This, however, is the policy of nations—kill and be killed. And the policy will continue until we have international courts in which evidence can be heard and judgments rendered. Then a council of nations will be organized to see that the judgments are lived up to. Those who attempt to escape from the fulfillment of obligations will be dealt with summarily as an individual would be dealt with under similar circumstances.

The true defenses are justice, good will, mutual interests. When nations regard each other as brothers and not panthers waiting for a pretext to spring at each other's throats, we shall begin to hear the end of the war talk.

WHY THESE BELITTLING DISTINCTIONS?

We confess to a sense of weariness when we hear that oft-repeated assertion about the preacher to the effect that "he was a man first and a preacher afterwards." The inference always intended is that the manhood of the man suffered because of his profession. In other words, the man became a mollycoddle the moment he became a minister.

As a matter of fact, no class of men has shown the manly qualities as has the ministry. It was the preacher who withstood the tyrannies of kings in the days of oppression; it was the preacher who taught that God was the Father of all men and brought master and serf to kneel side by side at a time when every soft impulse bade him emphasize rather than wipe out social distinctions; it is the preacher who has carried the cross to many lands at the peril of his life; it is the preacher who has taught the world the lessons of heroism and daring, and has laid his life upon the altar of duty as uncomplainingly as any soldier who ever marched to death with the bugles sounding in his ears. I should like to match the chronicles of the preacher for heroism with those of any other class in the history of civilization. The qualities of the preacher add to the man, if he is really a preacher. If he is not really a preacher he is not much of a man. Where can we match the ministry of a Beecher, a Spurgeon, a Phillips Brooks, not to mention scores of men who lived in smaller and even in obscure parishes? Yet the old slur will be passed on from mouth to mouth, "Success crowned his efforts because he forgot that he was a minister." This contrast between the man and the minister ought to be dropped from the thinking of all intelligent people.

Rev. E. B. Barnes

TARDY APPRECIATION.

It often happens that a congregation wakes up to the fact that its pastor is a very talented man only when he receives a call to another church at a larger salary. Then the brethren discover that they have an angel in disguise. Their vanity is flattered by the loudness of the call that comes from a neighboring church, and they get busy to hold a treasure whose unfathomed merits they knew not of. They would not think of letting him go, and the increase of salary that was an inducement to leave is met by even a greater increase to stay. There is nothing fair in this procedure in very many instances. Many pastors are allowed to continue their work year after year without any substantial mark of appreciation until the call comes to go elsewhere—then comes the deluge of appreciation. Why not have a few showers of blessing between times? If that experiment were more frequently tried maybe the calls would not be heeded, even if they carried with them the promise of a larger income and a more needy field.

Let every congregation rate its preacher at the highest, and pay him all that it can afford to pay, without waiting for some other church to put a value on his services! Think it over!

WHAT IS METHOD?

Last night my desk was apparently in confusion, though I knew just where every letter and paper I needed could be found even in the dark. That desk under my method looked as if a cyclone had passed over it, and the housekeeper, on several occasions during the day suggested that I "clean it up," or take the consequences. I was too much occupied with other duties to make any changes, and now woe is me! Sometime between night and morning said housekeeper got busy and the desk is a pattern for all housekeepers, past, present, and future. Not a wave of disorder rolls across its peaceful breast, for the evident reason that divers and sundry waves of trouble are rolling over me. This morning nothing that I want can be found. Her order is my undoing. I am bewildered by the straight lines of this mathematical order. Everything is icily regular. My protests are unavailing, and if anything is said in this column that appears unseemly let all men know that it is but the ghost of the terrible storms which are raging in my breast. Words are powerless to sound the depths of my disorders within because of this terrible and regular order without. I could use great swelling words of wrath, but they seem futile in view of the present distress, and might only prove an occasion of stumbling. I am in no mood to discuss methods today, and the man who broaches that subject must look well to his weapons. I have discovered that method is madness—on both sides of the house.

Method like orthodoxy is a very frail and feeble word in itself and derives its meaning wholly from circumstances. One man's method is another's ruin, as truly as one man's orthodoxy is another man's devil.

PERFECT, MORE PERFECT, MOST PERFECT.

In our early days we were taught that when anything was perfect nothing could be added thereto—that was the end, despite all the comparatives and superlatives in the dictionary. Nowadays educated people are using all manner of degrees with "perfect," hoping thereby, if possible, to deceive the very elect. It is an every day occurrence to read in learned books of the "most perfect" this or that. We also read of "infinite distances" between the opinions of certain men.

Infinite is a long, long road. But that's neither here nor there.

AN APOLOGY FOR THE WAR.

Somewhere in my reading I happened to light on the statement that war brings out the noblest qualities of the human heart, as the sacrificial work of the Red Cross Society attests. Correct. Just as murder brings out the shining virtues of the hangman's rope. Just as a mountain feud helps us all to appreciate the majesty of the law.

THIS ACTUALLY HAPPENED.

A rural minister at the funeral service of an undertaker thanked God that there would be no undertakers in heaven. What he meant was evident, but he cannot live long enough if he lives to be a thousand years old to gain the good will of the family and friends of the deceased. The sad part of this story is that it's no joke!

THE MAIN DIFFERENCE.

Orthodoxy: "Receive not these disturbers of our peace into your houses."

Heresy: "A new commandment I give unto you that ye love one another."

SAUL GAINS HIS KINGDOM.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR MARCH 14.

1 Sam. 11:1-14. Memory Verses, 12, 13.

Golden Text: He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; And he that ruleth his spirit, than he that taketh a city. Proverbs 16:32.

American Standard Bible.

Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons. (Used by permission.)

(1) Then Nahash the Ammonite came up, and encamped against Jabesh-gilead: and all the men of Jabesh said unto Nahash, Make a covenant with us, and we will serve thee. (2) And Nahash the Ammonite said unto them, On this condition will I make it with you, that all your right eyes be put out; and I will lay it for a reproach upon all Israel. (3) And the elders of Jabesh said unto him, Give us seven days' respite, that we may send messengers unto all the borders of Israel; and then, if there be none to save us, we will come out to thee. (4) Then came the messengers to Gibeah of Saul, and spake these words in the ears of the people: and all the people lifted up their voice and wept. (5) And, behold, Saul came following the oxen out of the field; and Saul said, What aileth the people that they weep? And they told him the words of the men of Jabesh.

(6) And the Spirit of God came mightily upon Saul when he heard those words, and his anger was kindled greatly. (7) And he took a yoke of oxen, and cut them in pieces, and sent them throughout all the borders of Israel by the hand of messengers, saying, Whosoever cometh not forth after Saul and after Samuel, so shall it be done unto his oxen. And the dread of Jehovah fell on the people, and they came out as one man. (8) And he numbered them in Bezek; and the children of Israel were three hundred thousand, and the men of Judah thirty thousand. (9) And they said unto the messengers that came, Thus shall ye say unto the men of Jabesh-gilead, To-morrow, by the time the sun is hot, ye shall have deliverance. And the messengers came and told the men of Jabesh; and they were glad. (10) Therefore the men of Jabesh said, To-morrow we will come out unto you, and ye shall do with us all that seemeth good unto you. (11) And it was so on the morrow, that Saul put the people in three companies; and they came into the midst of the camp in the morning watch, and smote the Ammonites until the heat of the day: and it came to pass, that they that remained were scattered, so that not two of them were left together.

(12) And the people said unto Samuel, Who is he that said, Shall Saul reign over us? bring the men, that we may put them to death. (13) And Saul said, There shall not be a man put to death this day; for to-day Jehovah hath wrought deliverance in Israel.

(14) Then said Samuel to the people, Come, and let us go to Gilgal, and renew the kingdom there. (15) And all the people went to Gilgal; and there they made Saul king before Jehovah in Gilgal; and there they offered sacrifices of peace-offerings before Jehovah; and there Saul and all the men of Israel rejoiced greatly.

Verse by Verse.

BY ASA MCDANIEL.

1. Then. The Septuagint Version reads: And it came to pass after about a month, etc.—Nahash the Ammonite. Nahash means serpent. He was the king of the Ammonites, and a kinsman of Israel. The Ammonites lived east of the Jordan and north of the river Arnon.—Encamped against Jabesh-Gilead. Camped upon Jabesh in Gilead. When they encamped upon a territory it was always destroyed. Make a covenant with us. They had no hope of winning in battle so they wanted a covenant with suitable terms.

2. That all your right eyes be put out. Literally, by boring out for you every right eye. Some have thought that this was done to render them powerless in war; but it is not clear that the Bedawin had any higher motive than the pleasure of insulting an enemy.

3. Elders. The leaders of the tribe.—Seven days' respite. The Ammonites were willing to grant the request for they did not believe that the other tribes would respond to their call for aid.—We will come out to thee. We will give ourselves up.

4. To Gibeah of Saul. There were several other towns by the name of Gibeah, and this one seems to have been called by this name later, when Saul came to be more popular.—Tidings. The news of the threat and demand of the Ammonites. In the ears of the people. The messengers did not know of Saul's being anointed king.—Wept. Oriental people express their grief and sorrow with weeping and loud lamentations.

6. Spirit of God came mightily upon Saul. He felt himself strongly stirred to attempt the relief of his very unfortunate brethren.—His anger was kindled. His indignation was greatly aroused because of the barbarous demands made by the Ammonites.

7. He took a yoke of oxen. Perhaps that with which he had been plowing in the field.—Cut them in pieces. Sending the pieces of oxen was an act similar to that of sending about the "Fiery Cross' as a signal for the gathering of the Highland Scotchmen.—Hands of messengers. The same men who brought the news from Jabesh V. 4.—After Saul and after Samuel. Saul uses the name of Samuel to strengthen the authority with which the men of war were summoned.—Dread of Jehovah. Or, The terror from Jehovah, RVm. The people thought of Saul as the representative of Jehovah, and a failure to obey him would be to disobey God.—As one man. Divisions were disregarded when the nation was in danger.

8. Bezek. Bezek, the place of muster, is identified with Khirbet Ibzik, "thirteen miles northeast from Shechem on the road down to-Bethshan" (G. A. Smith).—The large numbers stated are not intended to be any more than suggestions of a great number.

9. And they said. The Septuagint Version translates, "and he said," making Saul the subject.—Sun is hot. By noon. Saul detained the messengers until he could give a definite answer.—Ye shall have deliverance. This is the sort of faith that conquers in all walks of life.

10. Will come out unto you. Comp. V. 3. This, with the following statement is intended to keep their enemies in the dark.

12. Shall Saul reign over us? The people, thrilled with the great victory, thought the ones who had opposed Saul at Mizpah should be put to death. See I Sam. 10:27.

13. There shall not a man be put to death. Saul generously passed by the insult that had been offered him, and declared that Jehovah had brought a great deliverance to Israel.

14. Gilgal. There is no good reason for supposing that this Gilgal is any other than the well-known sanctuary in the Jordan valley, not far from Jericho. (Josh. 4:19, 20.)

15. Made Saul king before Jehovah. This was a great day for the people. It was a religious event.

Opportunity

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

Saul had been anointed but he had yet to win his spurs. He is KING who CAN. The king must demonstrate his power and leadership. The people do not want a puppet or figure-head, they demand as leader the capable man. In this lesson Saul found his first real opportunity, and he "went to it" with a hearty will.

SENATOR INGALLS' POEM.

"Master of human destinies am I,
Fame, love and fortune on my footsteps wait.
Cities and fields I tread,
I penetrate deserts and seas remote,
And, passing by hut or palace, soon or late,
I knock, unbidden, once, at every gate.
If feasting, rise, if sleeping wake
Before I turn away; it is the hour of fate.
And they who follow me
Reach every state mortals desire,
And conquer every foe, save death;
While those who doubt or hesitate,
Condemned to failure, penury and woe,
Seek me in vain and uselessly implore—
I answer not and shall return no more."

A BETTER IDEA.

Lowell was quite right when he said, "ONCE to every man and nation." I know that Emerson said, "Every morning spells 'opportunity,'" but that is in quite another sense. There is ONE time to enter college— and only one. I met a prominent business man recently who regretted the fact that he had not gone to college. There is one time to choose your profession. There is one, and only one, big opportunity in your whole life. Take it, like Saul took his.

Edmund Rowland Sill had a better conception of opportunity in his story of the "Prince's Battle." He tells of a fierce battle and on the edge of the field a foul craven, seeing the gallant prince fighting says in excuse, "If I had a blade like his I could fight too, but this vile weapon—" and he breaks his sword across his knee and flees from the scene. Finally comes the King's son, sore pressed; his blade has been wrenched from his grasp. He is being pushed, when looking down he sees, half buried in the hot sand, the poor weapon which the coward flung away. Grasping it up he raised again his battle cry and saved a great cause in that illustrious day. He who can take what another throws away and gain victory with it is indeed a master of opportunity. What the rich man's son discards the poor boy takes up and wins victory. This is what I call grasping opportunity.

CALLED THEIR BLUFF.

The Ammonites made their mistake by doing too much talking. What they should have done was to have waded into the half-hearted men of Jabesh and to have subdued them forthwith. While they waited and swaggered and boasted about what they were going to do day after tomorrow, Saul was gathering his regiments.

SAW HIS CHANCE.

How that young farmer must have thrilled when he saw his chance! He had been waiting for it and now it had come. He was strong, quick-witted and ready. Samuel was with him and the spirit of God came upon him. It was a crude and barbarous age. Warring Europe can take no comfort from this bloody lesson. He carved up an ox and sent the pieces around to the various clans. It was the fiery torch. The clans responded. And at their head marched the brave and towering Saul. The action was sharp and short. His strategy was good. His troops were full of fury. Short work was made of the bluffing Ammonites. Thankful for their deliverance the people hastened to crown Saul their king.

MAGNANIMITY.

Flushed with victory, Saul did not lose his self-control. It was suggested that he kill his unworthy opponents. For there were some men who had talked against him. But he answered, "No, this is no time to kill unworthy enemies. Think rather of the way in which God has given us the victory." It was a fine speech and it showed the bigness of the man. To forgive is divine.

SO FAR, SO GOOD.

Our romance continues. Nothing has happened yet. Saul is making a fine start. What a pity that this good narrative cannot continue. But there will come a victory when he will forget God and in that hour he will lose what here he gained—his kingship. "Let him that standeth watch out lest he fall."

LESSON FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

This is a great lesson for youth. In these days of war we need to "Practice the heroic" or to find "The moral equivalent of war." To see your chance and to take it. To win and to be modest and self-controlled. This is a good start. Then watch out.

Disciples Table Talk

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY'S NEWS SERVICE.

It is now generally acknowledged that The Christian Century's news service is pre-eminent among the journals of the Disciples of Christ. For comprehensiveness of outlook, many-sidedness of interest, originality of interpretation—in a word, real newsiness, this service is unique. It has taken much effort to bring it to the high degree of competence which is the delight of all our readers. Again and again we are asked how it is done. "Where do you get all that juicy news from?" inquires a layman who says he has long since wearied of the dull, visionless reports inflated with self-praise with which the conventional paper fills its columns.

Our answer is that our readers give it to us. They have learned what we want, what our readers want, and they send us live "stories" of occurrences and observations in their local or neighboring churches, knowing that what they send us is to be treated not as an article to be run in the exact form in which they have written it, but as data to be edited in the office or rejected altogether if the news editor regards it as either uninteresting or not significant.

This co-operation of our readers, and especially the pastors of our churches, is one of the things for which we are sincerely grateful. Among those whe lend a helping hand in this fine service are scores of the busiest and ablest pastors of our largest churches. They are modest men, but they rightly reason that instead of its being immodest or forward for them to inform their church newspaper of what seems to them good news, it is their duty to do so, even though the news does involve their own names. Our correspondents have the good sense not to accompany their news "story" with an apology. During the present year it is our desire to greatly expand this news-gathering co-operation between this department and our readers. We desire that every local parish paper published in our brotherhood, and every church calendar or bulletin be mailed regularly and promptly to this office.

We ask all our readers to be on the lookout in their own churches and districts for events or utterances that would add to the interest and completeness of the department of Disciples Table Talk. Especially do we wish news that brings good tidings of social service activities in the church; forward steps in religious education; novel and helpful plans in church work; union movements promoted or engaged in by our churches; significant or timely utterances of our ministers; and any event or movement indicating that the churches are taking Christ's religion more seriously.

California Church Will Keep Cool.

A furnace to heat a church in winter is a well-established institution, but a refrigerating plant to cool it in the summer is not so common. This is one of the many interesting features of the new plant at Fresno, Cal., where Dr. H. O. Breeden is pastor. The exterior of this new church home is of red pressed brick, decorated with black glazed brick. A large massive dome is supported on all sides by substantial appearing wings. The entrance is particularly impressive. The circular steps supporting three black columns offer an inviting appearance to the passerby on either street. In the rear can be seen the roof garden, with a seating capacity of five hundred. This is the place where the summer evening services will be conducted. The building will cost $85,000 and is said to be the best in the San Joaquin valley. The auditorium will seat seven hundred people.

Pastor Conducts Great Meeting.

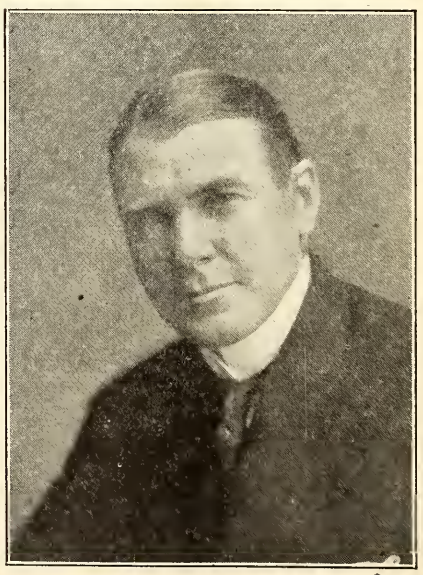
G. A. Campbell has been preaching in his own church at Hannibal, Mo., and the special services have concluded with 192 accessions to the membership. There is a great increment of spiritual power in the congregation owing to the new evangelistic interest.

Baptist Preaches for Disciples.

The secular press in Missouri is quite agitated over the calling of a Baptist preacher to preach for the Disciples at Laddonia. To the editors, this seems like the breaking up of ancient denominational bonds. The Baptist minister is R. L. Watson and he lives in Laddonia and preaches twice a month to the Baptist church. He will now preach the rest of the month for the Disciples and will not have to leave town to preach as formerly. Nelson H. Trimble was formerly pastor at Laddonia, though not living on the field. Both men had attended the rural life conferences held at the state university and had been impressed with the movement for a resident ministry in the country.

Pastor Finds that Religion is Interesting.

Edgar DeWitt Jones has concluded the series of Sunday evening sermons based upon the answers to certain questions which he mailed out to representative men of his city.



Rev. Edgar D. Jones, of Bloomington, Ill., who finds, after a thorough investigation of his community, that interest in religion is keen and growing.

The series brought large congregations to the church and revealed wide divergence of opinion upon the matters discussed. Mr. Jones said in his concluding sermon: "The answers indicate that interest in matters religious is far from waning, but is on the other hand keen and growing. After all allowances have been made and all criticisms heard the fact remains that no subject is so perennially popular and of such general interest as religion. Religion and righteousness ought to be synonymous terms, but alas! they never have been everywhere such and are not now. But the tendency is in this direction. In this day a profession of faith without an earnest endeavor to apply the spirit and principles of Christianity to life in all its aspects, is flouted and scorned. This in itself is significant. More is expected of a Christian in this day than even a decade ago. More will be expected and more realized as the years come and go."

Excelsior Springs, Mo., Starts New Building.

Excelsior Springs, Mo., church is forging to the front under the leadership of John P. Jesse. The Sunday-school outgrew the old church building and the congregation did not feel able to erect a new structure, so they have constructed the basement portion of a future structure adjoining the old building and roofed it in. This basement is now the home of fourteen new class rooms for the Sunday-school.

Was Building Money Wasted?

Thomas W. Grafton was speaking in Third church, Indianapolis, on a recent Sunday evening, on "The Nobility of Service." The congregation was recently housed in a beautiful new building. The minister reviewed the record of the year with its growth in audiences and additions to the membership and said: "The $90,000 spent in erecting this church and buying its furnishings had better been spent in feeding the Belgians or supplying the poor of our own country with food if we can not make the building of real service to Christ." The year's record of Third church was sufficient refutation of the suspicion that the money for the new building was wasted.

Auto Breaks Pastor's Arm.

L. D. Anderson, of First church, Ft. Worth, Tex., was cranking his auto recently when it "kicked" and his arm was broken. He had just been talking to "Chimmie" McFadden, king of the newsboys, who was to speak in his church and was getting ready to drive away. The accident has eliminated the gestures but the pastor continues to preach.

Sheriff Becomes Preacher.

J. W. Jones of Fowler, Kans., used to be the sheriff of Reno county. While in this office he dealt with wrong-doers with forcible methods. Seeing a more effective way, he left the office of sheriff and became a preacher, accepting the pastorate at Fowler. His ministry has aroused much interest. He had the misfortune to fall and break an arm recently.

M. M. Davis Celebrates Wedding Anniversary.

Mr. and Mrs. M. M. Davis, of Dallas, Tex., celebrated their thirty-ninth wedding anniversary on Feb. 2, giving a buffet supper to the city's ministers and their wives. A loving cup was presented to Mr. and Mrs. Davis by the guests, the presentation speech being made by A. E. Ewell. The inscription on the cup was "1876-1915. From the Christian Ministers of Dallas." Mr. Davis was for twenty years pastor of Central church and has been for the past seven years pastor of Ross Avenue church.

Club Dines at Church.

Greensburg, Ind., church, where A. H. Jordan ministers, was host to the club women of the city at luncheon at an annual meeting recently. Two years ago all women's clubs in the city disbanded and united to form the Department Club, which now studies literature, economics, history and many other subjects.

Bellefontaine, O., Congregation Will Rebuild.

A destructive fire recently burned the building at Bellefontaine, O., to the ground, but already a large part of the money has been raised to rebuild. The pastor, Traverse Harrison, led the subscription list with a liberal pledge, although he lost a number of valuable books in the fire and a moving picture machine, valued at ninety dollars. Two pianos and three organs were burned by the fire.

Missionary Works with Soldiers.

W. R. Hunt is a veteran missionary in China, whose native land is England, and who does his work under the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. He has been on furlough this winter and went baek to his old home. While there, he heard of the needs of the soldiers who were in the concentration camps, and who were rapidly falling into evil ways. At the time of the organization of the New Testament League, Mr. Hunt volunteered his services for the help of the soldier boys. In the illustration on page 18 we see him behind the counter distributing books to the soldiers. It is reported that 2,500 of the soldiers and officers received from Mr. Hunt personally copies of the New Testament and signed a card promising to read it every day. The missionary will help promote the March offering plans in England, and sail for America on April 3, with a through ticket for Shanghai, China. He will stop at Hiram to see his son, and will also visit his Living Link church, Seventh Street church, Richmond, Va. Mr. Hunt has been a missionary for a quarter of a eentury and is one of the most efficient agents of the society in China.

Facts from Philadelphia, First.

At the annual business meeting of First church, Philadelphia, held Jan. 13 at First church, a number of interesting things were revealed in the reports. During the ten months between February 28, (the time of the last meeting) and December 31, there was raised for all purposes $7,638, nearly a thousand dollars over the amount of the preceding year. About $1,800 was used in improvements; $250, given to home missions, was spent in the work at Kensington; $134 went for foreign missions, while the C. W. B. M. and Mission Circle sent $350 to the national treasurer of these organizations for mission work at home and abroad. The church gave $152 to the Board of Ministerial Relief, the third largest gift from any church. The running expenses of this work have increased through keeping the church in use every night. There are still some persons contributing nothing to the work of the church, but new pledge-cards come in every week, and eighty dollars per week for current expenses is well assured.

National Benevolent Work Asks Attention.

There are 600 motherless babies, parentless children, homeless brethren and friendless sick now being ministered to daily in the twelve institutions of The National Benevolent Association located in ten states and serving the brotherhood in practically every section of the country. These wards of the brotherhood are worthy, very needy, and (most of them) of our household of faith who can properly look to no one else for aid. The National Benevolent Association has definitely assumed the responsibility of their care in response to the urgent appeal of the churches. Easter Sunday is the time when the Sunday-schools have an opportunity to help these six hundred unfortunate people. Easter is the Association's only annual offering day, and the Easter offering is the main dependence of these hundreds of wards for their daily bread. The Association will send Easter cantatas, offering envelopes and new, attractive literature free in quantities. A school may select a cantata from this list: "Open Doors," "Loving in Deed and in Truth," "Easter Gifts and Gratitude," "Resurrection Rays," "The Garment of Praise." The National Benevolent Association has an office at 2955 N. Euclid Ave., St. Louis.

Waco, Tex., Church Edifice Rebuilt.

Central church, Waco, Tex., has put fifteen thousand dollars into improvements on the huilding, and on Feb. 7 the building was rededicated with the pastor, Frank N. Calvin, preaching in the morning and Dean Colby Hall of the Texas Christian University preaching at night.

Coast Church Calls Pastor.

First church, Portland, Ore., has been looking for a pastor for some months and has issued a call to George Darsie, of Central church, Terre Haute, Ind. The coast church was last presided over hy Maxwell Hall. It has 625 members and offers a handsome salary.

To Help Bethany Church.

The Ladies' Aid Society of Bethany, W. Va., has prepared an attractive calendar in order to assist in paying for the new Bethany church edifice. On the front page is a picture of the new church, and each month has a page with some representative Bethany picture, all of which will be attractive to former students and present friends of the college. Copies of this calendar can be secured from Mrs. Nellie Mendel Tener, or from Mrs. Rebecca A. Richardson.

Good News From India.

The missionaries of India are encouraged over the progress being made there at the present time. There were two baptisms at Jubbulpore on Christmas day. There are now a total of 45 pupils in the Sunday-school connected with this station. There have been 14 baptisms at Jubbulpore recently, and it is expected that others will soon be coming into the church. In the station at Mungeli, there were 84 baptisms during the year 1914. George W. Brown is stationed at Jubbulpore.

Some Statistics from Cleveland.

Euclid Avenue church, Cleveland, is a strong church with 854 resident members. The Bible school has an enrollment of 687. Last year the various departments of the church raised $19,781.56, of which $11,667.98 was spent on local work and the remainder went to causes outside the congregation, missions, benevolence and education.

Candidates Attend Church.

The candiates for political honors at the spring elections were invited to First church, Bloomington, Ill., on a recent Sunday evening to hear a sermon by the pastor, Edgar DeWitt Jones. It is said by a local paper that the number of candidates in Bloomington was so large as to nearly fill the main body of the church, though some allowance must be made for hyperbole. Mr. Jones said he thought that it was not autobiography the community wanted but biography in order to vote intelligently.

Montana Church Free From Debt.

On Sunday, February 7, 1915, Calvary Christian church at Missoula, Mont., Harold H. Griffis, minister, closed a campaign for lifting its standing debt. Notes representing an indebtedness of $2,300.00 were burned at the morning service and a special program was rendered to celebrate the event. For the first time in all the twenty-five years of its history this congregation is free from debt.

Funeral of Disciple War Victim.

Private F. J. Walker, who was in "G" company of the London Scottish, was killed in action on Dec. 22. He was a member of Hornsey church and secretary of the Sunday-school before his enlistment, besides being treasurer of the Christian Band and a member of the choir. A memorial service was held in the church on Jan. 17 which brought out a large company of members who remembered the good work this brave soldier had done in the days of peace. The pastor preached from 2 Tim. 1:3.

Kentucky Pastor Undergoes Operation.

B. E. Watson, pastor of Maxwell street church, Lexington, Ky., was operated on for appendicitis on Feb. 8. At last reports he was getting along well, and his recovery was hoped for.

Our Readers' Opinions

ARE WE A DENOMINATION?

Editor The Christian Century:

In the Christian Century of December 17, 1914, you say:

> The complacent and proud acceptance of a denominational status for the Disciples by the majority of our people is the most pathetic aspect of the situation in which the Disciples' movement today finds itself.

I wish to express my hearty endorsement of the above declaration. The day we lose interest in, and enthusiasm for an undenominational type of Christianity that day we begin to become "a disappearing brotherhood' indeed. The strength of our movement is our insistence that we are working seriously at the problem of Christian union. No other religious body is so doing—at least no other body has gone at the task by a process of elimination. Episcopalians pray for Christian union as do many other religious bodies, but have they and others been willing to sacrifice mere essentials for the sake of Christian union? Thousands upon thousands of our own people have sacrificed their denominational names for the sake of wearing a name which does not divide the people of God. We have Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists and Episcopalians in our churches every one of whom refuses to wear these names any longer and upon the ground that their love for union is stronger than their love for a party name. But as your words above indicate many of our people do not feel the unique undenominational character of our position.

It is a significant fact that when the preacher or evangelist strikes the party rut, runs into the denominational groove and makes use of the forms and phrases which have come down from the 'fathers" many countenances light up with a new interest and their Amens and handshakes clearly prove that some are much more deeply touched by a "Benjamin Franklin" type of sermon than they are by a strong sermon on the necessity and obligation of abiding in Christ to the end that we may "bear much fruit." This ought not to be. I was impressed with this fact when in a recent series of meetings I introduced baptism for the first time and a good brother took my hand at the close and said, "Now, Brother, you're a gittin' down to business." This indicates one of our awful dangers as a people, viz., that we will become more concerned about how to make Christians than the purpose for which we make them. By all means let us make it clear where baptism belongs, but never give any other impression than that baptism with repentance is a part of "the obedience of faith." "Ye are the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus" expresses the individual and subjective in conversion, just as love expresses the individual and subjective in marriage. No matter how genuine or pure is love between two hearts there comes a time for outward sanction—in the marriage ceremony—without this external formal sanction in which the Church and state are both involved social purity and moral stability could not be conserved. The apostle therefore does not leave the impression that we are to be made Christians by a mere subjective state of heart or mind suggested by the word faith, but immediately adds, "For as many of you as were baptized into Christ did put on Christ." See Gal. 3:26, 27. There is no such thing known in the New Testament as three steps into the kingdom, faith, repentance and baptism. Always in the New Testament faith is fundamental and stands back and beneath its expression or manifestation in repentance and baptism and all other acts and experiences which are Christian. "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin."

OUR YEAR BOOK FIGURES.

Editor The Christian Century:

I note what you say in your paper dated Feb. 11th:

> It is something of a new sensation to Disciples of Christ to open their year-book and find that, to all appearances, instead of making a gain, they have actually lost several thousand members and over 500 churches in the past year.

This should not jar you. Surely you can diagnose the case and locate the trouble. When the ministry of the Christian Church stuck close to the Bible and preached the gospel without interrogation points sinners received the message, often the priests became obedient unto the faith, and we grew rapidly. Then we presented a solid front and marched up against sectarian forces.

With a divided church, an ethical gospel, and ministers who deny the virgin birth, and who are ready to substitute human opinions for expressed commands, and who will corner the flag and compromise with sectarianism, is it strange we are losing ground? A people who have plead for one hundred years for the oneness of God's people upon a living and a divine Christ, and for the restoration of God's Word and God's Church, now to spend their energies destroying each other is enough to cause the angels to weep. If we have not a distinct purpose and a distinct place in the world the sooner we waste away and are forgotten the better.

Columbus, Ind. W. H. Book.

Our good Brother Book probably has many times preached that oft repeated and always appropriate sermon about taking statements of Scripture out of their contexts and making them mean what they do not mean. But he has been guilty of the same practice in the above communication. The editorial from which he quotes says the loss is only an "apparent" loss, that it is due simply to a striking off of fictitious names of churches and baseless figures from the list. The editorial affirms plainly that the Disciples are not losing but gaining ground and that the apparent loss is due to more correct bookkeeping. Mr. Book should cheer up!—The Editor.

Successful Meeting In Cleveland.

A three weeks' protracted meeting closed on Sunday evening at Broadway church, Cleveland. This is the mission church in the foreign section of Cleveland. Charles Darsie, of Crawford Road church, did the preaching. There were forty-three additions, the majority of them men and boys. Twenty-five were from Bohemian families. This makes 110 additions to this congregation since moving into the new building last spring. F. D. Butchart, pastor at Broadway, and his assistant, Miss Bessie Pehotsky, have a great influence for good over the lives of the people of this community. Twenty-two devotional, educational, social and athletic meetings are held each week in the church. Over one thousand are enrolled in the departments of the Sunday-school. Mr. Darsie writes that the great difficulty in the conversion of the young people of foreign parentage is in the opposition of their fathers and mothers. The parents have not been influenced as have the young by the institutional work of the church. Early Catholic training, or else prejudice against all churches on the part of those who have broken with their church, lies back of such opposition. In practically every case a personal visit by Mr. Butchart, often several visits, were necessary before the way opened for the young people to accept Christ.

Ten Thousand Dollars for Bible Chair.

The campaign for funds to build a Bible chair house at Bloomington, Ind., has met with much encouragement in the gift of ten thousand dollars by Mr. and Mrs. Harry H. Glasscock of Kingman. The money is to be used in constructing the chapel, and is given to perpetuate the memory of their son who died two years ago. The plan is to raise sixty thousand dollars for a large building to house all the activities of the Bible chair and provide a home for the dean.

Real Revival at Linwood Boul. Church.

The three weeks of special services at Linwood Boulevard church with the pastor, Burris A. Jenkins, preaching and the men of the church helping, resulted in a real revival. There was a total of 240 accessions to the church through this effort. The question box, which was so popular a feature of the services, is to be retained as a permanent feature of the church life, and will be used on Sunday evenings.

A Liberal Giver to the Church.

Mrs. Matilda Dodd, who recently died at Jefferson, Ia., was a liberal giver to many of the good enterprises of the kingdom. Some of her gifts are as follows: Drake University, Des Moines, $51,000; National Benevolent Association of Christian church, $1,000; Christian Woman's Board of Missions, $1,100; Foreign Christian Missionary Society, $1,000; Iowa Christian Missionary Society, $10,000; International Unity Bible college, Minneapolis, $35,000; and the Christian church of Boone, $500.

Homer T. Wilson Dies.

Homer T. Wilson, who some years ago was pastor of Central church in San Antonio, Tex., died recently at his home at San Antonio and was buried at Mission Burial Park on February 11. He was widely known for his lyceum work and was a lecturer of considerable popularity. He leaves a family of seven children besides the wife. These children are now grown up and in homes of their own. Mr. Wilson was 5 years of age at the time of his death.

Jasper S. Hughes and Community Churches.

Jasper S. Hughes, a minister at Holland, Mich., announces that he will give some time to the establishment of community churches in small communities where there is not room for the various denominational churches.

Stereopticon Slides of Springfield Survey.

The survey of the city of Springfield under the Russell Sage Foundation was the most complete ever made in the United States. The charts and exhibits have been reproduced on lantern slides and the Jacksonville Woman's Club has engaged Frank Waller Allen of First church, Springfield, to lecture on these pictures at an early date.

In and Around Chicago

W. D. McClintock preached at Monroe street church on February 21, and C. C. Morrison is announced to preach there on February 28. C. M. Sharpe who preaches there regularly is at present in the South on a trip for the Disciples' Divinity House.

The Men and Millions Team in Illinois have tentative plans for coming to Chicago, and though the date is not yet finally fixed, the present plan is for them to be in the city the last of March. They will spend three Sundays and two weeks here.

A new C. W. B. M. auxiliary has been organized at the Edgewater church by representatives of Irving Park, Evanston and Sheffield avenue churches. It has started out with encouraging prospects.

The World's Christian Endeavor convention which is to be held in Chicago during the coming summer is already attracting great interest among the young people of the churches. Claude E. Hill and W. E. M. Hackleman, who are now engaged in holding evangelical meetings in the Valparaiso, Ind., church were in Chicago on February 22, and decided to hold the Disciples' rally during the convention at the Jackson Boulevard church.

The young ladies' class in Evanston Sunday-school taught by Mrs. Clara Coleman has to take care of the church babies in the parlors of the church while the mothers attend the morning service. There are fifteen babies in the homes of the members of this church that are less than one year old.

O. F. Jordan has been asked by the Knights of Pythias lodge to make a statement of his personal religious views at a special open meeting which will be held early in March. The lodge will announce the special evening widely and the knights will bring their ladies to the service.

The Ministerial Association gave up its regular meeting for February 22 out of respect to Washington's birthday.

An important gathering will be the spring quarterly convention of the Chicago Christian Woman's Board of Missions, which will be held at the Jackson Boulevard church on Friday, March 5, at 2 p. m. In the afternoon addresses will be made by Mrs. George B. Baird of Luchowfu, China, and Emory Ross of Liberia. Supper will be served at 6:30 at fifty cents, followed by addresses by G. B. Baird, W. C. Macdougal of Jubbulpore, India, and Mr. Ross. There will also be good music. It is hoped by the C. W. B. M. leaders that an unusually large attendence both of men and women may be attracted by the dinner and after-dinner program.

"The Oakland Sunday Evening Club" is the name given to the Sunday evening service at Memorial church. Speakers of prominence are secured by the men's club of the church. Among the recent speakers have been Prof. W. D. McClintock, on "West and East," an interpretation of Whitman's "Journey to India"; Supt. John D. Shoop of the city schools, on "Education and Life"; Miss Mary McDowell of the University of Chicago Settlement on "Civic Standards"; Prof. J. Paul Goode on "The Romance of America in the Philippines," and Prof. George B. Foster on "Can We Still be Christians?"

Hiram College Notes

For the second year in succession Hiram has won the State Inter-collegiate Oratorical Contest, Kelley O'Neall of Wilmington being the winner this year. Last year Robert Peden of Youngstown won for Hiram.

Hiram has long been a sort of Mecca for our foreign missionaries, either those on furlough or those retired from active service. That Nestor of our missionaries, Morton D. Adams, and his good wife, have had charge of the Wharton Memorial Home for the children of missionaries ever since 1910. This year Ernest Gordon of Mahoba, India, is spending his furlough in study here, while his wife is undergoing treatment elsewhere. Mrs. T. J. Arnold of China, the death of whose husband on the field and the need of her six children for school advantages have compelled her retirement from active service, has taken up her abode at Hiram.

The Disciples Club has completed its work for the year, having gone thoroughly over the background and great historic landmarks of the Disciples' movement. The club has proved highly popular and profitable. College credit was given all students taking the work regularly.

About 1903, while still minister of Central church at Warren, Miner Lee Bates, class '95, conducted a most successful series of evangelistic meetings. Ever since he came to the presidency of the college there has been a desire to have him lead the forces in another such campaign. Not until this winter had he seen his way to do so, and then for only a brief ten nights. His one theme throughout was "The New Life in Christ." The climax came the last night when, after a powerful and illuminating exposition of the "Law of the Spiritual Harvest," nine young men walked down the aisle to take a stand for Christ. Of the 31 added to the church, 22 were by primary obedience; 24 or 25 were young men.

B. S. Dean.

Pastor Arraigns His City.

Making Milwaukee famous is the job of folks who live there and the pastor of the church on Park place, Mark Wayne Williams, took a turn at it recently. Mormonism has been getting a foothold there and he was speaking of this western cult in a recent sermon when he began paying his compliments to Milwaukee. "Milwaukee may not swallow Joseph Smith," Mr. Williams said, "but could swallow some other Jonah without indigestion. Boston has its Eddy, Chicago its Dowie, Salt Lake its Brigham Young, and Milwaukee is looking for a prophet. Milwaukee is ignorant of Bible faith, conceited enough to be duped, licentious in amusements, sectarian in churches, slack in moral energy, strong on trade and politics. Milwaukee is ready for superstition."

President Kershner for Federation.

The secular press of St. Louis expresses surprise that a prominent member of the staff of a religious weekly of Cincinnati that has fought the federation idea, President Kershner of Texas, should come out strong for federation at an executive meeting of the Commission on Christian Union at St. Louis recently. Mr. Kershner's address left nothing to be desired in the way of definiteness. He said: "There is a certain type of logic which possesses the peculiar characteristic of proving too much. This is precisely the difficulty with those among the Disciples who take exception to the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. The Federal Council does not in practice, whatever may be its theory, require that all who participate in its work shall indorse the denominational ideal. What an absurdity it is for us who gladly commune with the men who sit in the Federal Council to refuse even to talk in a friendly way over the common problems of Christendom."

Governor in Disciples Pulpit.

Governor Alexander of the state of Idaho occupied the pulpit of the Disciples church at Boise recently and spoke on "Christianity and Judaism."

A "Bishop" in an Automobile.

G. J. Hoover traveled 4,400 miles last year in an automobile in the work of supervising Disciples' interests in the eastern district of Indiana, the machine being furnished by a layman of Columbus, Ind. He held twelve series of evangelistic meetings with a total of 214 accessions to the churches, 126 by confession of faith. The district evangelist raised $700.44 for the state association in the field. He raised for the local churches on debts, current expenses, and other work, $8,283. Efforts are being made to put this splendid district service of Indiana upon a permanent financial basis this year.

Young People Coast and Feast.

The young people's class at Warren, O., church had a very pleasant evening recently. They had a coasting party which ended in an oyster supper at the church.

Success at Canton, O.

First church, Canton, O., had a good year in 1914. They received by letter 98 new members, and 83 were inducted into the church by baptism. The total money raised in all departments was $22,956.37. The amount contributed to missions and benevolences was $2,852.67. The average attendance in the Bible school was 2,268 per Sunday. The pastor, P. H. Welshimer, conducted 68 funerals and performed 122 wedding ceremonies. He has entered upon his fourteenth year with this church. He began a series of evangelistic meetings on Jan. 31, this being the ninth time he has performed this service for his church.

John W. Street Goes to Brown County, Ind.

For the last two summers John W. Street of Mackinaw, Ill., has been lecturing at Bethany Assembly on the Rural Church. At the session last year the National Rural Life Association was formed, and Mr. Street was elected secretary of this association. At the suggestion of C. W. Cauble, state secretary of Indiana, he was invited to consider an Indiana pulpit. Melnotte Miller took him in an automobile to Nashville. Mr. Street asked many preachers what they thought, and the majority of them advised against his going to Nashville. He then wrote to Purdue University and got a survey of Brown County. He was very much pleased with the report he got from Purdue. The Bartholomew County Association became interested in Brown county, and decided to become a big brother to it. With the help of Bartholomew County Association, Mr. Street goes to Nashville on April 1, to take up this work. He is expected to preach in the Nashville church half time, and to do evangelistic work in Brown County the rest of his time.

Religion in the State House.

Taking religion to the state house is a task much needing to be performed in many of the states, but it has remained for Iowa to bring this about first in any formal way. Members of the Thirty-sixth general assembly in Iowa will have the opportunity of attending religious services once each week at the state house while the legislature is in session. Recently C. S. Medbury made an address to the legislators. The speakers will be secured from the various churches of the city.

Rev. Chas. S. Medbury, of University Place Church, Des Moines, who recently addressed the Iowa legislature.

Edifice Again in Use.

For many months the building at Greensburg, Ind., has been closed while it underwent extensive alterations. Now that the changes have been made, the walls frescoed and velvet carpet laid on the floors, the building was opened again to the public on Jan. 24. The pastor, A. Homer Jordan, spoke on the theme, "A Real Church." He insisted that the church should develop personal purity, rally men for service and bring them into fellowship with God.

Sunday-school Forms Legislature.

The Sunday-school at Atchison, Kans., is a live one. They have a thousand members and new plans are in operation all the time. The latest idea is to inaugurate a Sunday-school legislature. The plan was originated by H. P. Armstrong, superintendent of the school. With the assistance of the pastor, the Rev. Jesse Bader, the rough edges were knocked off and the plan revised so as to fit every need of the organization. It was placed in effect on a recent Sunday, when the representatives from the various classes were elected. In many respects this Sunday-school is unique. There is a Sunday-school paper, and a Sunday-school postoffice, a Sunday-school choir and a Sunday-school glee club. Marvin Grandstaff is the editor and reporter, printer and publisher of the Sunday-school paper. While the classes are in session he makes the round of each one, gathering news after the same fashion, and with the same efficiency that the real newspaper reporter works. After his rounds, he prepares his copy, which, instead of being turned over to a linotype operator, is read by the young newspaper man when the classes reassemble at the close of the lesson period. Who of the pupils and teachers are ill or out of town, who has had a birthday, and other similar little items of human interest are recorded and read. The Sunday-school postoffice is conducted by a live young man, who is assisted by two others just as alert. Every family represented in the school has a box, where Sunday-school literature is placed, including the weekly paper given to each person present every Sunday. If, for any reason, no one from the household gets to church the mail accumulates and is there for them when they return.

Emory Ross in America.

Emory Ross, the well-known missionary to Liberia under the C. W. B. M., is in America and will speak in a number of cities. He was recently at Jackson, Miss., and made an address in the church there on Liberia. He said: "Liberia has an area of 47,000 square miles, almost the same area as Ohio. It has an estimated population of one million. The people of greatest interest to American audiences are the Americo-Liberians, chiefly descendants of the American negroes who went to Africa after the Civil War to found the negro republic. The constitution and courts are founded on the American model. And the Liberian flag is the same as Old Glory, excepting that it has only one star. Monrovia, the capital city of the republic, has many substantial buildings of brick. Many of them are reproductions of the old Southern mansions of ante-bellum days, and some of them are built with brick brought in the ships all the way from this country. There are about twenty thousand of the Americo-Liberians. Only about twelve white missionaries are found in the republic, but there is a large force of colored missionaries, mostly trained in the United States. Among them are two black bishops. Not more than forty thousand of the Liberians are Christianized, so that a large field offers itself in Liberia for Christian effort. The white population is small, living mainly in Monrovia, the capital. The great countries of the old world are represented by consuls and ministers, and much of the court etiquette of Europe is observed at the diplomatic functions."

Storm the Parsonage.

A crowd that did not wait to knock, stormed the parsonage at Taylor, Tex., recently and the new pastor, Philip King, and his family were much surprised to find themselves the victims of an old fashioned donation party. There were sacks of flour, sides of bacon, hams and every kind of welcome addition to the larder. The minister's household is now provided for until spring.

Basket Ball for Church Teams.

Disciple boys are playing good basketball this winter and from various sections come reports of games they have won. The young men of Highland church, Denver, Col., defeated Sacred Heart quintet recently with a score of 29 to 20. In Louisville, Broadway boys defeated the team of St. John's church.

Motor Parties to Los Angeles.

Motor parties in Buicks and Oaklands are racing their way to Los Angeles. No, this is not an automobile notice but the report of a Sunday-school contest that is being held in the school at Beatrice, Neb. At last reports, each party had an equal number of passengers.

Should We Increase the Army?

"Resolved, that we should increase the army and navy of the United States at once." This was the question that the men of the Sunday-school at Beatrice, Neb., debated recently. Both sides were championed with interest and ability.

Evangelism Locates Pastor.

Wm. B. Clemmer recently held evangelistic meetings with the church at Bondurant, Ia. There were fifty accessions to the church. As a result of the increased strength, the church has voted to call a resident pastor. They have been having preaching visits by A. D. Stringfellow of Drake.

High School Credit for Sunday School Study.

The committee on accredited schools of the University of Missouri has worked out a plan by which the high schools of the state may give credit for work done in the Sunday-school under certain conditions. These conditions are: that the student must be eligible for high school work, that the teacher of the Sunday-school class must have the educational equipment required for a high school teacher and that a certain curriculum of study shall be followed. The work may be done in Protestant or Catholic churches, or under Jewish auspices. The student must conform to high school standards with regard to attendance, deportment, general attitude and character of work done. The Sunday-school teachers of Columbia, Mo., church met recently and voted to accept the conditions laid down and a class is already in process of formation and Miss Mary Gray is teacher. Another class will be formed with Mrs. M. D. Lewis as teacher.

Plan for National Convention.

The monthly meeting of the Los Angeles ministers' association was held on Feb. 1. Among the prominent visitors from abroad were J. H. Garrison of St. Louis; A. J. Hagerman of Lexington, Ky.; W. H. Hayden of Indianapolis, and J. P. Darst, formerly of Peoria. A great deal of time was given to the discussion of plans for the coming national convention which will draw together a great concourse of people, the Los Angeles people believe.

From Salvation Army to Pastorate.

Captain H. D. Gough of the Salvation Army, has been called to the pastorate of the Disciples church at Watertown, S. D. At Aberdeen he was well known for his work in connection with the Humane Society and the Living Waters mission. At Claremont he was captain of the Salvation Army corps. He will move his family to Watertown in about a month.

Imposing Church at Knoxville, Tenn.

Knoxville, Tenn., has erected an imposing church costing forty thousand dollars, one of the finest in the eastern part of the state. The architecture is of the Roman type of the style of the Italian Renaissance. The building is somewhat similar to Madison Square church in New York, though it has many original features. The building is especially imposing when viewed from the front. Six terra cotta columns three feet in diameter and thirty feet in height support the roof in front. The auditorium will seat 1,200. The acoustics are so good that the tones of the organ have had to be softened. The dedication of this beautiful building occurred on Feb. 7 and W. J. Wright was the master of ceremonies. The pastor is J. Lem. Keevil.

Pastor for Thirteen Years.

H. C. Runyan has been pastor of South Covington, Ky., church for thirteen years. When the congregation was organized it had a membership of thirty. Now there are about three hundred members.

Coshocton, O., Church Raises Debt.

Seventh Street church, Coshocton, O., has been struggling under a debt of $4,000. Previous efforts had been made to raise the amount of the indebtedness but without avail. The effort this spring was an easy one and the congregation rejoices in its success.

President Crossfield Visits the Churches.

President R. H. Crossfield of Transylvania university is visiting the churches. On Feb. 7, he spoke in the morning at Covington, Ky., and in the evening at Latonia.

New Edifice at Carlock, Ill.

Carlock, Ill., has built a new church edifice of hollow tile, faced with brick. The building has cost $15,000. The movement to secure the building was started under the pastorate of Miss Myrtle Parke and has been completed under the pastorate of Milo Nethercutt. Geo. L. Snively was master of ceremonies at the dedication Feb. 7. More than enough money was pledged to entirely clear the building of indebtedness. At noon on dedication day the church served a free dinner to six hundred persons.

Men's Class Thrives on Social Study.

S. G. Buckner of Somerset, Pa., who is teaching Josiah Strong's lessons, "Studies in the Gospel of the Kingdom," which he secures from the Disciples Publication Society, thinks he has the largest class in the brotherhood using these lessons. He reports an enrollment of 175 and the livest interest he has ever seen in any Sunday-school lessons. The studies just now are on war and peace. Mr. Buckner's father, G. W. Buckner, from Southport, England, has recently held evangelistic meetings in Somerset and 53 were added to the church.

Revelations of the New Year Book

The new year-book of the Disciples of Christ, issued by the American Christian Missionary Society is the most complete and useful which has ever been issued. There is information never before gathered in a reference book of this sort. On page 22 is a list of all the coming state conventions with date and place, as well as the name and address of the state secretary. This should prove useful.

The book lists on Sunday-school work, history and doctrine of the Disciples, home missions, and other subjects are also valuable. There are lists of stereopticon slides by which missionary themes can be well presented. It will be possible this year for the churches to find information on the great tasks of the church with greater ease.

The reports of the colleges have more detail than ever before, though there is yet much to be desired in the fullness of the report. The reports of the libraries of the colleges do not discriminate between "congressional records" and other lumber, and modern books. The lack of detail is not to be charged to the makers of the year-book, however.

The list of papers published by the Disciples leaves much to be desired. There is no indication whether the paper is a parish paper or not, though there is room on the page to place this information. The list of parish papers is far from complete and the name of Mission Leaves, published by the C. W. B. M. in Illinois is missing. Many of the parish papers coming to the desk of the Christian Century news editor are not listed here.

The statistics of the Australian churches are illuminating. In the city of Melbourne there are 43 churches, more than in any other city in the world.

CITIES WITHOUT DISCIPLE CHURCHES.

The list of cities of over one hundred thousand population without a Disciple church is interesting. Not a one of these cities is east of the Allegheny mountains and they are all north of New Jersey. These cities are 13 in number.

The lists of churches leading in missionary work are enumerated on a different basis than before. It is now the total amount given to all causes that affords a church standing. Akron, O., still leads with $5,464.42 given to various enterprises. Some other churches have been given a "back seat," however, as their money had been given to one society and previously secured good rating. There is also a list of the leading missionary churches by states, one to each state. Of the fifty leading missionary churches, no one city has over two. Those having two such churches are Chicago, Kansas City, Cleveland, Des Moines, Lexington, St. Louis and Louisville. It was necessary for a church to raise only $1,554 last year to get listed in this class of the leading fifty. Some surprise will be shown to find such cities as Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Los Angeles, New York, Richmond, Pittsburgh and Buffalo with only one church each in this list.

APPARENT LOSSES BY CORRECTED REPORTS.

The statistical report is so honestly constructed that it should go far to rehabilitate the reputation of Disciple statistics. No church is listed that has not been heard from recently. The membership statistics are still somewhat inflated, however. Illinois churches report active members and nominal members. These are all put in the national year-book as members. The year-book by correcting the reports through greater accuracy of state organizations shows a loss of 582 churches and shows a gain in membership of only 452. These apparent losses are explained by the desire of the "anti" brethren to have a separate organization and by the increased accuracy in accounting. One-third of the churches are without preaching all the time. Only 2,500 or 3,000 preachers give all their time to the church, though there is a total ministry of 6,161 men.

The count of the churches making no offering to any organized work is interesting. Kentucky has the largest number with 274; Indiana, 177; Texas, 152; Illinois, 130; Oklahoma, 112; Iowa, 79; Tennessee, 62, and Virginia, 54.

The churches that are "unanimous," giving to every missionary offering are pitifully small in number. Missouri leads with 55; Ohio, 36; Illinois, 27; Indiana, 23; Kentucky, 22. The report on the local expenditures was secured from only half of the churches, but this amounted to over four million dollars from those reporting. The total reported for all missions and benevolences was $1,502,621, an amount of money that is significant as compared with the probable ten millions raised by the churches for their local work.

There are missing in the year-book certain statistics furnished by some other religious bodies in their year-books. There are no statistics about the value of the church property, or of the number of sittings in the church buildings.

The foreign and home missionaries are listed in a separate list this year for ease in securing their addresses. The evangelists are also separately listed, the names being furnished by the organization of the evangelists.

A MONUMENTAL TASK.

The task of printing a statement showing the annual contribution of each of 8,494 churches is a monumental task. Six preachers change their addresses every day and the task of keeping a fresh list of these men is also one that requires continual diligence.

Some of the changes in statistical reports are astonishing. Missouri once reported 1,800 churches. With district superintendents who have hunted everything up and tabulated it, there are now only 1,075 churches! Kentucky reports 330 fewer churches than last year. Virginia and Texas lists have also been radically pruned.

The year-book is published by the American Christian Missionary Society as the January and February numbers of the American Home Missionary. The year-book goes with a year's subscription to the Home Missionary at fifty cents.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR MARCH 10.

The Gladness of Jesus. Matt. 5:10-12; Luke 5:33-35.

"I believe," says Carl Hilty, "that happiness can be found. If I thought otherwise, I should be silent and not make unhappiness the more bitter by discussing it. It is, indeed, true that those who talk of happiness utter therewith a sigh, as if there were doubt whether happiness could be attained. It is still further true that irrational views of happiness seem to be for the present thrust upon us. Only through these imperfect views can individuals or communities approach that degree of spiritual and material development which is the necessary foundation of real happiness."

Charles Wagner writes: "This question of pleasure is capital. Staid people generally neglect it as a frivolity; utilitarians, as a costly superfluity. Those whom we designate as pleasure-seekers forage in this delicate domain like wild boars in a garden. No one seems to doubt the immense human interest attached to joy. It is a sacred flame that must be fed, and that throws a splendid radiance over life. He who takes pains to foster it accomplishes as profitable a work for humanity as he who builds bridges, pierces tunnels, or cultivates the ground. So to order one's life as to keep, amid toils and suffering, the faculty of happiness, and be able to propagate it in a sort of salutary contagion among one's fellowmen, is to do a work of fraternity in the noblest sense. To give a trifling pleasure, smooth an anxious brow, bring a little light into dark paths—what a truly divine office in the midst of poor humanity! But it is only in great simplicity of heart that one succeeds in filling it."

The Gladness of the Single Eye.

Jesus bade his disciples rejoice that in the midst of confusion and opposition they were able to hold steadily before them their great aim in life. Suffering in itself is not good. The bitter contentions that arise when the truth is preached are evil. The alienation of friends is not a cause for boasting. But it is a cause of joy to adhere to one's convictions when ignorance and greed and foolish ambition put obstacles in the way of loyalty. Men who rejoice when they are reviled and cast out as evil believe that life is worth living, that there is a solid foundation under them. Their belief in God includes belief in man. They think God has placed them upon the earth to serve some useful purpose. And they have some idea of what they ought to be doing.

The Gladness of Experience.

Can we know life well, its bad as well as its good, and still be glad? Do the years bring disillusionment without the compensation of deeper insight and purer faith? Is play only for youth? Does knowledge mean the loss of hope? If we have the beliefs of Christians, we shall find means of enjoyment at every stage of life. The joys of experience will come to take the place of the pleasures of childhood and youth. We are not permitted to stand aside while the race of men goes into battle; we must fight. If there is any wicked thing anywhere, it is the business of the disciple of Jesus to find it out. In bidding his followers to turn the other cheek, Jesus told them to expose themselves to insult and deception by trusting to the better impulses of those who were wronging them. Men are apt to forget their generous feelings after they have met with insult and deception. Jesus would have us regard the evil deeds of others as opportunities for exhibiting our best. And the result will be happiness for us.

Deut. 12:18; Neh. 8:10, 12; Ps. 5:11; 19:8; 28:7; 97:11; Matt. 25:21; Luke 15:6-10; Acts. 16:25, 34; Rom. 5:2, 3; 14; 17; 2 Cor. 1:12; 6:10; 12:10.

Reach the Mind Through the "Eye Gate"

The most progressive pastors and teachers today are finding that the quickest path to the Kingdom of the Mind is by the way of the "Eye-Gate." It has been scientifically demonstrated that pictures get over three times the results obtained by the use of words. Preach a sermon, teach a lesson, by word of mouth; it takes the message a long time to reach the mind, and too often it is lost after getting to its destination.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and uncclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desire nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

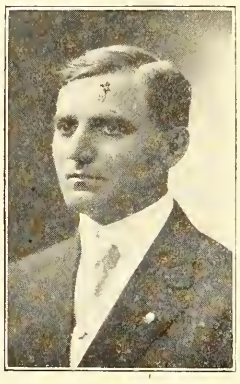
Meeting Life's Problems

Conducted by
C. R. STAUFFER

A Department of Friendly Counse



C. R. Stauffer

Readers of "The Conquest" are invited to send questions to Mr. Stauffer for his answer. If you are troubled about some problem that has come into your life, tell him about it. We are assured he will give you help. Sign your name, although it will not be printed with your question. Address Mr. Stauffer as follows: C. R. Stauffer, Box 2, Norwood, O.—EDITOR.

"I am a young man twenty years of age. I did not complete my education when I should have done so. I quit school when in the eighth grade and went to work. I am now earning eighteen dollars a week, but feel that I made a mistake in quitting school with such limited training. I now desire to enter one of the professions. Would you advise me to give up my position and go back to school to prepare for the life's work that I now desire to enter upon?"

This is a hard question to answer. Circumstances sometimes alter cases. However, you are not too old to go back to school. One is never too old to be in training. If you see your mistake in not taking advantage of the opportunities afforded earlier in life, remedy the matter as far as possible by making the best preparation from now on. If you do not get through with your training until you are thirty-five, you still have many years of useful service to render.

You may think it foolish to give up that position paying $18 per week and go back to school where you will earn practically nothing for years. But if you will look at it from the financial standpoint alone, by the time you are fifty, you will have earned much more money with proper training than you would have done without, even though you count out the years spent in school. But this is not the way to judge life. The question is your usefulness in the world. You owe it to yourself and to your age to be as useful as possible. If you have chosen your life's work carefully and are temperamentally adapted to that which you have chosen, you will be more useful with the training than without.

You may say that you can't afford to spend so many years in scholastic training. If you have proper determination and purpose, you will be able to get through college and university somehow. Many of the greatest men of our country earned their way through the schools and appreciated their education more because of that fact. Most any young man can get a college education today even though he has not a penny to start with, if he just makes up his mind to do so. Don't let the fact that you are poor keep you from making the effort for an education.

I advise you then, that if the obstacles in the way do not make it entirely out of the question for you to carry out your plans, by all means go back to school and train yourself for the largest service possible.

"The Conquest" Helps

Adults and Young People to solve the problems that come to them in their daily lives. It is a real force for character-building. It believes that the moulding of a life is more important than organizing a class. Mr. Stauffer in the above regular department of "The Conquest" is determining destinies!

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

The Church and Peace

THE next forward step in human progress is the abolition of war, the classifying of it with witchcraft, duelling, and stake-burning. War is a barbarism, a survival of the days when might made right. It is glorified by all magnificent rewards, the praise of poets, the theme of orators, the blessings of the Church, and perpetuated by the fundamental fallacy that the sword is mightier than the pen.

In our day we have scientific warfare, but grisly warfare for all that—the brain of Edison, as it were, in the skull of a savage. The Krupp gun shows the development of the race intellectually, the steady advance from the club to the aeroplane with its deadly bombs, while the fighting spirit remains what it was when the hairy man cracked his neighbor's skull like an egg shell with a stone. So far as fighting is concerned, the race has changed its spots but not its spirit.

To end war an end must be made of all that contributes to war. There must be an ending of the war-makers, the war-traders, the inventors and manufacturers of deadly weapons, and of the panic-mongers who lie awake at night to feast their belligerent eyes on ghosts that rise at the bidding of their fears. To such men every star is Mars and every planet Jupiter. Their nights are filled with spectacles of international terror, and at the dawn they are alert to sound the alarms which interested ears are only too eager to hear. One year the menace is Japan, the next it is Germany, and the next it is likely to be Terra del Fuego.

The hope of the bellumists is to convert such scarecrows into battleships. To be ready for attacks that might (?) come is the burden of their threnody. But why a nation should spend millions for implements of death to destroy spooks has never been made clear.

The militarist should be proud of himself. He can rejoice that he has not run in vain, neither labored in vain. He has been a huge success. He has laid plans for an "adequate" army and navy with such skill—and neither is adequate until it is larger than that of any other nation—that at his bidding the national treasury has poured out its gold like water.

Despite the fact that this country has not an enemy anywhere, the agitation for further increase of armaments has gone on and on, and one is compelled to wonder whether there can be an end. We can only hope that the success of the militarist will result in his undoing, that he has done so well that the enormous burdens which follow will wake us up to the folly of spending money to fortify a country with guns against imaginary fears—to say nothing of the folly of perpetuating the fighting spirit in a civilized age.

There is no question now before this country that should interest the Church like the proposal to increase our military establishments. That increase means the inbreeding of the fighting spirit in schools and colleges, the doctrine of the success of might not right, the denial of the teaching of Jesus. It means practical atheism, the subordination of intellectual pursuits to the vocation of the fighter, the destruction of holy ideals in the state, and finally the overthrow of Christianity itself.

Armaments mean war, and war is hell. The Church that does not see the connection between the two must be a worshiper of Mars and not of the meek and lowly Nazarene. Many ministers unite to have a prize fight in a city stopped, but are apologetic when it comes to prize fights between nations. They are deceived by the talk about the defenses of the nation and our "unpreparedness," when no reason in the world can be given for further defenses.

As well might a company of physicians throw any community into a panic by predicting an invasion of the cholera next year, and when asked for the ground of their alarms reply, "It might come." Might! So might a landslide of witches. If we yield to this talk of imaginary fears every man might as well arm himself to the teeth every time he walks the streets of his village, lest a burglar demand his money or his life. The puzzle is as great to find the village burglar as to find the international burglar. The latter has a high old time cavorting in the undisputed spaces of some arid imagination.

What folly for the Church to pray for peace while holding aloof from agitations that foster war!

What folly to pray "Give peace in our time O Lord," while accepting the dictum that in time of peace we should prepare for war!

What folly to sing again the angel's song of peace on earth, and allow without protest a group of men whose living and fame depend on wars and rumors of wars to goad the nations to cut each other's throats!

What folly to exalt the mercy of God and then hold indifferently aloof from policies that make God seem like an unheeding Moloch!

What folly to hold that God is on the side of the heaviest guns and then to preach that right is right as God is God! Guns settle the question of the strongest and of victory, but they never settle questions of right.

The guns that we buy today may blast a nation that the Church hopes to save tomorrow. The defenses of a nation are not armaments, but righteousness, justice and truth, let the sabre-rattlers say what they will to the contrary.

But we will be told that we are beating the air, that no men in their sober senses and no nation believes in war; that all that the present agitation means is an increase of the defenses, the police force, of the nation, so as to insure against attack. But if the Great War has not taught us the folly of preserving the peace by piling up colossal armaments—for these arguments of defense and insurance we borrowed from Europe—we must remain invincible in our unteachableness.

Let us hear Mr. Bryan's story:

> Suppose there was a large lake, and suppose there were a dozen land owners, with their lands bordering on the lake, living peaceably together without trouble or signs of trouble. A man who builds ships goes to one of them and says: "You are very foolish; you are living here with no protection whatever. Don't you know that any of these men around you might build a battleship and come here, and you are absolutely defenseless? Now let me build a ship for you and you will get ahead of them." Suppose the man was foolish enough to take the advice. Just as soon as that ship was built, the shipbuilder would go to the next neighbor and say, "Why, don't you see that man over there has a battleship? What has he got it for? Do you suppose he is building it for nothing? Have you any doubt he has designs on you? Where else can he use it except on this lake? You had better get ready. Now, I can build you two." And if this man is foolish he would build two. Then what an argument the shipbuilder would have when he got to the third man! "Why, there are two of them against you. They might combine, and you are absolutely defenseless." Now, with that argument he could go all 'round the lake, and after building ships for each one, he could go back to the first one and say, "You are out of date. Look at the improvements since you built. And then you have only one, and these other people have four or five or eight apiece. There is nothing for you to do but mortgage your land. Now you are in for it." This is the race of the world, my friends—this is the mad race of the world.

What can the Church do at such a time? It can proclaim again the teaching of Jesus. It can say without reservation or apology, "Blessed are the meek," even though the bellumist and those who judge success by force and numbers laugh at our simplicity.

If war is not atheism, what is it? If it does not set back all progress human and divine, what does? If it does not set Jesus Christ at naught with a mock sceptre in his hand and a crown of thorns upon his head, what could more effectively do it? If it does not laugh at the Church in its efforts to bring about human brotherhood, what does it do? It does give the enemies of Christ an occasion to blaspheme. It pays no attention to the cradle of innocence nor to the cathedral of Rheims. It glories in a welter of blood and ruin.

But we don't believe in war! Then let us cease making preparations for war and sowing the seeds of hate and suspicion among the nations. Let us cultivate the things that make for peace, and disseminate among the nations as among communities the principles of righteousness and justice and friendship.

"Never Man So Spake"

A Thrilling and Searching Sermon.

BY BURRIS A. JENKINS.

NEVER man spake like this man! A strange answer for commissioned officers, sent forth to arrest a malefactor! If the chief of police of this city, or the sheriff of this county, should swear in a posse of deputies and send them out to arrest some criminal, and those deputies should come back and say, "No man ever talked like this man; we never heard any man speak like this man," we would all agree that it was a strange answer for commissioned officers of the law sent out to arrest a man.

No doubt these men had followed Jesus about for several days, listening to His words, trying to take him in his talk, to find ground upon which to witness against him. I can see them now as, on the outskirts of the crowd, their dark, Oriental eyes overhung by their dark, Oriental brows, they listen half listlessly to what Jesus is saying. Suddenly some such utterance as this strikes their ear, "I am the bread of life." "I am the water of life." "I am the Way and the Truth and the Life. No man cometh unto the Father but by me." "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Their brows lift, their eyes open, they listen more intently; unconsciously they edge their way through the crowd, until by and by in the very front rank of his hearers, with eyes wide open and ears wide open and mouths wide open, they are hanging upon his utterances. Then the crowd breaks up. These men mechanically betake themselves back to the palace of the high priest, having forgotten their errand; and when at last they are confronted with the stern question, "Why have ye not brought him?" Why, they had not thought what answer to make, and they just blurt out the first word that comes to mind, "Never man spake like this man. We never heard anybody talk like this man." A strange answer, indeed, from commissioned officers sent out to arrest a blasphemer.

THE ARRESTERS ARRESTED.

But strange as this answer is, it is the same that ever has been made by all who, in the history of the world since the time of Jesus, have gone forth to arrest the progress of the Christ. Many a man in the strength of his mighty mind has said, "I will stop him; I will arrest him; I will put an end to this delusion of Christianity; give me time. When my book is written, when my system is complete, when my word is spoken and my work is done, then no longer will men listen to this Jesus." But after the work has been accomplished, after the life has been given to the purpose, after the book is written, and the word spoken, these men, all of them without exception, have come back saying, "Never man spake like this man."

There was Strauss in Germany who wrote his Leben Jesu, the Life of Jesus, to prove that the Master was a myth, an idea, an ideal, beautiful but legendary,—Strauss closes his volume with a tribute of the highest respect to the very conception of such a life as that of Christ. When he yields the idea, he yields all; for the man capable of the idea, the ideal of a life like Jesus must have been the Christ himself, for no other could have conceived it. Over in France, Renan, with his Vie de Jesu, his Life of Jesus, beautiful, poetical, beyond compare, paying high tribute to the esthetic attractiveness of the great teacher, the "Charming Rabbi," closes his volume with these words: "Whatever miracle the future may bring forth, Jesus of Nazareth will never be surpassed." And John Stuart Mill, over in England,— much the same type of mind as those two to whom I have referred,—has somewhere declared that humanity has made no mistake in pitching upon Jesus of Nazareth as the acme of mankind. Those are great men speaking,—men whose minds command respect and whose work has been epoch-making in the world. Every one of them comes back with the same answer as these officers, "Never man spake like this man." Whatever else they may say, this is the universal verdict of truly great men who have examined the life of Jesus.

Rev. Burris A. Jenkins, pastor of Linwood Boulevard Christian Church, Kansas City, Mo.

CAN WE STILL BE CHRISTIANS?

Now a yet more modern voice comes, and Rudolph Eucken, writing in the last two or three years upon the subject "Can We Still Be Christians," declares that it is a startling fact that the scholarly minds, the great minds amongst men in all Christian history, striving to get along on other than Christian ground, to exist without it, have almost without exception been compelled to say it is essential, we cannot live without it.

Now, what was there about the teaching of Jesus that thus lays hold upon the minds of men, so that when once they have heard it they never can forget it? What is there about his words that, like grappling hooks, fasten in the mind and never can be shaken out? It is not that he was a great literary artist, though he was; it is not ornamentation and the decoration of his speech; for there was with him no striving after effect, no "sewing on of purple-patches," no "painting in of cypress-trees," as Horace puts it, in his canvas. He was a plain, blunt man that simply spoke right on; in words of wondrous beauty, to be sure, whose literary and poetical value has rarely been equaled, and never surpassed by any great teacher of ethical truth; but the secret lies not in literary charm.

Neither was it any striving after originality, after the new and the strange and the unusual. In this age of ours a man must have a very unusual message if he is to catch the public ear. Something original that nobody else has ever spoken, something Bernard Shawesque is necessary to catch the attention and reach the ears of men. We will not read this morning's paper; we must have this evening's paper; and not the three o'clock edition or the four o'clock edition or the five o'clock edition, but the extra, hot from the press and still damp with the printer's ink. And the novels that we read, they must be fearfully and wonderfully made if they do not pall upon the taste of this spoiled age. We need not think we have a monopoly of the desire for the new, the strange, the unusual. When Jesus came there were men who gathered together for nothing else but to hear or tell some new and strange thing. Now, Jesus does not pander to this taste for the abnormal and the new. He does not hesitate to take old truths and recoin them and use them over again for the good of men. He does not hesitate to borrow from the Prophets, from Moses, from the Pentateuch.

CONFUCIUS AND THE GOLDEN RULE.

Confucius spoke the Golden Rule five centuries before Jesus uttered it. Confucius said, "Do not unto others what ye would not that others should do unto you." Jesus turned it about and made it positive and said, "Do unto others as you would that others should do unto you." You say there is no difference between the two;—one is simply negative and the other is positive. Yes, but that is all the difference in the world—the difference between the negative Orient under its banyan tree and within its age-old walls, and the positive, active Occident — the difference between the East and the West. So with Jesus, truth, wherever he finds it, becomes grist for his mill, becomes ore for his mint. He takes it and stamps it with his own inimitable coinage and sends it out current legal tender in the world.

It is the truth and the character of the truth that he uttered, it is the fact that he spake as man never spake before and has never spoken since, it is this that makes him all-powerful in the minds of men so that whether they will or no, whenever they come into the presence of his teaching they bow and must bow, they cannot forget, they cannot let go of it when once they have heard his message.

JESUS' MANY-SIDED TEACHING.

It would be manifestly impossible in the few short minutes at our command to make anything like an adequate resume of the teaching of Jesus; so various is it, so widely applicable to the life of men, it is like a many-peaked mountain range. But it is possible to glance over the great snow-crowned summits of the group, even as it is possible to look over the Alps and see the Jungfrau, the Matterhorn and Mont Blanc. At a moment's glance two or three of the most valuable of his utterances capture attention, which have become an everlasting and invaluable heritage of mankind.

Let us select three of these, three that have to do with the relations existing among the only three beings that we know anything about in the world: God, myself, and my fellow man. I know that God is. There have been, of course, those who have denied His existence, but they are few. The great multitude of men and women from the beginning of man's conscious life have known that God is. Only the fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. The great philosophers and teachers, scholars of all human history have recognized the existence of God; and it is idle to try to prove that God is. You do not need to prove what men already believe. Then I know that I am.

CERTAIN OF OUR EXISTENCE.

There are some philosophers who have tried to teach us that we could not be certain of our own individual existence. But you never can convince a man that he himself is not an entity. Descartes, it is, the father of modern philosophy, who bases his whole system on, "I think, I doubt, therefore I am." Then I am conscious of the existence of my neighbor. There have been philosophers and whole nations at times who have tried to convince the world that we could not be certain of anything outside of ourselves, that the world was a delusion. The Hindu philosophy is founded upon that conception. But you cannot convince me that my neighbor does not exist. I think, therefore I am, and I communicate my thought to him and he grasps it and gives me his thought back from himself; so he thinks, therefore he is. So then, those three beings exist: God, myself and my neighbor.

The relations existing among them, that is the all-important thing in life. And what are those relations existing between God and myself, between myself and my neighbor, and between man and God? Those are the questions which strike to the very root of man's life. And the answer to those questions is the answer for which man has been craving through all the millenniums of his existence.

MEN PERPLEXED ABOUT GOD.

When Jesus came he found men perplexed with regard to the relation of God to man. They knew that there was a God, but they did not know what kin He was to man. They looked out upon the world of nature and the world of history round about them, the only book that most of was to man. They looked out upon the world of nature and the world of history round them, the only book that most of them could read, to which they had access, to guide them and lead them, and they saw two kinds of gods, or God, in the world: good gods and evil gods, beneficent gods and destructive gods. In the spring of the year they saw the trees and shrubs and fields bringing forth bud and blossom and ultimately fruit, to bless and feed the world, and they said, "Here is a good God, a kindly God that brings these gifts to men." Then they saw the mildew, or the blight, or the storm, or the untimely frost cut down and blast and blacken that leafage and that fruitage, and they said, "Here is an evil, a destroying God in the world."

And they could not understand.

They looked out over the sea, that beautiful blue Mediterranean that was the ocean of the time, and they saw it smooth and wind-swept, bearing the ships on to their desired haven with their riches, blessing and benefiting mankind; and they said, "Here are the footsteps of the good God." Then they saw that same sea tossing mountain high, dashing ships to the bottom, and they said, "Here is an evil, a destroying God that is working against that good and kindly God," and they were perplexed. They saw the mountains bringing forth gold and silver and precious stones to adorn and to enrich humanity; and then they saw those same mountains belching forth fire and smoke and lava and burying whole cities. They said, "Here is a warfare going on between a beneficent or good God and a destructive or evil God." Job cries, "When I look before me I cannot find Him, and when I look behind I do not perceive Him." The psalmist who wrote that ninetieth Psalm, standing as close to God as undoubtedly the singer of such a song did stand, cries out in a pathetic perplexity, the two strains of which are woven together from beginning to end:

THE PSALMIST'S PERPLEXITY.

"Lord, Thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations. Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever Thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, Thou art God,"—the good, the kindly, the beneficent God. "Thou turnest man to destruction;" there is the evil god—"And sayest, return, ye children of men. For a thousand years in Thy sight are as but yesterday when it is past, and as a watch in the night;" the good God, the giver of life. "Thou carriest them away as with a flood;" the evil God that destroys. "They are as a sleep: in the morning they are like grass which groweth up. In the morning it flourisheth, and groweth up;"—the good, the creative God. "In the evening it is cut down, and withereth, for we are consumed by Thine anger and by thy wrath are we troubled;"—the destroyer. He was seeking in the darkness, if haply he might find Him, and yet not understanding Him; it was a tragedy, to know that God was and yet not to know what kin He was to man.

Now, what does Jesus say? Jesus says, "Our Father Who art in heaven;" "I go unto my Father and to your Father, to my God and to your God;" "Our Father Who art in heaven." Never man spake like that;—such calm certitude. The Hindu yonder in the jungles years before had sung about Deus Pater, the Father God. The Greek poet had written of Zeus Pater, the Father God, the same name. The Romans had talked of Jupiter, the Father God, the same name; —and yet of what unspeakable crimes did they make this so-called Father of men guilty! They had no conception of a Father in heaven Who was a real Father to the race. It remained for Jesus Christ of Nazareth to teach us, so that we can never forget it up to this hour, the true kinship of God to man. Today, the little child by his bed, or by his mother's knee, and the strong man battling with the waves of life, all say, "Our Father Who art in heaven." The words are household words now, and on occasion are in everybody's mouth.

WHAT FATHERHOOD MEANS.

But, after all, how many of us have grasped firmly and profoundly the love of God as a Father of man? A gentleman who had two beautiful little children once said to me, "When those children were very young, I would not dare reach up my hands at the second story window of my home with an invitation to them to come. They would leap right down to me in an instant." That is fatherhood. That is the loving trust that a child feels for a normal, sincere and loving father. We speak of the love of motherhood and the beauty of it, and it is the most beautiful thing in the world; but there is a father's love as well; a willingness to give and be given, to spend and be spent for the sake of the offspring, a willingness to stand at the threshold, if need be, and die in the guardianship of them. That is what fatherhood means. Do you suppose if we believed, you and I, profoundly in the fatherhood of God, that there would be any one of us staying away from Him in the brightness and the glory and the blessing of this beautiful Lord's Day morning? Nothing on earth could keep us from Him if once we grasped the profundity of this message of Christ.

Again, when Jesus came he found men perplexed with regard to the relation existing between man and his fellow man. He found that in that day to be a Roman was greater than to be a king, and to be anything else than a Roman was to be a foreigner, an enemy. The names for the two words were synonymous in Latin, and in many another language besides. He found that to be a Greek was to be one of the cultivated, one of the refined, one of the teachers, leaders of men; to be anything else than a Greek was to be a barbarian, bearded and savage. He found that to be a Jew was to be one of God's own chosen people; but to be anything else than a Jew was to be a gentile, with an accent and a sneer upon the first syllable. So it was every nation for itself and the devil take the hindmost—just as it is today. It was each nation armed cap-a-pie against every other nation, and Ishmaels all—just as it is today.

WHO IS NEIGHBOR?

Now, what did Jesus say? He said a certain man went down to Jericho and fell among thieves that beat him and stripped him and left him by the roadside half dead. Then there came by a priest and there came by a Levite, men sworn under solemn oaths to be of service and benefit to every Israelite with whom they came in touch. These men, seeing their bloody fellow countryman lying there on the road, gathered their skirts about them, for they were perhaps on their way to the temple to worship, and if they had soiled themselves with blood they would have been ceremonially unclean and, forsooth, unable to enter the church of God and offer worship to the Almighty Father. Then there passed by a Samaritan. And if there was anybody that a Jew hated with all his soul it was a Samaritan; and if there was anybody a Samaritan loathed from the bottom of his heart it was a Jew. Yet this man it is, of all others, who gets down off his beast and binds up the wounds of the man, pouring in oil and wine, and takes him to the inn and pays for his reckoning for days. "Which of them," says Jesus, "is related to the man that fell among the thieves?" They said— they were forced to say—"I suppose it was he that showed mercy upon him." They could not use the word Samaritan. Then said Jesus, "Go ye and do likewise." You are neighbors all; you are brothers all; there are no boundary lines between peoples and kindreds and tongues and tribes; there are no narrow friths that cause nations to abhor each other in the teachings of Jesus Christ; for the brotherhood of man is universal in its scope. That is the message concerning the relationship of myself to my fellow man.

WAR AND JESUS' TEACHING.

Do we believe that? Two thousand years after it was spoken, ask Europe if it believes. Ask Germany and Austria,

England, France and Russia, ask Belgium if it believes. "Well," comes the reply, "we believe it in America, anyhow." Winston Churchill said if we believed it, it would be nitroglycerine in modern society; it would blow the whole fabric to pieces and change it and turn it upside down. Brotherhood! We have but little conception of brotherhood. We get together in our churches and it is Brother this and Brother that, but if we address a member of a neighboring denomination, not our own particular little section of the great church of Christ, it is Mr. this and Mrs. that. Now, I have no objection to anybody brothering me. I brother a good many men myself; but I do object to the line being drawn so closely. I want to call a man in this church my brother and I want to call other Protestants, the Catholics, all of them my brothers. Otherwise I have not caught the conception that Jesus meant I should catch.

DO WE BELIEVE IN BROTHERHOOD?

We go into our lodges, we clasp hands and give the grip, and it is Brother this and Brother that. But we go outside into the market places and on the stock exchanges and it is Greek meets Greek, diamond cut diamond; we overreach each other in a horse trade or lumber deal, or perhaps I would better say a motor car transaction or a lumber deal. At least such is the case in the lodge to which I belong. How about yours?

Do you suppose if we believed in the brotherhood of man, that there would be any armies facing each other across the French boundary line this quiet, peaceful Sunday morning? Do you suppose if we believed in the brotherhood of man there would be any necessity of our nation's increasing its armament this year of Christ 1915? Do you suppose if we believed in the brotherhood of man there would be any little ragged newsboys sleeping this winter in old ash barrels and rusty boilers and over the gratings of the printing press engines for a little warmth? You say that is an overdrawn picture, there are no boys in such condition in the United States? You can see, any midwinter night when the snow is falling, here on your Walnut street; you can see, on the Bowery and Broadway and Fifth avenue, little fellows with skin showing through their torn pants, almost barefoot, selling their belated news, while the snow comes down, at eleven and twelve o'clock at night.

BROTHERHOOD AND SWEATSHOPS.

There would be no such thing as a newspaper boy in all America if we believed in the brotherhood of man;—unemployed men would be selling the news as they do on the other side of the water; and the boys, every one of them, would be in school under a compulsory education act that compels,—if we believed in the brotherhood of man. Do you suppose if we believed in the brotherhood of man that there would be any sweatshops in our great cities under the management of Christian business men—any great mills that served as prison-houses and slave-grounds for little children? Do you suppose there would be any army of employes ground under the heel of greed and piracy,—if we believed in the brotherhood of man? Do you suppose if we thoroughly believed in the brotherhood of man, there would be any dark corner of any dark continent unenlightened by the message of the gospel of Jesus this year of grace 1915, twenty centuries after the glad news was uttered?

"THE WAY BACK TO GOD."

If we believed in the brotherhood of man we could not go fast enough to tell it to the uttermost parts of the earth. If we believed in the brotherhood of man, would there be in any part of our cities no churches, while the churches move out into the wealthy and the fashionable and the comfortable sections of the city? If we believed it—but it is too great for us! It will take us another nineteen centuries, perhaps, to achieve it, to enter into the A B C's of this great doctrine, to enter even into the vestibule of the greatest thing in the world, which is love.

Once more, when Jesus came he found men perplexed with regard to the tie that should bind them back again to God. He found them troubled with the world-old consciousiness of their separation from their God. Instinctively they felt somehow that they ought to be in touch with Him, that they ought to be at one with Him, but they felt between Him and them a veil hanging, the veil of sin. They saw between Him and them a great, yawning gulf, the gulf of sin. And this consciousness of separation between Him and them was the keenest consciousness that they had in all their lives.

What did Jesus say to them? Said he, "I am the Way and the Truth and the Life. No man cometh unto the Father but by me. If ye had known me ye should have known my Father also." Never man spake like this man. Other men had said, not "I am the way back to God;" but they had said, "If you will listen to me, if you will follow my teachings, if you will walk with me in the porches or the groves, if you will adopt my system, if you will learn my philosophy, after twenty, thirty or forty years of study, I think perhaps I can show you the way of life." But here was a man who did not say "I will teach you, listen to my words," but who said, "Follow me. I am the Way and the Truth and the Life."

"THE MESSAGE OF OUR MASTER."

I suppose there is in this city, certainly in the country somewhere round about, an old homestead that was a little quieter last night than it ought to have been; there is a vacant chair in front of the fireplace, and a vacant chair at the table; there is a room upstairs quiet, echoing to no footfalls, unoccupied through the night; there is in that room, no doubt, an old walnut bedstead, an old marble-topped wash-stand and bureau; there is the counterpane kept smooth and clean and uncrumpled by a mother's tender, gentle hands. And down in front of that fireplace last night was an old father whose heart was empty, yearning, void and breaking; while out yonder across the Father of Waters, across the prairies, in the mountains, in the lumber camp, in the great city was a young boy who said, "I will not go back home. My father does not love me any more and I do not love him any more and I will not go back home." Now, if somebody could go to that boy with the truth, could say to him, "Your old father does love you; your father's heart is breaking for you; now come back home; I will take you home; I will lead you to your father; I will be the way home for you to your father's house!" Now, what is that but the story of the lost or prodigal son, the message of our Master? Nobody else ever talked like that; nobody ever struck that chord in human nature; and it has wended its way to the hearts of men more than any story that ever was told. Why? Because it is so true to the universal experiences of men. Because we know that you and I are that lost son out on the desert, in the purlieus and slums of the city, refusing to go back home.

FATHERHOOD AND BROTHERHOOD.

There is the word of life—to whom else can we go? Shall we not heed that message of Jesus who solved for us the problems of existence and completed the great triangle of relations—the Fatherhood of God to man, the brotherhood of man to his fellow man, and Jesus Christ the atoning power that leads us back home again to the Father's house?

On Being Neutral

A Series of Reflections for the Times.

BY GERALD STANLEY LEE.

IF BEING a neutral means being neuter—if it means maintaining a strict unexceptionable nothingness when I am reading the war news—if it means putting one's soul, ice cold, into a conversational thermos bottle, and not showing any warmth or having any strong gusts of feeling at all—then I am through trying to be a neutral. If such be neutrality, neutrality is insipid, stupid, and a little mean.

What I have been trying for is something very different; and it has grown on me—this sense of what neutrality really is—the more I have tried to get near to it. Neutrality in a fight is the most interesting, absorbing, and glorious feat a man can undertake. The spectacle of a great nation maintaining, in the face of the world today, a true neutrality, is as impressive a display of power as the burning of a city.

THREE TYPES OF NEUTRALS.

In the first place, only a man of deep passions, of rich, powerful, intelligent sympathies and desires, has the equipment to be a neutral, or the driving power to put through such a huge spiritual engineering feat as seeing all sides—sympathizing and understanding, mastering and ruling all sides, shaping them and moulding them and welding them into the Future, like a god.

There are three men or types of men in history who have had the heat and the light and the driving power in them to be neutrals. The scientist, the great scientist, has a passion for burning down through his own prejudices to the truth, whatever it costs or however it hurts. The great inventor has a passion for relentlessly pursuing all knowledge, blending opposite ideas and obdurate contradictions, taking things that won't go together and putting them into the electric furnace of his mind until they do. Then there is the poet, who, whether he is a man of action or a man of thought, relentlessly loves humanity and will not give up, who will not be satisfied with nothing less than possessing, understanding, and loving all people in his heart.

These men are neutrals. When we know one of these men or read the life of one of them, we know what being a neutral is like.

But having decided what being a neutral is like, how can a person be one?

When the war broke out I was sitting at table in a summer resort with a German woman who had lived only a year in this country and whose husband (a professor in one of our great universities) had gone down to New York on the first train, to get away to the fight. Everybody at every other table in the dining-room was against Germany. We were all neutral at our table. It was not hard to be neutral at our table.

THINKING IN TERMS OF PEOPLE.

Of course we are familiar with the abstract principle that nearly everybody would do what everybody else does, if he came to the point of doing it, as naturally and as unconsciously and as implacably as most people who do things come to the point of doing them.

It is easier to think and to come to one's principles like a neutral if one does one's thinking in terms of people. A fellow human being who will dramatize our principle for us—make the principle breathe and smile, give to it the tears that belong with it, surround it with the death that belongs to it, with little children, with sons, with dead brothers, with the memories of heroic fathers—helps one in being neutral.

The best arrangement I know of in the present war would be for people to sit at tables and break bread with all nations.

THINKING AHEAD OF OTHERS.

Another convenience for being a neutral, besides thinking in the terms of people, is thinking in the terms of the future. Neutrality, instead of being a stupid equilibrium of sympathies or a state of indifference, really works out in the end into a passionate foreseeing of what is going to happen, and sympathizing with people for the way they are going to feel. Neutrality may be said to be taking sides in people with what they are going to be. We put ourselves where we see what they really want. We want for them what they want, a little faster than they themselves do. Neutrality works out, in the last analysis, into prophecy—into seeing ahead for people to where their roads come together. The interests of fighters are all bound to converge into peace the moment the people calm down to a shrewd, quiet guessing on what they really want and where they are really going.

To be a neutral a man goes on ahead a little. He gets to the fork of the roads first. It seems to be our patriotism here in America just now to get to the fork of the roads first. The President is asking it of every American man every day—asking him to move on. Every American is expected to be just now all by himself, as well as he can, a kind of small Hague tribunal in advance.

"Safety First"

BY HENRY W. HUNTER.

When we read of the annual toll that the American nation pays to carelessness it is no wonder that means are being taken to get them to think before they act. It is said that the accidents in the Pennsylvania coal fields are equal to the slain in the battle of Bull Run. Over 200,000 accidents are totalled in this country every year. Many of these people are disabled for life, many more are killed outright because some one failed to stop and think. The railroads of the country are striving by many means to impress upon their employes and patrons the great need of getting the safety habit. It was the writer's pleasure to attend quite recently an illustrated lecture given by Mr. Isaiah Hale, Safety Commissioner of the A. T. & S. F. system. Mr. Hale gives his entire time to traveling about this great system and telling the men by word and picture that "it is better to be safe a thousand times than to be crippled once."

Rev. H. W. Hunter, Wellington, Kan.

"SAFETY FIRST" PROMOTION BY AUTO.

Mr. Hale carries a full equipment of sides that are reproductions of snapshots taken with his camera, showing various careless and unsafe practices in railroad operations. Together with these he has a two reel motion picture entitled "Steve Hill's Awakening," which forcefully tells a story of a young railroad man who, through carelessness, got started wrong, but who learned before it was too late that it is better to be safe than sorry, and whose life-long service to the company was a great credit.

The A. T. & S. F. road has equipped for Mr. Hale a large auto with specially arranged wheels that can be used on their tracks. When he comes to a gang working on the road he stops for a while and gives them a talk. If there are Mexicans in the crowd he starts the talking machine which gives them the story in their own tongue.

Mr. Hale says things in a manner that you cannot forget. For instance: "Did you ever think of your mind as your personal engineer; of your head as the cab; of your eyes as the windows through which he sees things or should see them?" "Being crippled generally means changing your occupation; it renders you less likely for promotion; it reduces your earning capacity; it shortens your life; it changes every condition of your living; it interferes with the plans that you have made for educating your children; it means cheaper living; it means cutting off those pleasures which you and your family now enjoy."

The Sante Fe points with pride to a record of only sixty-six employes killed on their system of over 11,000 miles, during the year ending June 30, 1914, as compared with 105 last year.

Women and War

By S. J. Duncan-Clarke.

They have gone from the shop and field,
From city and fruitful plain,
The hammer and chisel are laid aside,
The sharp scythe rusts in the grain,
Peasant and artisan,
In the game of war mere pawns,
At the word of king no more than man
They march where red hell yawns.

In the door of a vine-clad cot,
On a hill that slopes to the sun,
On the curb of the street where its rays beat hot
The same grim thing is done—
Beneath the brave, set lips,
Beneath hysteric cheers,
A woman's heart feels fear that grips
And drips her blood in tears.

Hapsburg and Romanoff
And the Hohenzollern throne,
What are these names but words that scoff
As they rob her of her own?
A child is clinched to her breast,
And a child is held by the hand;
One sleeps, the other cheers with zest—
They can not understand.

But before the woman's eyes
Is a vision ghastly red
Of flames that leap to smoke-hung skies,
And war-plowed fields of dead.
She can see—oh, poignant clear—
The form of one in the heap,
The man to her pain-racked heart most near,
Shell-kissed to endless sleep.

His eyes at least are blind,
His ears are deaf to the strife,
But, Mother of God, for her and her kind
What is there left in life?
The music dies in the air,
The cheers are silenced, and then
They turn these women to face their care,
And cry to God for their men.

For there is the child at her breast,
And there is the child at her hand,
And the heart that breaks can find no rest
And they will not understand.
For life gives no release,
And tho' her heart be dead,
The cries of the children will not cease
If she fail to find them bread.

So, yon in the vine-clad cot,
On a hill that slopes to the sun,
She must toil lest the grapes in the vineyard rot
And young life be undone;
And here in the city, gray,
Where the sun beats hot on the street,
Her woman's wit must find a way
For little stumbling feet.

The day shall come when she
Will bow her head no more,
But facing her God with unbent knees
Will curse the crime called war.
And curse the men called kings
Who seek their shining goals
On a pathway paved with bleeding things
That once housed living souls.

O wombs refuse to bear,
O breasts refuse to nurse,
Until thy sons who toil shall dare
To end this age-long curse!
The world is sick of thrones,
And pride-mad monarchs' lust—
The day soon dawns when it disowns
All gilded human dust!

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

A LAYMAN MISSIONARY PROPHET.

AN EVENT of first rank significance in the organized life of the Disciples of Christ is the announcement that Mr. R. A. Doan, of Nelsonville, Ohio, is to be representatively connected with the Foreign Missionary Society upon his return from his prolonged tour of the mission fields.

The account of Mr. Doan's China experiences found on another page of The Christian Century indicates with what eager and humble but resourceful spirit he has entered upon this first-hand study of the mission situation. He will bring back to the churches the enlightened point of view of a clear-headed and ardent-souled layman, and from such a point of view a unique interpretation of the missionary task may be expected to be developed.

Mr. Doan has been famous through all the Christian denominations for the extraordinary success of his men's Bible class in Nelsonville, a class that numbers close to one thousand men, and exercises great moral power in the community. His business interest is centered in the brick-making industry. It is presumed that it is now his intention to consecrate the remainder of his life to carrying the missionary message, which his own heart has so well learned, to the hearts of the business men of our churches.

In such a program for his life, Mr. Doan no doubt has received suggestion and inspiration from Mr. George Innes, the Minneapolis banker and lumberman, who a few years since withdrew from active business and is now devoting himself to a wonderfully fruitful lay service among his own people, the United Presbyterians.

Mr. Doan's service promises to be equally fruitful in blessing the churches of the Disciples of Christ.

DISCIPLE MISSIONARY AS RED CROSS INTERPRETER.

RECENTLY a company of Red Cross physicians and nurses was sent from Japan to assist the British troops at the front in France. These young Japanese people were about twenty in number. They made the journey to Europe by way of the United States, and the group was photographed several times en route.

It is of interest to Disciples to know that the official interpreter provided by the Japanese government for these Red Cross helpers is Rev. Noataro Otsuka of Tokio, a Disciple minister in one of our mission churches there, a graduate of the University of Chicago, and well known to many of the Disciples in America. His abilities as an interpreter have been tested by more than one visitor to Japan who has had occasion to speak in our churches there. It is a rare honor thus conferred upon Mr. Otsuka, and his experiences at the front are sure to be intensely interesting.

It will be remembered that another of our missionaries, Rev. William Remfry Hunt of Chuchow, China, now at home in England on furlough, is with the Red Cross forces at the training camp.

CONVERTS OR PENITENTS.

EVANGELISTIC reports are puzzling even to the initiated. They usually convey very erroneous impressions. In the old evangelism there was little attempt by denominational churches to reduce results to definite numerical figures. Among Disciples the method of making a numerical report was easy and, in the main, dependable, because of their Scriptural notion that conversion was not complete until the candidate had been baptized. Therefore they counted as converts only those who had been initiated into the Church. When a Disciple minister reported 100 or 500 conversions we all understood without inquiry that there were 100 or 500 persons added to the Church.

This, of course, is the right procedure, and it is to be regretted that our Disciple evangelists are falling into a misuse of the term "convert" which is condemned both by our fathers and by our principles.

Baptism is for the remission of sins as truly today as in the New Testament days. We are baptized into Christ, that is, into his body, which is the Church. And this act is a saving act, a part of the spiritual process of conversion.

To count a person as a "convert" who only believes and repents, but who declines to accept membership in Christ's body is to mislead the readers of such a report. It would be better to use another word. Instead of saying that Billy Sunday has had 25,000 converts up to date in Philadelphia, it would be truer to fact to say that that many "penitents" have been counted.

They cannot be numbered among the converts until they complete their conversion by baptism.

VIGILANCE WORK IN BURMAH.

AT THE same time that our American cities are becoming sensitive to the social evil and its physical as well as moral dangers, the missionaries on foreign soil are facing the same problem and are attempting to meet it in the most direct way.

Those who have traveled in mission lands know to what a dangerous extent the diseases of the immoral life prevail in the Orient. Medical missionaries are constantly confronted by the ravages of these evils in the lives of the patients who come in such members to their dispensaries. The percentage of venereal troubles runs very high in the list of diseases to be treated.

In Rangoon, Burmah, where the Baptists have a strong missionary work, there has been organized "The Vigilance Society of Rangoon," which is issuing a series of phamplets to aid in carrying on its campaign against vice, and particularly against the evil of segregation. It has been the custom of the authorities to set apart a certain section of the city as the vice district, in which between six hundred and a thousand women reside, ranging in age from twelve or thirteen upward. These women include in their number Europeans, Indians, Burmese, Japanese, Chinese and others.

This segregated district is in the heart of the city, and all around it are colleges and boys' schools attended by not less than seven thousand students, besides schools for girls, churches, chapels, Sunday-schools and Christian associations. The menace of this recognized vice is apparent at once. But vice is not confined to this area. It never is confined to a segregated district. And those who are most interested in the moral life of the community are increasingly aware of the futility and inhumanity of attempting to deal with the vice problem on the basis of segregation. It is interesting to know that the Christian forces throughout the mission world are uniting with all well-disposed citizens in a determined campaign against the social evil.

THE CASE OF MR. PATTON.

HOW sensitive the social conscience is becoming has nowhere been better illustrated than in the case of Mr. J. A. Patton over which the Methodist church is now deeply agitated.

Mr. Patton is the chairman of the book committee of the Methodist Book Concern, a committee whose jurisdiction covers the denominational papers known as "Advocates" with various prefixes. He is one of the most generous and loyal and useful supporters of his local church in Chattanooga, Tenn., and of the wider denominational interests.

But Mr. Patton is the main proprietor of a business which manufactures a well-known patent medicine called "Wine of Cardui." The American Medical Journal recently made report of an analysis of this "medicine" and declared that it was not medicinal in character but derived its popularity from the alcohol contained in it.

Mr. Patton has replied to this charge by instituting suit against the Journal for $200,000 damages, and pending the trial and decision he has resigned from all his offices in the church.

In private life and in his personal interests Mr. Patton is described as a man of exceptionally gracious and consecrated personality. There is a moral tragedy in the thing that has overtaken him, whether he can prove the innocuousness of his preparation or not. Every one will hope that the facts may be proved otherwise than as charged by the Journal, and that a churchman so useful and, personally, so sincere, may continue unstained to serve the cause of Christ.

One cannot forbear to mention, however, without prejudice to Mr. Patton or his preparation, that it is only in our late day that a man's business is regarded as so integral a part of himself that it has to square with ideals to which his personal life conforms.

Steadily, in spite of the pessimists, the ethics of Jesus are saturating the social order of the world.

KEEP CALM!

ENOUGH data has come to hand to justify us in assurring the brethren that the western bishop can do them no harm. Our efforts to establish the identity of "The Right Rev. St. D. Martin, Bishop of Columbia," who is recorded in the World Almanac for 1915 as receiving his appointment from the "Christian Conference of the Disciples of Christ," have been rewarded by a communication from his grace himself, also a letter from the New York World enclosing photograph of the communication on the strength of which the article went into the Almanac, and a lucid report of the whole situation written by Rev. C. F. Swander, state secretary of Oregon.

Dictates of charity restrain us from going into any detailed explanation of what might have proved an interesting diversion from the dull monotony (!) of our ecclesiastical ongoing.

The brethren may be sure, however, that there is no occasion for sounding the alarm. They may safely take the attitude expressed by Rev. A. B. Philputt (or at least attributed to him) on the occasion of his first glimpse of Dr. Ames' Hyde Park church in Chicago. He sighed a sigh of relief and said, "Well, until our heresy gets to be a good deal bigger than that we needn't be alarmed about it!"

With much greater confidence we can assure our readers that until "The Right Rev. St. D. Martin, Bishop of Columbia," grows to be a more formidable figure than he now is no one need be alarmed about his Episcopal pretensions.

UNITARIANS RETALIATING.

MR. SUNDAY and the Unitarians are at loggerheads. The evangelist has been so drastic and partisan in his treatment of them that they are retaliating in various ways. They have established near his tabernacle in Philadelphia a reading and consultation room where Unitarian literature is distributed to counteract the misrepresentation which they charge Mr. Sunday deals out to his great audiences.

The Christian Register, of Boston, the Unitarian organ, declares that Mr. Sunday must be regarded as fair game for the critics on the ground that he spares nobody, and is "especially scurrilous" when dealing with Unitarians. The "Register," therefore, has no hesitation in retaliating with a countercharge. It asserts that by indisputable evidence it is shown that in an oration before the old soldiers at Beaver Falls, Mr. Sunday delivered almost verbatim the eloquent Decoration Day address delivered by Robert Ingersoll in the Academy of Music, New York. The "Register" continues thus:

> The charge is not a mere general assertion that he drew his inspiration from the famous infidel, but parallel columns show that the report made by the Beaver Times in 1912 corresponds almost word for word with the oration now printed in the collected edition of Ingersoll's works. We quote one sentence from Ingersoll which Sunday used with the change of only one word: "This is a day for memory and tears. A mighty nation bends above its honored graves and pays to noble dust the tribute of its love."

To these charges Mr. Sunday replies that he "can't stop to heave rocks at every yellow cur that barks at his heels;" "it is the same old low-down flock of booze-hoisting infidels;" "you can tell the whole dirty bunch to come on; I am here, and I am giving hell the best kind of a run I know how."

It is as regrettable as it was inevitable that such a contention should have arisen. No doubt there are many among Mr. Sunday's converts who do not regard plagiarism as wrong, and probably they would be especially slow to sense the wrong when the victim of the theft was a celebrated infidel.

But Mr. Sunday is inexcusable in his coarse tirades against a group of religious people who, however he and we may differ from their views, are nevertheless an important and integral part of the moral and spiritual life of the nation.

EVANGELISM IN PEKIN.

REPORTS are coming in regarding the remarkable series of meetings held recently in the old capital of China by Mr. Sherwood Eddy and his associates of the Y. M. C. A. and the united missions. Two years ago a series of services was held in various cities of China under the joint direction of Mr. Mott and Mr. Eddy. The present meetings were, in a way, the continuation of the former.

Careful preparation was made for some months in advance. The different missions in Pekin united in the work and this cooperation was one of the chief sources of its success. The way was paved by a series of scientific lectures given by Prof. Robertson of Shanghai, whose popular illustrations of modern methods of transportation, wireless telegraphy, photography and other matters of deep interest to the Chinese student mind have given him an enthusiastic hearing in all the chief cities of the great republic.

The officials at Pekin took an earnest hand in the preparations for the meetings. A mat auditorium was erected inside the Forbidden City near the central gate. The structure held four thousand people. The Board of War sent two hundred army tents to cover the top of the auditorium in case of rain. A special detachment of police was furnished by the city to guard the hall. Holiday time was granted in all the public schools so that all the students could attend Mr. Eddy's meeting.

The number of persons reached by the preliminary scientific lectures and by the addresses of Mr. Eddy were more than twenty thousand. Of these more than two thousand signed the cards pledging themselves to investigate Christianity and to study the Bible. A follow-up campaign has been organized, and it is the hope of all the workers that lasting results may issue from this remarkable series of gospel meetings.

THE FORTUNATE ISLES.

YOU sail and you seek for the Fortunate Isles,
The old Greek Isles of the yellow bird's song?
Then steer straight on through the watery miles,
Straight on, straight on, and you can't go wrong.
Nay not to the left, nay not to the right,
But on, straight on, and the isles are in sight,
The old Greek Isles where the yellow birds sing
And life lies girt with a golden ring.

These Fortunate Isles, they are not so far,
They lie within reach of the lowliest door;
You can see them gleam by the twilight star;
You can hear them sing by the moon's white shore—
Nay, never look back! Those leveled gravestones,
They were landing steps; they were steps unto thrones
Of glory for souls that have gone before,
And have set white feet on the fortunate shore.

And what are the names of the Fortunate Isles?
Why, Duty and Love and a large Content.
Lo! these are the isles of the watery miles,
That God let down from the firmament.
Aye! Duty to man, and to God meanwhiles,
Your forehead to God though your feet in the dust.
Aye! Duty to man, and to God meanwhile,
And these, oh, friends, are the Fortunate Isles!

Religious Education Association Meets.

As these lines are read, the Religious Education Association will be in session at Buffalo, N. Y. The date of the meeting is March 3 to 7. The topic for the discussions will be "The Rights of the Child." The child will be discussed in his relations to the family, the church, the state, the school, and the civic life. Plans will be discussed for fitting the child for the needs of life in the modern world.

Y. M. C. A. Favors Family Altars.

The Des Moines Y. M. C. A. is leading a movement to establish family altars in that city following the "Billy" Sunday campaign. A Bible reading league has been organized. The enrolment at the last report was 4,547 and the goal is ten thousand. The daily papers of the city are furnishing daily Bible notes on the editorial pages from material provided by the association. All the churches of the city have had a considerable number of new members come into the fellowship recently and the task is to hold and educate these new members.

Bibles for Sailors.

The American Bible Society is to establish a new station in which to distribute Bibles to sailors. This will be located on the Panama Canal. Every sailor passing through the canal will be given a Bible, and it will be in his own tongue, since this society has Bibles in 127 different languages. The station will be at Balboa, at the Pacific end of the canal.

Hold Lenten Services In a Theater.

The Episcopalians of Chicago will hold Lenten services in the Majestic Theater at noon on week-days. These services began on Ash Wednesday and will continue until the day before Easter. Among the speakers are the Rt. Rev. C. P. Anderson, Bishop of Chicago, Rev. Arthur Rogers, D.D., Rector of St. Mark's church in Evanston, and others. The Holy Week services will be in charge of the bishops.

Issue Bulletin On Christian Science.

Two articles on Christian Science that appeared in the North American Review last year from the pen of Rev. R. H. McKim, D. D., LL.D., rector of the church of the Epiphany, Washington, have been out in the form of a bulletin with the title "Christianity and Christian Science." The bulletin is being widely circulated by the Episcopalians.

Churchmen Sign Saloon Licenses.

In Pennsylvania, the high license law requires the application of at least twelve "moral men" before a license is issued. It has become rather too common for churchmen to sign these petitions. Great consternation has been created by the declaration of the Potter Enterprise, a secular paper, that it will publish the lists of these "moral men," and where they are churchmen the names will be set in bold type. Where the signers are elders or deacons, there is a specially large size of type that will be used. This paper insists that if these men believe that the saloon is a good thing, they will welcome the publicity. It says: "Surely the 'moral citizens' who are anxious to have their names written indelibly on the tablets of memory, as boosters of important industries for their respective communities, will give a hearty welcome to all possible publicity. They have something to be proud of, and for their progeny to be proud of!"

Dr. E. C. Moore In Chicago.

Dr. Edwin C. Moore, the newly elected president of the American Board of Foreign Missions, which is supported chiefly by Congregationalists, visited Chicago in February and meetings were held on each of the three sides of the city, at which he spoke. At one of these meetings, President Eaton of Beloit College, who is vice-president of the society, made an address. Sherwood Eddy was also in the city and assisted in presenting the situation of world-wide missions. Dr. Moore was much in demand while in the city and spoke at the University of Chicago, Chicago Theological Seminary, the Harvard Club, and other institutions. Dr. Washburn, long the president of Roberts College, congratulating Dr. Moore on his election to the presidency said, "The day is without parallel. You have come to the kingdom for such a time as this."

Dr. E. C. Moore, newly appointed President of the Board of Foreign Missions, who spoke at various Chicago educational institutions during February.

J. A. Patten Has Resigned.

J. A. Patten, president of the firm which manufactures "Wine of Cardui," about which a great controversy has arisen in the Methodist Episcopal church, has resigned from all connection with the general board of the church. He is suing the American Medical Association for three thousand dollars on account of libel. He states that he is confident of vindication, but that he does not wish to embarass his church even temporarily.

Congregationalists and Baptists.

The Congregational Club of Chicago held a banquet in the La Salle Hotel recently and among the speakers was Rev. Charles W. Gilkey of the Hyde Park Baptist church. His topic for the evening was "Tendencies Drawing Us Together." He said in part: "Congregationalists and Baptists are alike in everything but baptism. We Baptists are beginning to discover immense value in the form of your method of baptism, and are seeking to secure for ourselves that value. But we are also discovering anew the immense value of our own attitude as to the outward expression of a confession of faith. I clearly foresee the time when we shall get together on the basis of some method which shall secure to us all both that recognition of the solidarity of the family which you have so firmly maintained, and that confession of faith in adolescence and adult life which we have manifested, and shall leave to each home and each individual the precise form of the administration of the mode of baptism." Some Baptist newspapers have been inclined to make protest against these utterances as a misinterpretation of Baptist attitude.

Mission Work and the Telephone.

That the victory of talking across the continent by telephone has any connection with home mission work may not be apparent at first but such is the fact. The man responsible for this victory was started out in life by a preacher. The invention that has made transcontinental speech possible was secured by the telephone corporation from Michael I. Pupin, a Serb who was born in Hungary. He was giving shampoos in a Turkish bath establishment in New York when found by the pastor of a Brooklyn church who sent him to Adelphi college. The preacher was one of the strong factors in this man's life.

Interdenominational Mission Text-books.

The interdenominational committee of twenty-eight has provided a new set of mission study books for the coming year. The watchword selected by the committee for 1915-16 is "The Church and the Nations—Thy Kingdom Come, Thy Will Be Done on Earth." The individual books in the course which are to be published May 1 are as follows: "The Rising Churches of Asia and Africa," by A. J. Brown, D.D., of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions; "The Church and Its Task in America," by C. L. White, D. D., of the Baptist Board of Home Missions; "The King's Highway," by Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery; "Home Missions in Action," by Mrs. John Allen. The committee is already formulating plans for the year 1916-17. The general subject for that year will be "The Two Americas." This is made opportune because of the proposed Latin America mission conference at Panama, and of the new attention turned toward Mexico and Central and South America by the Mexican troubles, the opening of the Panama Canal, and the new relations created by the war in Europe. Since 1917 marks the 400th anniversary of the beginning of the Protestant Reformation under Luther, the studies for that year will turn upon the great fundamental Protestant ideas and the present position of Protestantism in the world.

Editor Lays Down His Pen.

Rev. George G. Rankin, D. D., editor of the Texas Christian Advocate, an organ of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, has laid down his pen and entered into the everlasting rest. He was regarded as one of the strong figures of southern Methodism. He devoted much of his strength to a fearless, uncompromising fight against the liquor traffic and its political allies.

Declines Office of Bishop.

The Rev. Dr. Alexander Mann, of Boston, who was recently elected as Bishop Suffragan of Newark, in New Jersey, has declined to accept the office. He is a successor of Phillips Brooks in the great Trinity church of Boston and follows in the steps of his illustrious predecessor, who twice refused the office of bishop before finally accepting it. There is at present no one else prominently mentioned for the place.

Catholics and Protestants Confer.

Rev. Frederick Lynch, the well-known peace advocate, has a suggestion to further peace between Catholics and Protestants. Controversy is occasioned in part by certain anti-Catholic papers and has resulted in the Knights of Columbus being given fifty thousand dollars to help to put an end to "religious bigotry." The Rev. Mr. Lynch proposes that the Protestants choose ten leading clergymen and ten laymen, while the Catholics choose an equal number of clergymen and laymen, and that these men meet on Lake Mohonk, where peace meetings are often held, and discuss their differences in a friendly way. He urges that the antipathy between Protestants and Catholics grows out of their lack of acquaintance with each other. The Knights of Columbus recently asked the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America to pass the following resolution: "Whereas: it is understood to be one of the principal purposes of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America to promote concord and good-will among the various denominations of Christians; and Whereas: this meeting of the Council desires again to affirm its position in this regard, it is hereby Resolved: That the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America in meeting assembled does not sympathize with the methods employed by a certain publication known as 'The Menace' and like publications in slandering and abusing one of the most prominent Christian Churches in America."

Church to Serve City.

St. Thomas Episcopal Church on Fifth avenue, New York City, is the most fashionable congregation in the metropolis, and it has just completed one of the most beautiful church edifices in America. Its rector, Rev. Dr. Ernest M. Stires, officiates at more fashionable weddings than any other clergyman in New York City. But judging by an earnest statement in the parish year book, just issued, he is determined to make his congregation serve the great city as well as lead its society and with its building decorate its fashionable street. He calls his people to utilize their beautiful possessions in "strengthening this great fortress of God and its future work in the strategic centre of Manhattan Island," and to "make it an influence which shall radiate light and life, East and West and North and South, through a population which will increase with the years, and whose greatest needs will be moral and spiritual." Ten years have passed since the disastrous fire destroyed the previous church. And now that it has been restored the rector urges the men of his parish to make "commensurate response" so that "the city will confess that the parish has a greater claim to respect than that based upon the beauty of its church." To this end Dr. Stires suggests the formation of these eight committees: St. Thomas's Chapel; Missions (city, diocesan and general); City Administration (police, fire, etc.); City Institutions, (jails, work-houses, etc.); City Improvement (streets, parks, etc.); Industrial Problems (unemployment, strikes, etc.); Social Problems (poverty, vice, crime, disease); Legislation. A consideration of these problems is rightly claimed by Dr. Stires as "the peculiar responsibilities of Christian citizenship," and now that the material building is completed, he pleads for "the need of the city" and "larger Christian usefulness" by the people of the parish. These needs and the opportunity for their supply are detailed in the many valuable reports contained in the Year Book, and the effort to solve some of the problems by their work is also recorded in these same reports. There are thirty-five organizations reporting for the year, and all appear to be active and successful.

Religious Liberals Organized.

The National Federation of Religious Liberals was organized in Philadelphia, Dec. 2. 1908, by the late Henry W. Wilbur and others, at a private conference of representative religious thinkers and social workers of the United States. Its purpose is to bring together the various forces that dissent from religious orthodoxy. The Fifth Congress of the Federation will be held in the Friends' meeting house, Philadelphia, Feb. 21-24. Among the speakers will be Rev. Charles E. Beals, Rev. Lee S. McCollister and Rev. Alfred Hussey.

Student Volunteers Assemble.

Chicago is the center for some big religious enterprises as well as for commercialism. There are two hundred student volunteers for the mission field in the institutions about the city and these assembled at Northwestern University on February 20 and 21. Bishop William F. McDowell, of the Methodist Episcopal church, and Dr. Abram W. Harris, president of Northwestern University, addressed these candidates for the mission field. Conferences were held on the various phases of missionary activity.

Denominations Hold Joint Banquet.

The "Social Union" is a feature in each of the larger denominations of Chicago. It is an institution to bring the best people of the churches together for monthly or quarterly banquets, at which time the big enterprises of the kingdom are presented in addresses and discussions. These social unions are now federated and on February 27 occurred the annual union banquet in which all these organizations joined. At the meeting this year, Professor Lynn Harold Hough, of Garrett Biblical Institute, spoke, and the Methodist Preachers' Quartet sang.

Bishop Sumner Has Successor as Dean.

Since Dean Sumner became Bishop Sumner, it has been an interesting question as to who his successor would be in the cathedral where he so deeply influenced Chicago's life. Bishop Anderson has appointed Rev. Walter S. Pond to be dean of the cathedral in succession to Bishop Sumner. Mr. Pond is priest in charge of Holy Trinity and St. Philip's mission churches in the stockyards district, and has been connected with the stockyards office of the United Charities for the last seven years. Mr. Pond was a student of Dean Sumner's course in Social Service at the Western Theological Seminary, and was presented by the dean for his priest's orders. Mr. Pond is thirty-one years of age and was born at Aurora, Ill. The family moved to Chicago during Mr. Pond's boyhood and became connected with the parish of the Redeemer at Hyde Park. There Mr. Pond served in the several capacities of choir boy, acolyte, Sunday-school teacher, and lay reader. He was graduated from Shattuck School, Faribault, Minn., in 1905, and then returned to Chicago, where he took his B.A. degree at the University of Chicago. His interest in social work began when he came under the influence of Prof. Henderson of the University of Chicago. About this time the Rev. Dr. Page of St. Paul's Church asked Mr. Pond to identify himself with Chase House, a social settlement which was doing a good work for the stockyards community which lies in front of the yards. Into this work Mr. Pond entered heartily and was superintendent of Chase House at the time he left that work in 1911. His theological studies were pursued at the Western Theological Seminary in Chicago, from which he was graduated in 1911. While a theological student, he built St. Jude's Church, South Chicago, where he served as lay reader for two years. Bishop Anderson ordained Mr. Pond to the diaconate in the Cathedral Church on Trinity Sunday, 1911, and to the priesthood six months later in St. Bartholomew's Church.

Cardinal Gibbons Thinks World May End.

Cardinal Gibbons recently discussed the present world war and he was asked by one of his hearers what was his opinion about the relation of the war to the end of the world. The prelate replied that he believed that the war was indeed a sign of the end and he related the scripture, "Nation shall rise against nation," to the present situation.

Anti-Saloon League's New Headquarters.

The Anti-saloon League has purchased a building at 470 Louisiana avenue, Washington, D. C., and they will establish a branch publishing house here very shortly. This is but one of the plans for expansion that the league is working on at the present time.

The Flying Squadron Popular.

The Flying Squadron, a group of the most eminent temperance and prohibition speakers of the entire country, is now engaged in visiting the leading cities of the country and speaking upon the subject of national prohibition. Among the well-known men in this group are Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, Dr. Ira Landrith, Hon. J. Frank Hanly, Hon. Oliver W. Stewart and others. These men have been greeted by audiences that filled the auditoriums full to overflowing and often necessitated overflow meetings. They have already visited eighty-five cities in eighty days and spoken in them. Rev. E. A. King, D. D., pastor of Plymouth Congregational church, Seattle, Wash., says: "The work of the Flying Squadron helped mightily to turn the tide in favor of a great 'dry' vote in this state."

Churches for Old-age Pensions.

Old-age pensions for federal employes have been endorsed by the Social Service Commission of the Churches of Christ in America. It is thought by the commission that the men who serve the government in times of peace are quite as much entitled to consideration at the hands of the government as those who serve in times of war. The new plan would affect more postal employes than any other kind.

Here and There

THE SIMPLE GOSPEL AGAIN.

How frequently we read that such and such a man's success is attributed to his preaching the simple gospel. A simple gospel is one that can easily be understood; and to some the gospel of "The Two-Seed" sect in all its primitiveness will be triumphant because of its simplicity; to others the gospel as interpreted by a Schliermacher will be simple, the gospel stripped of all extraneous materials. But the Two Seeder would regard the Schliermacher interpretation as Greek, far beyond his understanding, while the disciple of Schliermacher would smile at his neighbor's gospel. Everybody must believe in the simplicity of the gospel; it must be brought within the understanding of those who hear, though simplicity to one may be incomprehensibleness to another. Simplicity is a relative term and derives its value wholly from the point of view of the individual.

As a matter of fact every sect accounts for its success by its presentation of the "simple" gospel. Among us Disciples the use of the term is intended to flatter some who very often say very disagreeable things about their religious neighbors, and then salve their consciences for the offense against propriety by affecting to believe that the simple gospel could not be preached otherwise. This is also called the "whole" gospel. We have no objection to the procedure at all when it is understood. But how account for the failure of the many who preach precisely the same gospel, letter for letter, that the much-heralded successful brethren preach? Then we all know of men who don't preach that kind of a "simple" gospel at all, whose labors are abundantly fruitful. How shall we account for their success? For instance, Joseph Parker and C. H. Spurgeon were the poles apart in their message and methods. Both were wonderfully successful. Each believed that he was preaching the gospel as Christ would have it preached.

We know of a really eminent man who tries to make the gospel so simple that his congregation a good part of the year wishes that he would be abstruse for a change; and we know another man who does not claim to preach a simple gospel at all, and never thinks of simplicity in his preaching any more than he thinks of Hebrew, but who goes right along and says what is in his heart to say, whom everybody delights to hear, and whose labors have been abundantly blessed in the Lord.

We know success when we see it as we know electricity when we see the lightning. But we know as much of one as we do of the other. Rules for success are to be tasted and laid on the side of our plate with as little ceremony as possible.

We may therefore conclude that any gospel which does what it is designed to do is a "simple" gospel, no matter what the critics say, on the same principle that the horse that wins the race has the best pedigree.

THE DISAPPEARING BROTHERHOOD.

To the preacher who left the Disciples for the Catholic fold must be added another who joined the Methodists. We are not vexed, but according to the fashion of the age, we say in the most charitable manner that we hope those two denominations will gain as little as we have lost.

THE RURAL CHURCH.

Let us not despair. We know of a church that gives more than a thousand dollars to missions and benevolences. There are thousands just like it in the land that could do what it is doing, but most of them are seeing the world from the vantage of a full pocket-book through the week and an empty pocket-book on Sunday. Many of their leaders move among their business associates as kings every day in the week, while among their fellow Christians on Sundays they move as beggars. The only vision that many rural churches have is through the hole of the dime that is dropped in the collection plate.

A VICIOUS SYSTEM OF TRAINING.

In some parts of the country churches are possessed with the parsimonious devil that people do not come to the services because the preacher asks for money, or because a collection is taken. Worse than all else is the fact that the officials accept the fallacy and adopt the theory that to ask a man for money is to close the church door in his face. As a result, all requests for money are set down as begging, and the non-church members are habituated to the popular notion that the Church is a beggar. Yet these same officials wonder why it is so difficult to raise the pastor's salary! His services are those of a beggar, and people have the right to say how much they will give to a beggar; consequently they pay at the ice cream supper, and the official board turns the proceeds over to the pastor. Truly, a beautiful system of church finance.

Any church dishonors itself that fears to take an offering for the support of the gospel. The church that converts its minister into a beggar converts its own ministry into a farce.

THE PREACHER ON THE "MOVIES."

Not the moving picture films but on the trains, going from one parish to another. A good brother minister writes:

"Five moves in five years; what a drain on body, mind, estate, and religion! But it's the doom of all men who serve the class of churches that I seem fated to serve. They are adventures, we, the preachers, are adventurers. We take our life in our hands, and leap into the dark. Changeless is our changeableness. Each preacher the victim of the worst system of church government that the devil has afflicted the saints with. We've sown to the winds of independency and reaped the whirlwind of anarchy—and all in the name of New Testament Christianity!"

ANOTHER BELITTLING DISTINCTION.

"Why is it that the actor tells fiction like truth, while the minister tells truth like fiction?" Did you ever hear that, gentle reader? I never hear it but that I want to escape from the house or hurl an ax at the offender. I have even heard many preachers quote this calumny as if it were true. The antithesis ensnares our ears the first time we hear it, and we write it down, go home and interpolate it in next Sunday's sermon, and feel repaid when some dear sermon-taster at the close tells us how impressed he or she was—probably he this time—with the truthfulness of that remark, etc.

If any preacher tells truth like fiction he should be made to resign from the ministry at once. This is not to say that all preachers do tell the truth as if it were burned into their souls. He can know that truth is truth, though he has only come to the rim of it, as a child knows that the sea is the sea, even if its silver edge has only touched its feet. But to say that the preacher tells the truth as if it were fiction—Whew!

Please call the undertaker!

A POET'S VIEW OF THE MINISTRY.

In a recent magazine one writer tells us of the failure of the Church, and in McClure's for March Mr. Robert Haven Shauffler draws a funeral picture of the ministry. He has actually put widow's weeds on it. Some of his pictures, no doubt, are true to life, as a wryneck is true to life, but these pictures like wrynecks are exceptional.

If Mr. Schauffler will come to Kentucky we will show him that in his article he got off on the wrong foot; we will present for his inspection a regiment of preachers, picked up at random, and defy him to hang his hat on the ribs of a single one; we will go even further and ask him to identify the ribs, if he can, under their armor-plate of adipose tissue composed of fried chicken, turkey, old country ham, prime roast beef, porterhouse steak, with all the delicacies of the season and trimmings to match. We will show him a race of preachers who up to this very hour have eaten beaten biscuits, corn bread, sorghum molasses in the plural—please hand me those molasses!—layer black-cake and angel food, to say nothing of jellies, preserves, and pies, and who have never swallowed their pride with their potatoes. This story of starving preachers is a new one on us. In Kentucky the preacher is looked upon as one whose mission in life is to consume the largest quantity of food possible; otherwise he is a weakling and a dyspeptic. And though apoplexy seize him at the dinner table he must never falter, he must be game, and go down with flying colors. Our far-famed hospitality gets us going and coming: if we don't eat we're sick; if we do we're dead; if we don't take Solomon's advice and put a knife to our throat at frequent intervals.

Let Mr. Schauffler come to Kentucky and we will compel him to revise his views. We will show him how to live and how to die—on slight provocation. We will make him eat everything in sight so as to get the minister's point of view; we will even compel him to eat his words. When he sees our prosperity I verily believe we will have to put him in irons to keep him from following the chicken's example of entering the ministry.

Mr. Schauffler is a poet, and a superior poet at that, and indulges in poetic license while expressing his views. He should be slapped on the wrist for so doing. His conclusions compel us to believe that he has been associating with those lean, lank, skinny preachers of New York, and judges the world by them.

We are wondering what such men as Drs. Jowett, Cadman, Hillis, Parkhurst, Jefferson and Philputt would say of his estimate of the ministerial profession!

THE FIRING LINE.

With the steady increase in the number of divorces, why would not this be a good heading for some daily paper that devotes much space to domestic inarticulatedness?

Three States Consider Woman Suffrage

West Virginia, Arkansas and New York Take Progressive Stand.

WEST VIRGINIA TO VOTE ON SUFFRAGE IN 1916.

West Virginia has become a campaign state, and in 1916 for the first time in the history of the country (unless one include Oklahoma) an election on equal suffrage will take place south of Mason and Dixon's line.

A telegram to the Woman's Journal from Florence Hoge, of Wheeling, says that the suffrage amendment passed both houses of the legislature by a big majority.

The amendment had previously passed two readings in both houses, but a two-thirds vote was necessary for final passage. The fact that there was no difficulty in securing the two-thirds shows that suffrage sentiment in the state is running high. The amendment had to pass only one legislature and will be voted on next year.

West Virginia enters the lists as the first real campaign state since the November lection; for in Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, New Jersey and Iowa where campaigns are expected, the amendment has not yet passed the second time.

The rapidity with which the victory was accomplished will come as a surprise to many. For a long time, however, it has been apparent that there is strong feeling in the state that women should be enfranchised. The amendment failed two years ago only because of the two-thirds rule. The congressmen from that state voted four to one for the nation-wide suffrage amendment during the recent debate in the House. And although the suffrage organization is not a large one, it contains some of the most active workers in the country.

A break into the legislatures of the solid south has at last been made.

ARKANSAS PASSES SUFFRAGE AMENDMENT.

Both Houses of the Arkansas Legislature have passed the suffrage amendment, which barely fails to go to the voters through a technicality in the law which says that only three amendments can be submitted at once.

The Senate had passed the amendment 23 to 12, and a few days ago the House took it up. Two of the three possible amendments had already been passed, one a 12-mill school tax and the other a 3-mill rural tax. Representative Gray of Independence moved that the suffrage amendment be postponed, but his motion failed 67 to 25. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Constitutional Amendments. A hearing was held and the committee voted on the same day to report favorably. The time for a vote was set for Feb. 5.

In the meantime, however, the labor people succeeded in filing their petition for amendments to the initiative and referendum, and all three places were gone.

The House did not discard the suffrage amendment, however. It passed it by a vote of 51 to 18. In case any of the three other amendments are ruled out, as some have been in the past, suffrage will go before the voters in 1916.

AMENDMENT WINS IN NEW YORK.

Without a single dissenting voice each house of the New York Legislature voted last month to submit the suffrage amendment to the voters next November. New York is now a full-fledged campaign state.

The resolution came up in the Assembly Feb. 3. Assemblyman Landon said something about "female voters," alleging "the women" were asking for "a gold brick," and Assemblyman O'Hare also spoke against the resolution; but when both Majority Leader Hinman and Minority Leader Smith asked for unbroken party pledges, all opposition ceased.

Contrary to expectation, the Senate acted on the amendment the very next day. Minority Leader Wagner moved that the Assembly resolution be substituted for the one already introduced in the Senate by Majority Leader Brown. This was done. Senator Brown then moved passage. There was no debate and no opposition.

The passage of the amendment by the New York Legislature marks a victory for suffragists which crowns efforts begun in 1848.

"LET'S GIVE 'EM THE VOTE."

An orator generally uses any one of seven thousand reasons for the fall of Rome, or he can invent a new one and no man is the wiser, writes Art Young in the Metropolitan. He can say that Rome fell because Cæsar neglected to wind his alarm clock or because of the high cost of butter. One reason is as good as another. Therefore I was not surprised while listening to the debate on the woman suffrage amendment to learn from at least six southern members that Rome fell because women agitators pushed it over.

That such an obvious right as woman suffrage should have to be debated at all is a sad reflection on the growth of human intelligence, and that state rights, that toothless old fetish of the dead past, should be used as the principal argument against it is also a tragic comment on the narrow wisdom of the majority of United States Representatives.

TROUBLES OF A WOMAN MINISTER.

Because she was a woman, Dr. Anna Howard Shaw had a lot of trouble before she was ordained. Here she tells some of the questions asked her. The Metropolitan tells her story:

On Monday morning when the Conference met in its final business session, my case was reopened.

I was there to answer any questions that were asked of me, and the questions came like hailstones in a sudden summer storm.

"Paul said, 'Wives, obey your husbands,'" shouted one of the older men. "Suppose your husband should refuse to allow you to preach? What then?"

"In the first place," I answered, "Paul did not say so, according to the Scriptures. But even if he did, it would not concern me, for I am a spinster."

The old man looked me over.

"You might marry some day," he predicted, cautiously.

"Possibly," I admitted. "Wiser women than I am have married. But it is equally possible that I might marry a man who would command me to preach, and in that case I want to be all ready to obey him!"

At this another man, a bachelor, also began to draw from the Scriptures. "An elder," he quoted, "shall be the husband of one wife." And he demanded triumphantly, "How is it possible for you to be the husband of a wife?"

In response to that I quoted a bit myself. "Paul said, 'Anathema unto him who addeth to or taketh from the Scriptures,'" I reminded this gentleman; and I added that a twisted interpretation of the Scriptures was as bad as adding to or taking from them, and that no one doubted that Paul was warning the elders against polygamy. Then I went a bit further, for the absurd character of the questions was getting on my nerves.

"Even if my good brother's interpretation is correct," I said, "he has overlooked two important points. Though he is an elder, he is also a bachelor; so I am as much of a husband as he is!"

CALIFORNIA SENDS BILL TO FATHER

The California Appellate Court has upheld the lower court in the ruling that illegitimate children must be supported by the father. The decision came in a case against an Italian hotelkeeper in San Francisco. A little Italian woman, Agatha Leventini, testified that she had been supporting the child with $20 a month out of a wage of $35 a month. The father, Luigi Gambetti, is said to be earning $150 to $200 a month.

Many illegitimate children in California have had to be supported by the state. About $50,000 annually has been spent for such purposes. "In many instances," says the Sacramento Bee, "this cost will now fall upon the fathers."

Women vote in California.

THE ANGEL OF THE COMMONPLACE.

Lighten the morning, fill the day
With visions from the Infinite;
Throw hope across the saddened way.
Change the soiled robes for garments white,
And let us see through winsome grace
An angel in the commonplace.

And bid her touch, O Lord of life,
The gloomy corners where we work,
Calling us forth into glad strife,
To places where no shadows lurk
And bid us love our every day,
And see in it the shining ray.

Let us exalt all common things
To high endeavor and great aims
And see the glint of angel wings
Shining across familiar names,
And understand that it is given
To earth to be the door of heaven.

O homely faces of dear friends,
And household pictures in the fires
And humble duties with wise ends,
And faithful loves and pure desires
Could we not better lose than these
All unfamiliar joys that please?

So greet the angel who reveals
The beauty of the homely task,
Who hallows every heart that feels
Content and glad; nor great things ask—
God give us eyes to see the grace
Of angels in the commonplace.

JONATHAN AND HIS ARMOR-BEARER.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR MARCH 21.

1 Sam. 14:1-13. Memory Verse, 7.

Golden Text: Let us put on the armor of light. Romans 13:12.

(1) Now it fell upon a day, that Jonathan the son of Saul said unto the young man that bare his armor, Come, and let us go over to the Philistines' garrison, that is on yonder side. But he told not his father. (2) And Saul abode in the uttermost part of Gibeah under the pomegranate-tree which is in Migron: and the people that were with him were about six hundred men; (3) and Ahijah, the son of Ahitub, Ichabod's brother, the son of Phinehas, the son of Eli, the priest of Jehovah in Shiloh, wearing an ephod. And the people knew not that Jonathan was gone. (4) And between the passes, by which Jonathan sought to go over unto the Philistines' garrison, there was a rocky crag on the one side and a rocky crag on the other side: and the name of the one was Bozez, and the name of the other Seneh. (5) The one crag rose up on the north in front of Michmash, and the other on the south in front of Geba.

(6) And Jonathan said to the young man that bare his armor, Come, and let us go over unto the garrison of these uncircumcised: it may be that Jehovah will work for us; for there is no restraint to Jehovah to save by many or by few. (7) And his armorbearer said unto him, Do all that is in thy heart: turn thee, behold, I am with thee according to thy heart. (8) Then said Jonathan, Behold, we will pass over unto the men, and we will disclose ourselves unto them. (9) If they say thus unto us, Tarry until we come to you; then we will stand still in our place, and will not go up unto them. (10) But if they say thus, Come up unto us; then we will go up; for Jehovah hath delivered them into our hand: and this shall be the sign unto us. (11) And both of them disclosed themselves unto the garrison of the Philistines: and the Philistines said, Behold, the Hebrews come forth out of the holes where they had hid themselves. (12) And the men of the garrison answered Jonathan and his armorbearer, and said, Come up to us, and we will show you a thing. And Jonathan said unto his armorbearer, Come up after me: for Jehovah hath delivered them into the hand of Israel. (13) And Jonathan climbed up upon his hands and upon his feet, and his armorbearer after him: and they fell before Jonathan; and his armorbearer slew them after him.

Verse by Verse.

BY ASA MCDANIEL.

1. The young man that bare his armor. The armor-bearer was a man chosen by a leader to be his trusty attendant, aid, or squire.—Let us go over to the Philistines' garrison. The Philistines were encamped on the opposite side of the valley from where Saul's force was located.—He told not his father. He was afraid that Saul would not approve of the project.

2. In the uttermost part. To the extreme north of Geba rather than Gibeah.—In Migron. The versions make a proper name of the word here, but do not agree in the form. Since the location has been given with some exactness, it seems best in view of the two facts to use in this place the word translated "threshing-floor."—The people that were with him. His bodyguard. The six hundred men mentioned in the text.

3. Ahijah. A great-grandson of Eli who was high priest. Ahijah may be the same as Ahimeleeh, mentioned later in the history, since the names are synonymous. Ephod. Beyond the fact that it was the instrument of the oracle we know nothing about it.—The people knew not that Jonathan was gone. The people were surprised when they saw the commotion in the opposing camp.

4. Between the passes. These were side valleys running into the main wady. We may conjecture that Bozez, "the shining" was the one facing the south, Seneh, "the thorny" the one facing the north." (Smith, G. A.

5. In front of Michmash. The town nearest one of the hills.—Geba, the city at the other point. Note here that the Hebrew Bible has Geba.—Com. v. 2. The hills may have been fortifications.

6. Uncircumcised. The Philistines were not Israelites. This was an epithet of dislike.—Jehovah will work for us. Jonathan's hope is in Jehovah.—No restraint to Jehovah. Jehovah is not limited in his power to save. His salvation does not depend upon numbers, great or small.

7. Do all that is in thy heart. The armor-bearer had confidence in his master's plans.—I am with thee. He did not hesitate to go with Jonathan. Such men make good in life.

8. We will disclose ourselves unto them. They would go to the garrison of the Philistines and would make themselves known to them in the valley.

9. If they say * * * Tarry until we come to you * * * stand still in our place. The mind of the enemy to attack might be a reason for caution.

10. But if they say this, come up unto us. This will be a good omen. It would be a sign of Jehovah's favor.

11. The Hebrews come forth out of the holes. The Philistines may have thought that these two men were deserters and came with no hostile intent.

12. Come up to us. The light language used by the enemy is simply a challenge to Jonathan and his servant. But to them it was a sure sign of victory, and the challenge was accepted.

13. They fell before Jonathan. The Greek version reads "And they turned before Jonathan and he smote them," and on the whole this is better than the Hebrew Bible. In either case the meaning seems to be that Jonathan felled them to the ground.—His armor-bearer slew them. His servant dispatched them.

God's Victory Through Jonathan

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

The golden text for today is significant. "Let us put on the armor of light."

This text is taken from the 13th chapter of Romans. The scene is an old Roman camp. There has been a lull in the battle and the soldiers have taken advantage of this and have spent the night in revelry. It has been a wild night of wine, women and song. But now the first rays of the new day are stealing over the hills. Cold, relentless light is coming to investigate the deeds of that night. Drowsy, bleared eyes, seamed faces, tired limbs, tell-tale marks of dark deeds in dark hours. With the rising sun rings out the sentinel's voice, "The night is far spent, the day is at hand. Put off the works of darkness and put on the armor of light." Dryden tells us of the prince who carried a shield encrusted with diamonds, the brilliant light from which dazzled his opponents and made them his easy victims. "Put on the armor of light."

SAUL'S FAULT.

We will do well in this lesson to lay our finger, like a surgeon, upon the fault in Saul. He was insincere in his relations to God. Ceremony becomes a convenient cover for insincere religionists. It was so in the time of Isaiah; it was true in the time of Jesus. Our Master struck his most effective blows at formalism and hypocrisy. Saul's sin, in today's lesson, is an exponent of his religion. Like the steam gauge on the boiler it shows the pressure. He had a low estimate of God born of his own lowness. His love for God was cold. His appreciation of God's representative, Samuel, was little. His loyalty was inconsiderable. Again he takes affairs into his own hands without regard to God's laws. This always spells defeat. His days are numbered. His life-long enemies are gathering strength and this self-willed monarch will soon bite the dust before them. A wholesome regard for God's laws is fundamental to success.

A GLEAM OF LIGHT.

But in the gathering darkness of this royal house, there is a gleam of brilliant glory—the bravery of the prince. Jonathan knows full well that his father's army is pitiably small, but he also remembers how Jehovah has granted victories in the past by His own mighty hand. Jonathan believes simply that if God wills it victory will come to pass. "There is no restraint to the Lord to save by many or by few." Those are splendid words that might well be given prominent place in every church and in the private room of every young man. One man with God is a majority.

WHAT ONE CAN DO.

"I am only one, but I am one,
I cannot do everything, but I can do something.
What I can do I ought to do—
And, by the grace of God, I will do."

There was a man named Shammah who stood all alone in his patch of beans and who was armed not with a 42 centimeter gun, but with an ox goad, and he won a glorious victory single handed over the Philistines. That old worthy has been a wonderful stimulus to me. I discovered him during the first year of my ministry. I needed to discover him just then. Alone, all alone, no, not alone, for God was with him, he won his splendid victory. No applauding crowds. No strong hearted brothers. Alone—with God—and victory.

There was another brave man. You will find his name in the famous catalog of David's mighty men. He went down into a pit and slew a lion—in the winter time. It was a cold time. No enthusiasm. No revival meeting with a brass band. Single handed in a time when it was cold he went down into the pit, met his lion, and killed him. He belongs in the list all right.

TWO YOUNG MEN.

A hotel in my end of the city is applying for a license to sell liquor. A young man has entered the lists against it. He is organizing his forces. He is assuming all the expense. I believe he will win his brave fight. A modern Jonathan. No, they are not dead, this tribe. Fine, cleancut, young men are fighting as never before. This is the age for young men and we do well who find a moral equivalent for war. A great man exhorts us to "Practice heroism." There are so few saints because so few aim at saintship! Do not forget that God has many victories to bestow upon modern Jonathans. "Christians, up and at them."

"Let us be the people who are generous in the little things, then the big ones will take care of themselves."—Robert J. Kenworthy.

"I have grown to believe that the one thing worth aiming at is simplicity of heart and life; that the world is a very beautiful place; that congenial labor is the secret of happiness."—A. F. Benson

Disciples Table Talk

New Gymnasium for Eureka College.

The students and friends of Eureka college are rejoicing in the fact that a new gymnasium is assured that institution, as the result of a whirlwind campaign in Eureka, Friday and Saturday, Feb. 12 and 13. The Men and Millions Team was in Eureka and offered their services for two days to help the enterprise to success. It required $30,000, an almost impossible task for a small community, but Saturday evening saw sufficient progress to guarantee success.

Cleveland Ministers Vote on "Billy" Sunday.

Ministerial associations of the different denominations in Cleveland are much divided over the proposition to invite "Billy" Sunday to conduct evangelistic meetings in their city. Disciple ministers at a recent meeting passed a resolution inquiring how much money "Billy" Sunday would want in Cleveland, how soon he would want to come and where the tabernacle would be built. They have not yet voted to endorse the movement but have postponed action for two weeks. The Congregationalists will not endorse the movement. [Late reports have it that Mr. Sunday will not be invited to Cleveland.]

Men and Millions Team in Bloomington.

The Men and Millions Team has been in Eureka, Ill., and they have been more recently at Bloomington, Ill. Among those working on the team now are A. E Cory; President R. H. Crossfield, of Transylvania University; President Frederick D. Kershner, of Texas Christian University; W. R. Warren, Secretary Board of Ministerial Relief; Frederick W. Burnham, Secretary American Christian Missionary Society, and R. H. Miller, Secretary Men and Millions Movement.

"The Church In My Town."

Frank E. Jaynes preached a sermon in Wabash, Ind., church, where he is pastor, which was printed in full in the local paper. The preacher said: "In Midvale the church properties represent an investment of probably $25,000 and their annual operating expense runs from $5,000 to $6,000. It has been estimated for me that in Wabash the money invested in church holdings amounts to some $250,000 and the annual running expenses about $25,000. Now I have no objection to this great investment in church properties nor to this stiff annual tax on the people of the city for the support of the churches, if the city is receiving any just return on its investment, but if the people are putting this great sum of money into religious projects and receiving back no just return in tangible, real service, the situation is pernicious and the church has become a grafting institution, not through any ulterior motive, but through gross mismanagement of the public's funds."

Tabernacle Built At Joplin, Mo.

Roy L. Brown is holding special services at Joplin, Mo., and he has had the congregation build a tabernacle to seat 1,500 people. This will be used by the church until the new building is erected the coming year. The new edifice will cost thirty thousand dollars. It will be all in one room, and curtains will divide space for the Sunday-school. The building will be erected of brick or concrete blocks.

Former Editor Goes to Detroit.

J. W. Shepherd, for twenty-two years a citizen of Nashville, Tenn., and the past seven years editor of the Gospel Advocate, has moved to Detroit and taken the pastorate of Vinewood avenue church. He will be on the editorial staff of the Christian Leader of Cincinnati, and write for that paper each week. He belongs to the conservative wing of the Disciples that now publish a separate year-book.

Starts a New Church.

L. W. Spayd is pastor at Hamilton, Ind. Five miles from his town is Jones Chapel, a meeting-house belonging to the United Brethren people, which was sold at auction, and three families in the neighborhood bought it, so there would be a place for Sunday-schools and for funerals. Mr. Spayd recently held a series of evangelistic services in this community, and the families owning the building have united with the church with many others, so that an infant church was organized with 52 members.

Commission to Far East Reports.

The Commission to the Far East, sent out by the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, spent two days making their report before the executive board of that organization. This report has been condensed and printed in the Missionary Intelligencer, the monthly publication of the society. The story of the Commission's finding is to be found beginning on page 110.

Men and Millions Team Wants C. S. Weaver.

Clifford S. Weaver, pastor at Texarkana, Tex., has been called by the Men and Millions Team to assist in the Illinois campaign. Mr. Weaver spent one term of service in mission work in Japan.

Rev. C. S. Weaver, of Texarkana, who has been called by the Men and Millions Team to assist in the Illinois campaign.

Kentucky Representative at Exposition.

Mrs. Bessie Lay, a member of Bellevue, Ky., church, and soloist in that church, has been notified that she will be the Kentucky representative at the Panama Exposition. Mrs. Lay is wife of Charles Lay, president of the American Musical and Dramatic Association.

Soup for Three Hundred a Day.

The Whatsoever Circle of Independence Boulevard church, Kansas City, is feeding three hundred people a day at their station on Washington Park boulevard. It is thought that the need for this service will soon be over.

E. J. Forsythe in Union Evangelism.

The churches of Fulton, Mo., combined for a series of union evangelistic meetings recently under the leadership of E. J. Forsythe. During the meetings a thousand people signed cards expressing their desire to accept Christ, or to reconsecrate their lives to his service. Already 150 new members have been received at the Disciple church of the city, where Murvill C. Hutchinson is pastor, and it is estimated that the accessions will total 200 before the ingathering is over. This is the town where William Woods college is located.

S. E. Fisher Is Recovering.

The last bulletin on the illness of Stephen E. Fisher, pastor of Champaign, Ill., church, states that he is rapidly recovering and that before many weeks he will be able to be in his pulpit again.

Illinois History Off the Press.

"The History of the Disciples of Christ in Illinois," by N. S. Haynes of Decatur, is just off the press and the book will be sold by an agency system through the churches. The book is also sold from the office of the Illinois Christian Missionary Society of Bloomington by John R. Golden, the state secretary.

Striking Sermon Subjects.

Charles M. Fillmore has announced some novel sermon subjects at Hillside church, Indianapolis. Among them is "What Shall Christians Do When Sick?" Another topic announced is "Foot and Mouth Disease Among Human Beings." Special advertising cards were circulated in the community to advertise the sermons.

Some Facts From Mt. Sterling, Ill.

First church, Mt. Sterling, Ill., issues an annual report showing an average attendance in Bible school of 280, with an average offering of $9.36. A net gain in the membership of 75 is reported, and $300 was given to missions. More than 100 are enrolled in the men's Bible class with a yearly average of nearly fifty, sixty being in the class on a recent Sunday. A current literature department is in operation, each member bringing and taking what he desires. A charity work is done here which draws no lines as to religion or non-religion. From the men's class was elected the county judge, county superintendent of schools and city treasurer. This is the strongest Protestant church in the county. Allan T. Shaw is the pastor.

La Fontaine, Ind., Church in Forward Move.

In spite of the conservatism which had militated against progress for a long time, La Fontaine, Ind., congregation decided to build last spring. Their first plan called for six thousand dollars, but eventually they spent twelve thousand. The old building was completely transformed and the property is now pronounced by the state secretary, C. W. Cauble, to be worth fifteen thousand dollars. Mr. Cauble was present to help in the dedicatory exercises and raise the money. When he left town, the people were still giving and the amount pledged had come up to thirteen thousand dollars. The ministry in this church has helped to give it significance. A. L. Martin, who is the district evangelist for the northern district, was pastor at La Fontaine for six years and most of the men who gave large sums came into the church during his ministry. Marshall Long succeeded him and led the church into larger missionary co-operation. The present pastor, F. G. Myrick, has been on the field less than a year, but he has carried this building enterprise to a successful conclusion. He begins a series of evangelistic services following the dedication.

Becomes Pastor of Community Church.

Hartford, Ia., is a little town of two hundred population where religion has not prospered. A. R. Gillespie has been laboring in this section and the community has buried denominational distinctions and formed a "Community" church in which every Disciple of Christ is to "unite on a common basis of faith in Christ and a desire to work together for the common good." Mr. Gillespie will be the pastor.

King of Newsboys Preaches.

"Chimmie" McFadden, called the "king of the newsboys," preached for Central church, Dallas, Tex., where H. D. Smith is pastor, on a recent evening. Mr. McFadden was converted in a New York mission and is traveling around the country and telling of his experiences.

New Building Is Dedicated.

Hiram Van Voorhis of Oxford, Ind., was the minister in charge at the dedication services of Winthrop, Ind., church recently. Among the visitors was T. J. Legg, the district evangelist. Mr. Van Voorhis is holding evangelistic services in this church following the dedication and there have been 31 accessions at the last report.

Why People Do Not Go to Church.

Frank Waller Allen in First church, Springfield, Ill., has been conducting a symposium, on the question why people do not go to church. In his address on the subject he has used the answers of a great many Springfield people who have written him on the subject in answer to his questionnaire. He said in part: "Let us suppose, and in many instances of which I know this to be true, that the church is preaching the gospel of righteousness, justice and love that forms so much a part of the life and teachings of the Carpenter of Galilee, does the public then over-crowd the churches to listen to such a gospel? In the City Temple of London, where the Rev. R. J. Campbell is making such an interpretation of God in human life his church is filled to capacity at both services, and the noon day meetings which are held several times a week. Dr. Aked, of the First Congregational church of San Francisco, Cal., is doing a similar work with like results. It is said that Dr. Aked's church is the only one in San Francisco that is filled to capacity each Sunday. Among our own people Dr. Burris A. Jenkins of Kansas City and Dr. E. L. Powell of Louisville are preaching to tremendous audiences. By granting that many others of whom we are unaware are filling their pews to listen to a spiritual interpretation of modern life and idealism, that leaves the fact that still the public is not going to church. In a word, the blame for the public's failure to attend church must not be entirely laid to the failure of the church to meet modern conditions with a modern gospel. I am wondering now that we have granted that the church is in many respects to blame, if the modern passion for money has anything to do with it? I am wondering if the deification of commerce has anything to do with it. I am wondering if the over-emphasis on the value of amusements has anything to do with it. I am wondering if long hours of exhausting labor and no time for amusements has anything to do with it."

The Mothers' and Babies' Home.

The Mothers' and Babies' home, of St. Louis, conducted by the Christian Woman's National Benevolent Association, an independent organization, had a busy year during 1914, and a heavy responsibility. The children taken in during the year numbered 427; the mothers who were aided and helped to find employment, 161. Forty children were placed in homes to be cared for permanently. The same organization conducts an old people's home in St. Louis which now has 47 old people in its care.

California Edifice Dedicated.

A new edifice at Berea, Cal., was dedicated on February 7. There were delegations from Fullerton, Anaheim, Santa Ana and Orange in attendance. The dedicatory exercises were conducted by Paul E. Wright. C. C. Chapman took charge of the money-raising for the day, and $400 was secured.

Preaches to Printers.

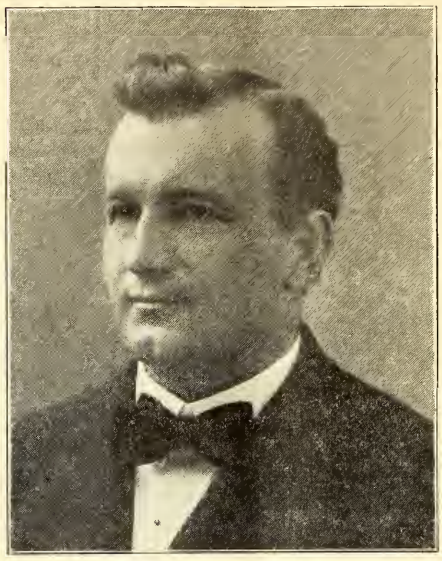
W. N. Briney gave the gospel to the printers of Louisville, Ky., on the evening of February 14. His audience was Typographical Union No. 10, and more than 150 printers of Louisville were present. Mr. Briney was himself a printer once, and is at present an honorary member of the typographical union. He said: "God never pronounced a curse upon labor, but for the sake of fallen mankind, in order that he might have labor in his primitive state to perform, the earth was cursed with thorns and thistles. Labor must lift the ban, free the earth of its curse, throw a safeguard about society, lay the foundation of lasting success and minister to the happiness of the race."

New Mission Volunteer.

Karl Wetzel is a member of the congregation at Indiana, Pa. He has decided to give his life to foreign missionary work and will go away this fall to enter college, where he will prepare himself for the work of a medical missionary. The churches of this town are joining for a simultaneous every-member canvas and Laymen's Missionary Convention.

R. A. Doan in China

News comes from the missionaries that R. A. Doan, who remained in China after Mr. S. J. Corey and Dr. W. C. Bower, the other members of the Commission returned to America, has been speaking to eight hundred men a day in his evangelistic meeting in Nantungchow. This meeting was held in the dead of winter in the city Buddhist temple and, as there is no heat in such places, Mr. Doan and Alexander Paul, who interpreted for him, were obliged to talk with their overcoats on. The fact that nearly a thousand Chinese men would crowd the meeting-place every day under these circumstances indicates how open China is to the preaching of the gospel. These auditors are largely unacquainted with Christianity and they are not rushing into the church in numbers, for with the heathen background which China has it takes time to really convert people to Christ. However, it is significant to note that at the close of this remarkable meeting fifty Chinese men enrolled themselves in a Bible class to study the Bible and Christianity under the direction of the missionaries.



Mr. R. A. Doan

Mr. Doan writes: "I have been moved as never before by the situation in China. It has awed me and inspired me; it has encouraged me, and discouraged me, and has driven me to my knees in prayer. What we do for China we must do now. Unless help and much help comes quickly, opportunities will pass that will never come again."

The experience of Mr. Doan in China makes us wish that dozens of our earnest business men might go out to the Eastern mission fields and take time to see and really understand the situation. Mr. Doan's work on the Commission of the Foreign Society was invaluable and it gave him an opportunity to get into the heart of the mission work and to understand conditions in the Eastern mission fields as few men are able to do.

It is difficult for people in the homeland to measure the influence of the visit of such a man upon the Chinese themselves. Mr. Doan has been a successful business man who in the prime of his life leaves his business to devote the rest of his life to active Christian service. This fact, added to the further fact that his first step in his plans for the full use of his life in Christian service was a visit to the mission fields at his own charges, makes a profound impression upon both the native Christians and the non-Christians. One of Mr. Doan's favorite expressions as he spoke to the people in the mission lands was: "I am a brick-maker. For many years I have been deeply interested in making good brick, but I am profoundly more interested in making good men and I have taken this journey to these Eastern lands to see my brethren face to face that I may know best how to help in making good men the world over. I have discovered in my work for many years that there is no man anywhere who has not some good within him. My heart rejoices when I see the good in my brethren out in these fields—the good which God through His Son is bringing into the light and increasing for His glory."

MR. DOAN'S CONSECRATION SHOWN.

Mr. Doan has with him his wife and his young son, Austin, who finished high school last year. They are in heartiest sympathy with all of his plans and ideals. Mr. Doan had been too busy to go to Europe and enjoy the kind of travel which many business men indulge in as their first delights of foreign journeying. The first desire of these people was to go out to the mission lands where the great transitions are taking place; where the missionaries of the Cross are pioneering; where the kingdom of Christ is rising on the ruins of heathenism.

After finishing the work in China, very likely, Mr. Doan will stop for a similar work in Japan among our stations there. The missionaries are urging him to do so. Then with his family he will come back to America. The Foreign Society is to be congratulated that this earnest business man with such rare gifts in his work with men is to become a permanent part of its working force. Mr. Doan already had a strong place in the hearts of the men of our brotherhood and his powers of leadership have been strongly exemplified in his great men's class at Nelsonville. With these experiences on the mission fields and his intimate touch with the work and its problems, he will have a great influence at home in leading men to see the claims of the mission lands.

New York Missions 1914 Report

At Flatbush church, where F. M. Gordon is pastor, the excellent work done is known to all. The additions during the year were 99; total membership, 204; enrollment in Bible school, 387; average attendance, 210; total money raised, $13,524.90.

At Borough Park church L. F. Carter is pastor. The additions were 25; total membership, 96; enrollment in Bible school, 350; average attendance, 182; total money raised, $9,195.00 ($7,409.50 of this amount was raised for the building). The work at Borough Park is in a healthy, growing condition. The church is completing the solution of the financial problem, which will make this work more efficient and far-reaching.

At Ridgewood Heights church G. S. Bennet is minister. The additions were 8; total membership, 20; Sunday-school enrollment, 235; average attendance, 127; money raised, $234.. The work under the present leadership is proving the best in the history of this mission. The Sunday-school is almost literally bursting out the walls of the building. Steps must be taken to adequately house this work this coming year.

At the Russian Mission John Johnson is minister. The additions were 2, total membership, 33; amount money raised, $144.16. Special emphasis has been placed upon the Russian work, enlarging its scope and usefulness. Classes in English and music are being conducted.

In the Greenpoint Institutional work C. J. Pardee is minister. A class in sewing for girls is the only special feature of work at present. The enrollment in the class is 60; average attendance, 34; total amount of expense, $27.62.

At the Edgewater Mission it was deemed advisable that the Disciples' Missionary Union cease its activities. We are happy to say that the brethren there have purchased the property, and under their own initiative and leadership will undertake to carry on the work. We extend to them the well wishes, interest and hearty co-operation of all the churches and missions of the Disciples' Missionary Union.

M. M. Amunson, Secretary.

Peter Ainslie as Drake Lecturer.

Drake University has secured Peter Ainslie for a course of lectures through four days, with afternoon and evening sessions. On the Sunday following his course of lectures, he will speak at Central church, where Finis Idleman is pastor. Since his return from the World Conference Commission in London, his addresses on Christian Union have even greater freshness than before.

C. S. Medbury in Canada.

Charles S. Medbury, of University Place church, Des Moines, Ia., is taking a vacation after the strenuous labors connected with the "Billy" Sunday meetings, and he is spending the vacation by going on a lecturing trip in Canada. He will be in Calgary and in other prominent cities in the British northwest.

W. S. Athearn Publishes New Book.

The second book from the pen of Walter S. Athearn will be published from the press of the University of Chicago before the first of March. This book is called "The City Institute." The book is to be sold for seventy-five cents. Mr. Athearn is executive secretary of the Educational Council connected with the Religious Education Association. He is announced to deliver an address before the Religious Education Association at Buffalo on "A Survey of the Work of Religious Education in the Colleges of America," and also on "Next Steps in the City Institute."

Church Split is Mended.

A number of years ago Waukegan, Ill., had a good church, but with the coming of a preacher by the name of E. N. Tucker, there came also division in the ranks. A second church was organized on the west side of the city housed in a basement structure. The second church spent several years suing the first church for its property. At last it found dissension coming in its own ranks over the preacher, so his relation to this church was at last severed and he is now a truck gardener, according to press reports. Meanwhile C. G. Brelos had taken the pastorate of First church and through his genial spirit the two congregations have been brought into fellowship again. The Second church recently dedicated the completed building and First church attended the dedicatory exercises. The secular papers of the community have given the Disciples more good words in a week than in many years past. Both congregations are needed in the city and they will continue their work but henceforth in the spirit of fraternity.

Well-Liked Pastor Dies.

M. M. Show, who was pastor at Wapella, Ill., is dead. Last summer he was taken ill with liver trouble and went to the Mayo brothers in Minnesota for an operation. It seemed that he was cured but he did not regain his health again. Mr. Show was an unmarried man. He had made many friends in the community by his upright character and his social qualities. His death occurred at Centralia, Mo.

Hon. Champ Clark Speaks at Church.

Hon. Champ Clark, Speaker of the House of Representatives, spoke on "George Washington," at Vermont Avenue church, Washington, D. C., Feb. 21. "If I had carte blanche to appropriate as my own the name of any of the teeming sons of Adam," said the Speaker, "I would unhesitatingly select that of Washington. Washington was thoroughly human, and no doubt sometimes sinned," said the Speaker. "I am glad he possessed the ordinary passions of man and did sometimes sin, for it shows we belong to the same breed that he did, which is a great honor to the rest of us."

Fights Church Piano With a Gun.

Religious values have a queer assessment in some minds, as is evidenced by an event near Kokomo, Ind. James McPhillip, Jr., took complete possession of a country church ten miles east of that city. His father had deeded the ground to the church twenty years ago with a reversionary clause in the deed by which the property was to revert to the family in case a musical instrument was ever used in the building. Recently the young people installed a piano and the young man who now lives in Ohio heard of it. He took possession of the building with a shot-gun and was only dislodged by a sheriff coming with a warrant for him. The church has decided for the sake of peace to abandon the use of the instrument.

F. M. Dowling Dedicates in Hawaii.

F. M. Dowling, the veteran minister who is pastor at Fullerton, Cal., has been invited to dedicate the new church building at Honolulu the third Sunday in March. He will set out on his journey shortly. The dedication will be entirely free from any money-raising enterprises as the expense of the construction is already provided for.

Aged Minister Dies.

J. M. Crockett, a well-known minister of Missouri, died at Kansas City, Mo., on Feb. 20. He left a widow and four daughters who are all married and have homes of their own. He was 66 years of age at the time of his death. He has held pastorates at Miami and Bosworth in Missouri. The funeral services were conducted by Burris A. Jenkins, of Linwood Blvd. church, Kansas City.

Buffalo Happenings

In Richmond Ave. church, Buffalo, John P. Sala has just finished a series of evangelistic meetings with 45 accessions. Being new to the field, he felt this would be a quick and efficient way of getting acquainted with its problems and opportunities. He was assisted by Jack Lewis, with his strong tenor voice. Mr. Lewis holds his audiences with the great solos of the masters. He is pronounced by Mr. Sala to be an ideal man for a city church.

B. S. Ferrall and his people of Central church will hold a short series of evangelistic meetings, closing Easter Sunday. They are getting ready to build a $70,000 structure. The Disciples are a live people in this near eastern city.

Harris Miller, at Riverside church, is enjoying the fruits of three years of hard labor in a great Bible school and a church numbering over two hundred. This congregation is planning a large addition to its building.

It is rumored that another Ohio preacher will join the ranks of the Buffalo Disciples within the next month.

National Benevolent Association Notes

The main portion of the new Kansas City Hospital, costing about $200,000 is nearing completion. This noble structure is a thing of beauty and will be an invaluable asset to the Disciples of Christ through the ministry of healing it will render.

The family of the Juliet Fowler Home for Children expects soon to occupy the beautiful, modern building that is being completed and will accommodate 100 children. Orders have been placed with a St. Louis firm for furniture of the latest approved models for this home.

The National Association has a fine line of cantatas and other attractive free literature ready for Easter celebration on behalf of the widow and the orphan. These cantatas include: "Open Doors," (now on the press); "Loving in Deed and in Truth," (1914); "Easter Gifts and Gratitude," (1912); "Resurrection Rays," (1914); "The Garment of Praise," (1914).

Jas. H. Mohorter.

A Compliment for Chas. Reign Scoville.

Chas. Reign Scoville held union evangelistic services in Aurora, Mo., some time since and he is in receipt of a letter from the mayor of that city, Larry Brunk, which that mayor has also published, expressing the appreciation of the mayor for the work which Mr. Scoville had done in the community. Mr. Brunk says: "You have done so much for Aurora that I feel obligated to make acknowledgment of it in a manner which will show my appreciation. You have accomplished the superhuman task of bringing the people of this city together, of unifying them, of spreading broadcast a feeling of brotherly love which has not existed for many, many years. I just wanted to let you know how I feel about your great meetings, and to express the heartfelt wish that your success at Akron and wherever you go shall be at least as great and inspiring as it was in Aurora of the Ozarks. And I must not neglect to remind you that for almost a month there has not been a single arrest made in this city, so universal was the spiritual influence felt by all classes."

What Is the Second Death?

J. R. Perkins is preaching to large audiences at Sioux City, Iowa. On a recent Sunday, he discussed the theme, "The Church That Escaped." In treating the subject of the "second death," he said: "The modern man has no fear of the orthodox hell, but he does fear that he may not attain God. This is not quite so abstract as it would appear. For to attain God is simply to reach the heart of the supreme good. The full horror of losing God dawns upon us, and to lose Him is the second death. In a word, the fear is before us of not being worthy of His presence, not that we shall be pushed rudely from His presence."

Mrs. Elizabeth Ross Ill.

Mrs. Elizabeth Ross, who is known affectionately by hundreds of C. W. B. M. women as "Mother Ross," and whose son has devoted his life to the work in Liberia, has been traveling up and down the country giving addresses on the work of the C. W. B. M., and more especially upon the work in Liberia. Her engagements have worn her out and she has fallen ill, being compelled to return to her home at Canton, Mo., and recuperate. Her son, Emory Ross, is on furlough in this country at the present time and is speaking in a number of churches.

Display Ad Fills Church.

C. J. Miller of Greeley, Colo., has been experimenting with display advertising in the local papers. A recent sermon on the future life was announced in this way and the evening audience was nearly doubled, filling the church auditorium.

Brite College of the Bible Improves.

The new building for the Brite College of the Bible, operating in connection with Texas Christian university at Fort Worth, Tex., was dedicated on Feb. 8. Carey E. Morgan, president of the American Christian Missionary Society, was present and spoke. In the afternoon, each of 400 students and faculty members planted a tree he had donated toward the adornment of the campus. This is the school made famous by the adoption of a creed for the board of trustees a year ago.

Edifice is Rededicated.

New Market, Ind., congregation has rebuilt its church home and made it quite modern in appearance. The rededication occurred on Feb. 7. The pastor, W. O. Headrick, spoke at the dedicatory services, and Mr. Johnson, who was pastor thirty-one years ago, was present to assist. Five hundred dollars was needed and the full amount was raised in a few minutes.

Organize a Family Altar League.

A part of the activity in the special services in Norwood church, Cincinnati, will be the organization of a family altar league and it is hoped by the pastor, C. R. Stauffer, to secure the co-operation of one hundred families in the league before the meetings close. The pastor received a visit from his old school friend of Eureka college, Emory Ross, on a recent Sunday and they had a pleasant conference over the work in Liberia.

New Parsonage in Jacksonville, Ill.

Central church, Jacksonville, Ill., has decided to build a parsonage this coming summer. Two bequests have been left the church which have provided the required amount of money which is six thousand dollars. A lot has been bought in a desirable locality and the work will go forward soon. The pastor, M. L. Pontius, arranged a surprise for his board members recently. The wives of the board members assembled secretly at the church and while the board was in session, prepared a fine luncheon, the ladies demonstrating thoroughly that they can keep a secret, especially when several of them are in together to help.

Rev. M. L. Pontius, whose church at Jacksonville, Ill. has recently received bequests amounting to $6,000.

Rev. W. G. Loucks, of South Akron, O, church, who has taken his men's large class to a local theater.

Chas. Traxler is Married.

Charles Traxler, who has rendered tireless service on an important committee of the Disciples Publication Society, and who is so well known and trusted in Akron that he was given charge of the temperance forces in the recent campaign, was married on December 12 to Mrs. Olive Hibbard. Theoretically Mr. Traxler is retired from business, but he has bought three fruit farms adjoining each other, which help to occupy his time. He is prominent in the work of the large church in Akron.

Pastor Wants a Chamber of Commerce.

T. W. Bellingham, of Benton Harbor, Mich., gave a Sunday evening address not long since which he called his "Booster sermon." He advocated the organization of a chamber of commerce in Benton Harbor to push the interests of the city.

A New Edifice in Florida.

Daytona, Fla., church has built a new edifice which will nicely equip the congregation for its work. The dedicatory exercises were held on February 28 and Geo. L. Snively was master of ceremonies. S. L. Jackson is the pastor.

Good Work at First Church, Bloomington, Ill.

First church of Bloomington, Ill., has issued its annual report for 1914. The church raised for local expenses last year $9,000 and for missions and benevolence $1,341.38. The membership of the church is reported on the basis of actuality, and does not include the non-resident and "dead" members. There are 1,185 members who are reasonably active in their church relationships.

Farmers' Institutes in Churches.

All over the country the churches are opening their doors to the farmers to relate religion more closely with agriculture. A farmers' institute was held on Feb. 2 at Fillmore, Ind., church. Another was held at Allensville, O., on Feb. 10 and 11.

News from the Foreign Society

In a recent letter from one of the missionaries in China, he says, "We are feeling the terrible depression of this appalling war in Europe. Imagine preaching the gospel of the Prince of Peace to the Chinese at this time when almost all of the so-called Christian nations are bending every effort and energy and thought to devising all the more effective means of slaughtering each other's people. The horror of it sets like a pall over the thought of Christian people everywhere. I believe it is going to force us as missionaries to a deeper and truer interpretation of the mission and message of the Master."

During January 156 churches made offerings for foreign missions, a gain of 11 churches over the corresponding month of 1914. They gave $4,133.8, a gain of $581.81.

D. O. Cunningham, of Bilaspur, India, writes that a letter from Harda states that the Indian brethren gave up the usual Christmas dinner and took an offering for the work of the foreign society. They dispensed with their usual Christmas tree and took an offering to be used in buying New Testaments for the Belgian soldiers. They are trying to train these new churches that Christmas is a time to give rather than to receive.

Dr. A. L. Shelton writes: "I expect to be gone all of January in an itinerary trip about 200 miles to the south."

News comes that there have recently been five converts in the Agricultural Department in the University of Nanking. One of them is Chang Chien, Jr., who is nephew and heir to the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, and who is at the head of the Chinese cabinet. This young man and his uncle live at Nantungchow where we have a mission and where his uncle is doing great things socially and industrially for the Chinese people. The influence of the conversion of this young man on our work in Nantungchow can hardly be measured.

R. A. Doan, who is a member of the Commission of the Foreign Society, was so impressed with the need in China that on the urgent request of the missionaries there he has stayed several months longer in that field. He is now holding evangelistic meetings through an interpreter and organizing Bible classes in all the mission stations. Missionary C. H. Plopper writes that in his recent meetings in Nantungchow, Brother Doan had one thousand people a day in the Buddhist temple. It was very cold and he had to speak with his overcoat on, but this did not keep the crowds away. At the close of the meeting sixty men were organized into a Bible class to study Christianity. The leading officials and business men of the city were at the meeting and several of them on the platform. A number of these men spoke to the crowd telling the people that the words Dr. Doan was saying about Christianity were true. The opportunities in China today are wonderful.

Secretary Stephen J. Corey is addressing a number of churches and groups of ministers in the important centers. He is being heard with interest and real enthusiasm. He has a fresh message concerning the situation in the far east and he stirs the people whenever he speaks. The full report of the Commission will be found in the March number of the Missionary Intelligencer.

Two friends of the society have recently offered to support a new missionary in China.

The churches in Keokuk county, Ia., will provide the salary of three missionaries and half salary for another missionary. Delta is in the Living-link rank, as is Keokuk, Ia. Keota will give $300 and the other churches of the county, as Sigourney, North English, Hedrick, and What Cheer will make up the remainder.

T. A. Young, of Fukushima, Japan, writes: "The church here observed the world-wide week of prayer. The average attendance was twelve adults. A splendid spirit characterized all the meetings. All departments of the work are flourishing. The English Bible class had an attendance of 37 last Sunday. I have been asked to teach in the Fukushima Middle School for boys. This is a good opening for work. There were two baptisms reported from Yonezawa. We are planning for a fruitful evangelistic meeting in the spring. The Fukushima church and pastor ask for the prayers of the American brethren in their work."

A. McLean, president.

Masons Banquet Minister.

The Freemasons recently initiated Walter Scott Priest at Wichita, Kans., and after the pastor had been given all the thrills, the men of Central church who were Masons got up a dinner in honor of Mr. Priest. The table was in the shape of a cross at the head of which the minister sat. The lodge officers and city ministers were present and Mr. Priest made a very effective address.

Chautauqua Circuit Takes Minister.

A. E. Cross, of Clinton, Ind., has been called by the Redpath Lyceum Bureau to give all his time to Chautauqua and lyceum work at a flattering salary.

Fifty-four Years a Preacher.

J. W. Love who makes his home at Columbus, O., recently celebrated his seventy-third birthday and the church there invited him to preach. It is fifty-four years since he first entered the ministry.

School Secures New Trustees.

The Bible College of Missouri, operating near the state university at Columbia, has been securing some new trustees. One of the latest to be added to the board is Robert Graham Frank, secretary of the general convention and pastor of Liberty church.

First Church, Kansas City, Dedicates.

The new building of First church, Kansas City, where W. F. Richardson is pastor, was dedicated on February 28. The day was also observed as "home coming day" for all the old members. This down-town church has been a feeder for all of our churches in Kansas City and the present building was erected to replace one destroyed by fire last year. Dedication day also marked the beginning of a series of evangelistic meetings held by the pastor.

Moving Picture Announcements.

Sterling Place Church, Brooklyn, is fortunate in being near the central offices of some of the largest film companies in the country. This church uses the stereopticon as an institutional feature and recent evenings were given to pictures of Lincoln and Washington. On a recent Sunday evening, the pictures set forth the story of Elisha and the Shunamite woman. The pastor is M. M. Ammunson.

A Year's Work at Sikeston, Mo.

J. B. Lockhart is pastor at Sikeston, Mo. There is a new church building in this town nearing completion which is costing nearly $15,000. The present membership of the church is 77. The church raised and disbursed last year $5,378.69.

County Superintendent Is Ordained.

James W. Hays has been a teacher in Kansas for fifteen years. He is now serving his second term as county superintendent of schools. He was ordained to the ministry on January 31, at Pleasanton, Kans. He is preaching for several small congregations and is doing a very acceptable work.

Good Work at North Park, Indianapolis.

North Park church, Indianapolis, once had as pastor, Austin Hunter, and now has E. L. Day. This church reports that $6,628.28 was raised for all purposes last year, of which $706.75 was for missions and benevolence. There were 77 accessions, and 26 were by confession of faith. There are now 400 active members. The pastoral activities the past year include 90 sermons, 97 special addresses, 1,200 calls, 28 funerals and 13 weddings. L. E. Sellers, of Logansport, has recently conducted evangelistic meetings in this church. These have added 75 new members to the church. These are not included in the above annual report.

Linen Shower at College of Missions.

February 12 was the day of the annual linen shower at the College of Missions. The auxiliaries of Indianapolis had their women pack lunches and the Downey avenue church served coffee to all. The women provided a considerable quantity of linen for the school which was much appreciated.

State Convention in the Ozarks.

The Missouri state convention will be held in June this year in the Ozarks. A strong program committee has been named, composed of L. J. Marshall, W. A. Shullenberger, George A. Campbell, and F. L. Moffett. The convention will be at Springfield.

Stereopticon Slides of State Missions.

C. W. Cauble, state secretary of Indiana, has prepared a stereopticon lecture on state missions, probably the only one in the brotherhood. He has a hundred pictures on Indiana work and will give the lecture fifteen times in the near future while traveling with Melnotte Miller in the southwestern district.

Debate and Oratory at Butler.

Butler College has a heavy schedule for debate and oratory this year. On February 26, Myron Hughel represented the college at the Indiana Intercollegiate Oratorical Contest at the German House. On April 9, Butler will debate with Wabash College on the question of government ownership and operation of public telephone and telegraph lines.

Annual Dinner of New York Disciples.

The Disciples of New York held their sixteenth annual dinner and business meeting

Rev. Finis Idleman, of Des Moines, who recently addressed New York Disciples on "The Invincible Kingdom."

under the auspices of the Disciples' Missionary Union on February 9. M. M. Ammunson spoke on "Disciples' Missionary Outlook." Finis Idleman of Central church, Des Moines, was in the city and made an address on "The Invincible Kingdom." Dr. Thomas E. Hall of Union Theological Seminary, spoke on "The Mind of Germany."

City Treasurer Will Preach.

J. Floyd Miles, city treasurer of Des Moines, who recently united with University Place church with his wife, has gone right to work in his religious life. After a few prayer-meeting talks, he volunteered to go with a "gospel team" to Winterset, Ia. In six addresses in different churches recently, he has had fifteen come forward to make confession of faith.

A Jewish Disciple Preaches.

O. G. White, state secretary of West Virginia, has been working in Parkersburg, where he has held evangelistic meetings in Newport Mission which is conducted by First church. This mission has been under the leadership of Charles Friedlander, a converted Jew. There were twelve confessions of faith in the meetings, Mr. Friedlander cooperating to make the meeting a success.

Levi Marshall Has Been Ill.

Levi Marshall, pastor at Nevada, Mo., has been seriously ill with typhoid. During his illness, his pulpit has been supplied by H. M. Barnett. Mr. Marshall is now sufficiently recovered to be back in his pulpit again.

Miss Mattie Pounds Goes to the Orient.

Miss Mattie Pounds was for many years superintendent of the Junior work of the C. W. B. M. She will go to China in June to spend a year in visiting mission stations in the orient.

Many Improvements at Macon, Go.

Macon, Ga., church, of which LeRoy M. Anderson is the minister, has made a number of changes in its building and equipment which are to cost a total of fifteen thousand dollars. A pipe organ and a heating plant have been put in; the basement has been fitted for graded Sunday-school work, and a church printing plant has been installed. On January 30 the last money necessary to pay for these improvements was raised.

Annual Report From Brilliant, O.

Brilliant, O., church has issued an annual report which states that the accessions by confession of faith last year were 33. There was raised in all departments $1,706.67. The minister, Chas. C. Wilkinson, reports 149 sermons, 2 series of evangelistic meetings, 8 anti-Catholic lectures. 8 funerals and 246 calls.

Son of D. R. Dungan Preaches.

Some people have the idea that a preacher's son never preaches, which is of course far from the facts. D. G. Dungan, son of the veteran preacher and teacher, D. R. Dungan, is preaching regularly. He recently held evangelistic meetings in Fayette county, Ind., and 44 were received into the church through his ministrations.

A Year's Work At Chillicothe, O.

Chillicothe, O., church where Ferd F. Schultz is minister, reports 150 accessions last year, mostly by confession of faith. The church raised $1,500. The Bible-school attendance was three times what it was the previous year. The young men have furnished a room in the basement of the church for their own use.

Dr. Ainslie Writes On World Peace.

The newly-formed Church Peace Union is already issuing pamphlets, and the third of this series is a ten-page document by Peter Ainslie of Baltimore on "The Scourge of Militarism." Mr. Ainslie heads the list of trustees for this organization.

Mr. and Mrs. Rice Reach India Safely.

A member of Lincoln, Neb., church has received a letter from Mr. and Mrs. Ray Rice, written as they were passing through the Suez canal. They make reference to their experiences on the island of Malta and connect it with the story of Paul. The Foreign Society has received a cablegram saying that they reached India safely in spite of the hazards of the war zone. They are just beginning their missionary career.

Pastor Helping Missions.

A. H. Moore, of Tipton, Ind., in addition to his church work, is delivering an occasional lecture in behalf of foreign mission work, using curios and stereopticon slides to illustrate his address.

An Interesting Church.

The morning attendance of Ann Arbor Mich., church has increased fivefold in two years and the congregations have people of all creeds in them. The congregation frequently has three non-members for every member. It is said that it is not infrequent for the church to have more men in attendance than women. New members have been received every Sunday for seventeen consecutive Sundays.

Death of E. A. Carey.

E. A. Carey was moving from his former charge at Mt. Pleasant, Ia., to Memphis, Mo., when he was suddenly taken ill. He was at the home of a daughter in Illinois when he died.

Lectures at College of Missions.

The College of Missions at Indianapolis has had a course of lectures which were given in Graham chapel, February 22-25. The lectures were given by Rev. Arthur Judson Brown, D. D., secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions. He is the author of several well-known missionary books, among them "New Forces in Old China."

Christian Church Day at Exposition.

Christian Church day at the Panama Exposition at San Francisco will be July 27. The International convention at Los Angeles closes on July 25 so that one may conveniently attend both meetings. A program will be given in one of the exposition buildings on a day yet to be announced.

Disciples Represented in Lesson Committee.

The International Sunday-school lesson committee always has two Disciple representatives and at the present time these are Prof. Walter S. Athearn and Dean Hall L. Calhoun, the former of Drake University, and the latter of the College of the Bible, at Lexington.

University Place Church, Des Moines, Grows.

University Place church of Des Moines, where Charles S. Medbury is pastor, had nearly three thousand active members at the beginning of the present year. January 1, 1914, the total membership, counting resident, non-resident and student, was 2,766. During 1914 there were received by confession of faith and baptism 219, and by letter and statement 151; roll corrections added 3, making a total of 373. During the year the church has granted 119 letters, 11 have transferred their membership without taking letters, 17 names have been placed upon the reference roll and there have been 19 deaths, making a total loss from the membership roll of 166, and leaving the aggregate membership January 1, 1915, 2,973. The total receipts in 1914 were $14,830.01. The church gave a total of $3,089.21 to missions, distributed among the great enterprises of the church. One thousand dollars of the missionary money was given to the Foreign Chrisitan Missionary Society. The pastor in his annual reports hints at his desire for a great new church building which will properly house the activities of the Sunday-school, and provide room for social and institutional features of the work. During the coming year, this matter is to be considered by the membership and it is hoped that a plan may be evolved.

Pythian Lodges Go to Church.

The three Pythian lodges of Shreveport, La., went to church on a recent Sunday and listened to a sermon by C. L. Jones at Central church. The pastor is a member of the order.

Pastor Reconsiders Resignation.

C. C. Cline resigned his pastorate at Pine Bluff, Ark., but a petition with numerous signatures was presented to him and he was induced to stay. He had expected to accept another call.

Pastor Wants Penny Rides.

John L. Brandt, of First church, St. Louis, has offered to be one of twenty men to finance a bus line in St. Louis that will have a graduated fare from a penny up according to distance traveled. He proposes that the busses shall be double deckers carrying 48 passengers.

Pastor Talks on Poison.

Earl Wilfley, Washington, D. C., delivered several Sunday evening address on poison. The subjects were "Poison in Speech," "Poison in Printer's Ink," and "Poison in the Field."

Women Equip Hospital Ward.

The Federation of Women's Bible classes of churches in Jackson county outside of Kansas City, Mo., has voted to raise five hundred dollars to equip a ward in the new Christian hospital that is being erected in Kansas City. Mrs. E. V. Buchanan, of Independence, is president of the federation.

Pastor Considers Housing Problem.

Housing in Arizona may not seem an urgent problem, but the churches in that state are not indifferent to city problems. Claude E. Jones, pastor of Phoenix church, recently delivered a stereopticon lecture on "Where the Other Half Lives," in which the conditions in the various large cities were examined.

Invites Newspaper Men to Hear Him.

B. S. Ferrall, of Central church, Buffalo, has planned a Sunday evening service for the newspaper men and he will deliver an address on "The Power of the Modern Daily."

Twenty-five Years of History.

South Broadway church, Denver, celebrated twenty-five years of history late in February. This work began in a tent under the leadership of William Bayard Craig. Fourteen years ago B. B. Tyler became pastor here, and through his efforts a ten thousand dollar debt was paid off and a three thousand dollar organ was installed. At the anniversary services, Ben. C. Hilliard, congressman-elect, spoke on the history of the church. It is stated that 6,000 people have been members of the Sunday-school of this church during its short history and that the present membership is 600. These facts indicate something of the transient character of city population.

Big C. W. B. M. Day Offering.

C. W. B. M. Day was observed at University Place church of Des Moines recently. Mrs. Elizabeth Ross of Canton, Mo., and her son Emory Ross, missionary in Liberia, were present and they presented the cause of Liberia so effectively that the C. W. B. M. Day offering amounted to five hundred dollars.

Iowa State Society Has Money.

The state organization in Iowa has $65,000 in permanent funds and annuity funds, with about half of it already productive for the society. There are 108 churches that have made the offering this year. Three hundred churches did not co-operate.

Long Beach, Cal., Calls Pastor.

Long Beach, Cal., church is the leading church of California in point of missionary offerings. F. M. Rogers is retiring from the pulpit of this church and the pulpit committee has called George B. Taubman, of Tusla, Okla. Mr. Taubman and Mr. Rogers were classmates at Transylvania university in their student days. Mr. Taubman has not announced his decision with regard to the call of the coast church.

T. L. Lowe Will Remain in Columbus, O.

The report that T. L. Lowe is leaving Columbus, O., was in error. He is happy in his pastorate at West Fourth Avenue church and intends to go right on with it. Euclid Ave., St. Louis.

California Convention at San Francisco.

The state convention of northern California will be held in San Francisco July 28 to August 1, in the Civic Center Hall. The exposition director of congresses will furnish the hall free. The convention will hold only morning sessions, leaving the visitors the afternoon and evening free to go to the exposition.

Dormitory in Oklahoma Church.

D. A. Wickizer, state secretary in Oklahoma, recently visited Norman, where the state university is located and observed that the community needed church buildings. Accordingly he led in a building enterprise which provides an auditorium of 700 opera chairs, and on the third floor of the building a dormitory for university students.

Methodist Minister Becomes Disciple.

Geo. E. Glasspool has recently united with Anona, Tex., church. He was formerly a minister in the southern Methodist church, having been educated at Vanderbilt University. For the past two years he has been in secular work. He will probably begin an active ministry at an early date among the Disciples.

IMPORTANT TO CHICAGO DISCIPLES.

The annual Sunday-school meeting of Chicago Disciples will be held at Jackson Boulevard church Monday evening, March 8; officers, teachers and others interested in this work are invited to be present.

Supper will be served at 6:30 p. m. by the ladies of Jackson Boulevard at 35c per plate. All who can are urged to come early for the supper.

The program will include music, recitations by one or more of Basil S. Kensseff's children, and an inspirational address by Myron C. Settle, who is now in charge of the religious educational work of our people in Gary, Ind.

A special feature of the evening will be Departmental Conferences in which officers, teachers or workers can discuss or hear discussed the problems or questions of peculiar interest to their own work or department. This will be of inestimable value.

O. A. Rosboro.

In and Around Chicago

Edgewater church, which was recently organized, is operating with such supply preachers as it can secure. Among those who have preached to the church recently is J. C. Hill, who was once a minister among the Cincinnati Disciples, but is now in secular business in Chicago.

Austin church, where A. R. McQueen ministers, has been having a good ingathering this winter. There have been 32 accessions in 20 weeks. No evangelistic meetings have been held and the church does not plan to hold any this spring. The Sunday-school is larger than in some years past.

Evanston church has kept accurate statistics on church attendance for a number of years. The Sunday morning attendance for February increased twenty per cent over February of last year, though last year's record was inflated by the Go-to-Church Sunday movement. The evening services this year increased forty per cent.

Austin Hunter has been preaching a series of sermons on "The Happy Home." February 28, the subject was "Getting Married and Staying Married." The remaining subjects in the series are "Grumbling Husbands," "Nagging Wives," and "The Unmarried." There were two accessions to the church on February 28.

Lloyd H. Miller of Akron, O., has been called as pastor at Metropolitan church, and he will assume active charge of the work on April 1. He succeeds John D. Hull, who left that field last summer.

The Sunday-school forces of Chicago will meet at Jackson Boulevard church, Monday evening, March 8, at 6:30, for dinner and there will be a varied and interesting program. Among other events, Myron T. Settle of Gary, will speak on "The Gary Plan."

The University of Chicago Press has reprinted from the pages of the Classical Journal in pamphlet form an address delivered by Dr. Roy C. Flickinger at the Classical Association of the Middle West and South last year, on "The Influence of the Festival Arrangements Upon the Drama of the Greeks." This paper will be incorporated in a volume to be issued by the University Press soon called "The Greek Theater and Its Drama." Dr. Flickinger is associate professor in the classical department of Northwestern University and is an elder in Evanston church.

Herbert L. Willett spoke to the ministers on March 1.

At a recent joint meeting of the American and the Western Philosophical Associations at the University of Chicago, Prof. Ellsworth Faris delivered an address on "The Injustice of Punishment."

Debate on Army and Navy.

The men's club at Mr. Vernon, Ill., church had a debate on a recent evening on the subject, "Shall the United States Increase Its Army and Navy?" The subject was argued pro and con by several speakers, but the decision of the judges was in favor of the negative. There were several musical numbers on the program and the pastor reviewed the recent events of the war.

Royal Order of Hobgoblins.

The young men of First church, Youngstown, O., had a social evening recently and a part of the entertainment was a fictitious initiation into the "Royal Order of Hobgoblins." The socials of the young men have been on unique lines and have been largely attended.

A religious paper called Good News has been established in the island of Borneo.

The Easter Offering for Benevolence

The new year has brought many blessings to us, to our homes and to our association, for which we are deeply grateful. There are friends who constantly remember the needy ones for whom the association cares, and who send their help, contributions every month, or several times during the year. Then there are others who wait till Easter to help their Sunday-school in its effort to reach its apportionment or to ambitiously do even better. How anxiously we, who are now in the midst of the strenuous Easter campaign, will await the result of this year's appeal.

Since 1893 the National Benevolent Association has been asking our churches, through their Sunday-schools, at Easter to provide it with the means to assist in caring for the poor and needy, the sick and afflicted, as our Lord enjoins; and each succeeding year, as the brethren have become acquainted with the work, the Easter offering has increased until last year it reached a little over $25,000 when it was finally all in.

And now for the twenty-second time we appeal to you, our co-workers, to do the very best you can to raise the amount we, your servants in this work, so badly need to carry on the work in a manner creditable to our Master. Several of our homes are in great need of better equipment, all of them need much for their daily support. We depend very largely on our Easter offerings to supply this support. It is the bread and butter fund for our hundreds of wards. Dear friends, do not fail these helpless ones now. Can you not, will you not, try to double your offering? Remember our Master said, "It is not the will your Father, which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish."?

Write today for free Easter supplies in quantities—cantatas, coin envelopes and new illustrated announcements.

Send all offerings to The National Benevolent Association, 2955 N. Euclid Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

The Bethany System of Sunday School Literature

Don't Cheat Your School

This is written only for pastors who feel some measure of responsibility for the quality of literature going into the hands of their Sunday School scholars.

And, no doubt, all pastors who read the Christian Century are of that sort. Their point of view is that of religious education. The Sunday School to them is more than an aggregation of units brought together each week to go through a certain formal program—calling the roll, "doing" the lesson, "taking up the pennies," asking for birthday money, and telling the children to be sure to "have a good lesson" next Sunday!

The Sunday School is to them rather The Church Studying the Word of Eternal Truth, and developing in minds and hearts the spirit of the Christian religion. It is, indeed, the Church's best chance to guarantee Christly men and women in the next generation, as well as in this.

To pastors who hold this high ideal of the work of the Sunday School, the matter of literature becomes a most vital one. Second only to the influence of the teacher in the life of the pupil is that of the literature upon which the scholars feed their minds and souls. And, in many cases, we are sure the influence of the literature comes first.

Roosevelt declares that one of the strongest influences that moulded his early life was a child's paper he subscribed for, and which he valued highly. Are not your children and youths just as likely to be so influenced?

ARE YOU ACQUAINTED WITH THE LITERATURE USED IN YOUR SCHOOL?

If you are alert to the responsibility upon you as the leader in religious education in your church, by all means secure samples of all systems published, and see to it that your school uses the literature that it finds to be the most up-to-date, most virile, and Best Adapted to Character Building. Do not neglect to ask for returnable samples of the Bethany System of Sunday School Literature. The Best!

Many Sunday School classes will wish to study the life of Jesus THIS YEAR. They want the very best text for young people's or adult classes that can be found. This is simply to remind them that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practical, so usable, so true to the best scholarship, so bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned, as Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF JESUS in Fifty-two Lessons. It is being widely used in Sunday Schools and Y. M. C. A. classes. It is being used in numerous leading Sunday Schools both of the Disciples and other religious bodies. This testifies to its popularity. You must have it in your school. Price 50c. In quantities of 10 or more, 40c each.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desire nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

WHY The Bethany System of Sunday School Literature Demands Your Attention!

1. It is the product, not simply of the talent of our own brotherhood, but of the expert workers and writers of the ENTIRE SUNDAY SCHOOL WORLD.
2. Mechanically it is the most nearly perfect of all the systems of graded literature produced to date.
3. Because the use of the Bethany lessons will make it possible for your school to co-operate in graded union activities. With other literatures, you will be handicapped in such co-operation.
4. It represents a notable achievement in Christian unity, for which principle the Disciples as a people stand. The Bethany literature is the joint product of five Protestant bodies.

We do not ask you to use the "Bethany." We do ask you to compare it with other systems. If it does not prove to be the Best, after a careful examination, use the system that IS the best.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

On Talking Religion

PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY WAS A RELIGION OF TALK.

The new experience Christ gave men was bound to show itself in every form of expression. And since words are the most immediate channels for expressing the inner life we will not be surprised if so dynamic a thing as Christianity makes the utmost use of speech.

And from the beginning it has been so. The most characteristic phenomenon on the day the Church was born was the gift of tongues. The Christianity of those early disciples was a talking religion. When they were persecuted they went everywhere preaching the word.

Nobody understood that a certain "order" of men was to do all the talking. Everybody had a story to tell, an evangel to proclaim, the good news of salvation to pass on to his neighbor.

Probably the weakness and conventionality of modern religious life is nowhere more clearly exposed than in the conspicuous absence of religion from the conversation of Christian people.

Religion has gotten itself stiffened into a technique whose vocabulary may be spoken intelligently only by an especially equipped profession. The average church-member assumes that his pew rent or his offering goes to pay a man to do his religious talking for him.

And this man who is paid by the church to talk for it as well as to it, finds himself, practically, shut up to the public exercise of this function. One of the most disheartening experiences of the pastor is the discovery that when visiting a home if he undertakes to talk religion he finds himself talking a monologue.

Ofttimes he girds himself for the afternoon of pastoral visitation with the determination that these few hours of face to face opportunity shall bring forth some spiritual gain to his parishioners and to himself. He is impressed with the barrenness and triviality of most of his "pastoral work." In a hundred calls he has done little more than exchange courtesies. His parishioners would be offended if he did not show them some attention. Casual attendants at his church might be made to feel more at home and perhaps induced to join the church through a social call from the minister. And the trifling character of this kind of "work" seems below his dignity as a minister of Christ.

So today he will speak to men and women some words of eternal life. He will exercise his true function as a guide and helper of the souls of his people. He will find out what their inner problems are, what their doubts and temptations are, what perplexities they are having about God since grave trouble befell the household.

Perhaps he can explain some perplexing passage of scripture they have been reading, and use it as the point of departure for opening up a higher view of life. Perhaps some newspaper sensation about a noted preacher's doctrine, or a university professor's strange view of the Bible, or a new book that has been much discussed—a hundred texts and pretexts he is able to anticipate as the basis of helpful conversation.

But his heart is sore as he returns home. He seemed unable to stimulate a conversation on religion. He could talk pleasantries. His wit and social cleverness were enjoyed greatly —probably more than they merited, due, likely, to the fact that he was a clergyman and therefore not expected to be either funny or graceful. He could awaken interest in the organizations of the church—the Ladies' Aid, the new Men's Club, the Young People's Society, the gymnasium they were just instituting or the social that was to come off next week.

At one home the pastor undertook to help the deacons out by securing a pledge for the support of the church, and was gratified at the readiness of response his suggestion brought. But in each instance that he attempted to carry the conversation over from the mechanism of religion into the field of religion itself, he was left to carry it alone. The parishioner stared blankly at him. His talk sounded to his own ears like a declamation. He knew that this was no time to preach, so he desisted, and asked how the baby was getting on with its teeth.

No doubt there is more than one reason why the pastor finds us dumb on the big matters of religion. But two reasons are fundamental to all the rest.

First of these is our probable lack of genuine religious consciousness.

Many of us come into the church without the exercise of our religious intelligence in any but a formal fashion. Associations drew us, or family tradition, or clerical flattery; or social respectability actuated us, or revival excitement overwhelmed us.

Whatever was the psychology of our act, with many of us, no doubt, it was hardly the clear perception of spiritual truth that moved us. Social imitation likely played a larger part than individual perception.

Naturally, therefore, our minds would be barren of religious ideas. With large numbers of us there would not be sufficient religious intelligence to so much as ask a question about religion's deeper meaning, to say nothing of nurturing a persistent but healthy doubt.

Another reason for the failure of his parishioners to talk religion with their pastor is that he himself probably had not learned the delicate art of talking religion in terms of life; he probably talked in the vocabulary of his profession.

In reacting from the superficial social character of the present day pastoral call the minister need not go all the way back to the old-time custom of holding a sort of miniature church service in the parlor. His conversation should be a conversation, not a sermon. And if he will patiently go about among his ever so unresponsive people, forgetting his text-book problems and facing their life-problems earnestly, and talking about them in concrete terms, he will find that in the course of years there will grow up a religious intelligence among them that will make religious talk the chief joy of their intercourse together.

Here as everywhere Christ is our preceptor.

Christ was the ideal pastor. In untechnical phrase he cultivated the spiritual perception of his little flock. He not only solved their problems, but made problems for them. He brought them not only faith, but doubt that led to deeper faith.

It is hard for those who know Christ best to think of him as a preacher. There was no "swing" in his eloquence. You would hardly call him eloquent at all. He was the quiet friend and teacher of those the Father had given him.

His teaching was mainly in conversation. No doubt much of his conversation has been lost to us—the circumstantial incidents, the human setting for the glistening gem of truth that has survived. No doubt Jesus spoke many words concerning the passing values of this life as well as those concerning the abiding value of the eternal life.

It is not likely that Jesus talked religion all the time and nothing but religion. He entered fully into human life. But he approached every subject "under the aspect of eternity." His conversation always illuminated the life that is life indeed.

By the Master's method the pastor of today may open to his people's souls a world of interests and values of which they now do not dream. By quickening their perceptions of life he will change their speech. Citizens of heaven, they will speak in heaven's vocabulary.

And all their common speech will take on new purity and sweetness because they have learned to speak the words of the inner life.

While we are endeavoring to restore primitive Christianity we would do well to restore the lost art of talking religion.

Who Began the War?

BY SAMUEL HARDEN CHURCH.

Ninety-three of the most prominent men of Germany, distinguished in various branches of science, art, education, and literature, have recently circulated broadcast throughout America a letter entitled, "An Appeal to the Civilized World," in which they attempted to mould public opinion in the United States on the subject of the war. In this letter they state that Germany was not responsible for the outbreak of the war; that she did not violate the neutrality of Belgium; that she did not destroy Louvain; that her soldiers have not oppressed the Belgian people nor committed any atrocities; and that militarism is the only safeguard of German civilization. Mr. Church, the President of the Carnegie Institute, at Pittsburgh, and author of "The Life of Oliver Cromwell," a book that has won distinction in America and Europe, has made the following very statesmanly reply to the German appeal. The reply was published by the London Times. Mr. Church is a devoted member of the East End Church of Disciples in Pittsburgh, and has particular interest for Christian Century readers from the fact that he is a grandson of Walter Scott, one of the "fathers" of the Disciples' movement.

PROFESSOR DR. FRITZ SCHAPER,
Berlin, Germany.

My dear Doctor Schaper,

I HAVE received with your compliments and autograph a printed letter addressed "To the Civilized World," and signed by ninety-three of the most distinguished names in German art, science and literature, your own among them, and I assure you that a communication so endorsed will receive my most profound consideration. To me those ninety-three names are tremendously potent and influential. I have the honor of a personal acquaintance with some of these gentlemen, yourself and Prof. Adolf von Harnack, and a few others, while many of these men have done their work with such universal scope that they must not count themselves as Germans only, because they belong to the whole world, and the whole world esteems and reveres them for their eminent services to humanity. The plays of Hauptmann and the music of Humperdinck, are, I am sure, as well-known in America as in Germany. Many of us have sat at the feet of Ehrlich and Eucken as Paul sat at the feet of Gamaliel. In our great institutions of science, art, and learning, such as our Carnegie Institute, we look upon Bode as a source of final judgment in his field of work. Max Reinhardt is at the head of a new movement in theatrical production which has reached the American stage. Siegfried Wagner is a precious name to us all by inheritance. Roentgen, Wasserman, Behring, and the other signers have promoted learning and ameliorated human suffering. You yourself have, through the suggestion made by your Emperor, been a guest in Pittsburg at the dedication of the new building of the Carnegie Institute, amidst a group of illustrious men gathered here from all over the world, the German section, as I remember with feelings of deep friendship, having included General von Loewenfeld, General Dickhuth, Dr. von Ihne, Dr. von Moeller, Dr. Koser, and yourself, all of them, in response to our urgent request, bringing with them, as our most precious guests, their wives or daughters, except alas! General von Loewenfeld, who, winning his way to the head of armies, told me he had not yet been able to win a wife. But I have reminded him that while there is life there is hope.

AMERICAN SYMPATHY FOR GERMANY.

Need I say more to prove to you how deep is the sympathy, affection and gratitude which I and all my countrymen cherish towards the people of the German Empire? Need I say how our hearts bleed for them in this time of dreadful calamity, or how much we hope and pray that peace may soon return to the troubled bosom of the Fatherland? Why, the very texture of our nation would make us true to Germany in all her moral rights, because we have at this moment eight million people of German birth or German parentage in our population, and these citizens are among the very best in this country. Therefore, in a peculiar sense, we hold Germany in our hearts, for she is bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh. But in the same way we cherish the people of all other races, except, alas, those from Asia, and one day, in God's own time, we shall grow big enough in a spiritual sense to receive the children of Asia with equal hospitality. But we are a cosmopolite nation, and besides having those eight million Germans we have absorbed thirteen millions from Great Britain, 300,000 from France, 3,000,000 from Russia, 2,000,000 from Austria, 25,000 from the Balkans, and 100,000 from Belgium. All told we have 32,000,000 of foreign birth and foreign parentage in our 100,000,000 population, so that our blood and fibre comprises the whole human family.

Mr. Samuel Harden Church

STRIVING TO BE NEUTRAL.

Could we be lacking in sympathy for Germany, then, in this awful war? And could we take sides unjustly or from prejudice when all those who are engaged in the terrible conflict are our veritable brothers in the one family of God's children? Our excellent President Wilson, beloved and esteemed by our whole people, has charged us all to maintain an impartial neutrality, and that I believe we are earnestly striving to do; but we are, at the same time, in like manner, earnestly striving to find the right and to condemn the wrong, because neutrality can never mean indifference. You will remember that Dante, in the Inferno, found beneath all other hells a place prepared for those timid beings who insisted on being neutral in the everlasting fight between good and evil. This war is a fight between those forces of good and evil, and I believe that the American people, having divested themselves of prejudice, are devoting themselves to a study of the evidence in order that public opinion may conform to the facts. In the course of this study your letter "To the Civilized World" becomes a substantial part of the testimony.

In your letter you say that your enemies, by their lies and calumnies, are endeavoring to stain the honor of Germany in her hard struggle for existence—in a struggle which has been forced upon her."

WAS STRUGGLE FORCED UPON GERMANY?

It gives me a feeling of pity to note the importunity with which the people of Germany are seeking the good opinion of America in this strife. It is greatly to their credit that they wish to stand right in the judgment of this nation. But Germany need have no fear that American public opinion will be perverted by the lies and calumnies of her enemies. We are all going deeper than the surface in our search for the truth. Your letter speaks of Germany as being in a struggle "which has been forced upon her." That is the whole question; all others are subsidiary. If this struggle was forced upon Germany, then indeed she stands in a position of mighty dignity and honor, and the whole world should acclaim her and succor her, to the utter confusion and punishment of the foes who have attacked her. But if this outrageous war was not forced upon her, would it not follow in the course of reason that her position is without dignity and honor, and that it is her foes who should be acclaimed and supported to the extreme limit of human sympathy.

AMERICAN JUDGMENT IS FORMED.

I believe, dear Doctor Schaper, that the judgment on this paramount question has been formed. That judgment is not based upon the lies and calumnies of the enemies of Germany, nor upon the careless publications contained in the newspapers, but upon a profound study of the official correspondence in the case. This correspondence has been published and disseminated by the respective governments concerned in the war: it has been reprinted in full in our leading newspapers, and with substantial fullness in our magazines, and has been republished in a complete pamphlet form in one huge edition after another by the "New York Times," and again by the American Association for International Conciliation; and the public demand for this indisputable evidence has not yet been satisfied, although many millions of our people have read it. These documents are known officially as (1) The Austro-Hungarian note to Servia. (2) The Servian Reply. (3) The British White Paper.

(4) The German White Book. (5) The Russian Yellow Book. (6) The Belgian Grey Book. They contain all the letters and dispatches which each government desired to publish to the world as its own justification for being at war. And, by the way, every man who studies these papers will regret two things; first, that Germany has not dared to publish her correspondence with Austria, and, second, that Austria has not dared to publish her correspondence with Germany. If the world were in possession of this suppressed evidence, its judgment on the question of guilt would doubtless be greatly facilitated. But, in so far as they have been printed, all of these documents are before me as I write this letter. I cannot help wondering whether they have been circulated in Germany; I cannot help wishing that the German people might have the opportunity which my countrymen have had of reading these state papers in their fullness.

WHAT THE DOCUMENTS PROVE.

Was this war forced upon Germany? What do the official documents prove?

Well, we all know that Austria, away back in 1908, made seizure of the two provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina. A thing like that enrages the human spirit; and the brains of some men will not act normally under such extreme provocation. In May, 1914, the Austrian Crown Prince went into these provinces. The people looked upon him as an invader, a usurper, a conqueror, a tyrant, and he was assassinated. It was a detestable act, condemned and abhorred by just men everywhere. I condemn it, detest it, and abhor it. But it was the penalty which any man would pay who would flagrantly invade a conquered province under like circumstances. There is always a hot-head ready to murder a tyrant, and a tyrant is one who makes himself a conqueror for his own aggrandizement. In the eyes of those subjugated people, the Crown Prince was a tyrant. Austria at once assumed to hold Servia responsible for this murder, and dispatched an ultimatum containing ten drastic conditions which were more exacting upon the dignity of Servia than any demand that was ever before made by one nation upon another. Yet Servia yielded all except in part as to Articles 5 and 6. In Article 5 the Imperial scheme of Pan-Germanism was developed—insidiously broached, it is true, but still it was put before Servia as a definitive part of the plan of Austro-German expansion. Servia was required "to accept the collaboration in Servia of representatives of the Austro-Hungarian government in the suppression of the subversive movement directed against the territorial integrity of the (Austrian) monarchy."

FULL OF HIDDEN MEANING.

This brief clause is full of hidden meaning. The phraseology is so elastic that its acceptance by Servia would have given Austria the opportunity to extend its purport so that it would cover practically any kind of interference in Servian affairs for the ostensible purpose of suppressing any "subversive movement." Already Austria had ravished Servia of two of her precious jewels, and was laying her plans to despoil her of more. In Germany's "White Paper" we read an undisguised acknowledgement that the main object of Austria's war on Servia was to assert a control in Servia over all policies which Austria might regard as having any inimical effect upon such territory as should now belong to Austria or would hereafter be annexed.

It would be difficult to conceive of anything that would be a more fatal impairment of the sovereignty of Servia than for her to yield to this harsh demand. Yet she replied with patience and dignity, consenting "to admit such collaboration as agrees with the principle of international law, with criminal procedure, and with good neighborly relations."

AUSTRIA AND SERVIA.

It is well that we should keep in mind the avowed object of Germany and Austria in making this significant demand upon Servia, in order that we may be able to avoid the error of assuming that the Austrian war on Servia was merely a punitive expedition on account of the assassination of the Crown Prince of Austria. When these minatory conditions were published, Russia, as one of the great powers of Europe, naturally felt that she had a historical basis to claim, and she did emphatically claim, a right to a voice in determining whether the sovereignty of the kingdom of Servia should be permanently impaired. Germany well knew that an insistence upon this condition would make a general war inevitable; yet she proclaimed her insistence from the house-tops, and defied Russia to interfere.

Again, Article 6 contained the unprecedented condition that Austrian jurists should sit in the Servian court before which the assassins were to be tried, and even here Servia agreed to submit in effect, although calling attention to the extremely reasonable fact that such participation by Austria was contrary to the laws of Servia. If her replies on any part of the ultimatum were not satisfactory to Austria, Servia candidly offered to hold further conversations on the subject, or to refer the matter to The Hague Court, or to the great powers of Europe. In this transaction Servia showed a disposition towards reparation and towards peace, which the civilized world has been trying for many years to inculcate into the foreign relations of all nations. Servia had just passed through two wars, and her strength was exhausted. But Austria, conscious all the time that good faith would have enabled her to reach an agreement in a conversation of thirty minutes, was resolved to make war, and in this resolve the German Emperor and the military party in Germany upheld her, as candidly acknowledged in her official declarations.

GERMANY BACK OF AUSTRIA.

The German White Book is very frank on this subject. It says: "We were able to assure our ally (Austria) most heartily of our agreement with her view of the situation, and to assure her that any action that she might consider it necessary to take in order to put an end to the movement in Servia directed against the existence of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy would receive our approval."

You will see, my dear Doctor Schaper, that it never entered into the minds of the Emperor and his advisers to refer the question to The Hague Court or to discuss it in a concert of the powers of Europe. What we are trying to do, you will remember, is to find out who began the war. So the German statement proceeds: "We were fully aware in this connection that warlike moves on the part of Austria-Hungary against Servia would bring Russia into the question, and might draw us into a war in accordance with our duty as an ally."

I hope you will read that last quotation with extreme care. Does it not prove by German declaration alone that all these myriad thousands of good German working men who have been slaughtered in their invasion of other lands have died, not because the Fatherland was in peril, but because ambitious schemes of the dynastic houses of Hapsburg and Hohenzollern demanded the sacrifice?

CORRESPONDENCE NOT ALL PUBLISHED.

In the English White Paper we have all the telegrams which were exchanged between the English Foreign Office over the signature of Sir Edward Grey and the diplomatic officials of the other powers, including the Imperial Chancellor of Germany. These telegrams to and from her own foreign office are, curiously enough, not included by Germany in her presentation of the case. On July 24th Sir Edward Grey, through the British Ambassador at Berlin, proposed a conference between Germany, Italy, France and England in the event of the relations between Austria and Russia becoming threatening, and he repeated this suggestion the next day to the German Ambassador at London. The Emperor returned suddenly to Berlin on July 26th (he was not "away on his vacation when the war broke out," as has been stated by his defenders in America time and time again), and Sir Edward Grey repeated his urgent appeal for a conference of accommodation. So on the next day the English Ambassador at Berlin telegraphed Sir Edward Grey: "Secretary of State says that conference you suggest would practically amount to a court of arbitration, and could not, in his opinion, be called together except at the request of Austria and Russia. He could not, therefore, fall in with your suggestion, desirous though he was to co-operate for the maintenance of peace. I said I was sure that your idea had nothing to do with arbitration, but meant that representatives of the four nations not directly interested should discuss and suggest means for avoiding a dangerous situation. He maintained, however, that such a conference as you proposed was not practicable."

DID GERMANY TRY TO AVERT WAR?

Was Germany anxious to avoid war? Did she make the slightest effort to avert it? Do we see her being attacked? Were her "jealous neighbors" oppressing her? On the contrary, Germany stood steadfastly upon her assurance that Austria was justified in making war on Servia, and that if Russia interfered, she would fight Russia. Then who began the war? And once again, why did these German husbands, sons and fathers die? And all this time England and France and Russia and Italy were striving mightily to hold back Austria from beginning a conflict which they all knew, as Germany knew, would destroy the peace of the world. They all pleaded for further conference, but Austria was obdurate, being upheld in her uncompromising attitude by Germany, and on July 27th she began her war on Servia.

Returning to the German White Book, we read that after Austria had attacked Servia, Russia began to mobilize her army, as she had all along declared that she would do, for action against Austria if it became necessary. We then come upon one of the most extraordinary communications which has ever been written. It is a telegram from the German Emperor to the Czar, and says: "The unscrupulous agitation which has gone on for years in Servia has led to the revolting crime of which Archduke Francis Ferdinand was the victim. . . . Undoubtedly you will agree with me that we two, you and I, as well as all sovereigns, have a common interest in insisting that

Educational Evangelism

A Timely Utterance on a Vital Subject.

BY FRANK G. WARD.

EVANGELISM is concerned with the acceptance of the gospel of Jesus as the ruling principle of life. It calls for knowing and for willing. These two factors must be well balanced to get good results. Quite a number of combinations may exist in the relation of these two phases. For example, one may know about the gospel and yet may will not to accept it. Such an one makes us think quickly of James' statement, "To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not; to him it is sin." A good deal of modern evangelism has been aimed at these conditions. Of course there must be a setting forth of the gospel-content, but the main consideration is the will. This is an important kind of evangelism and it calls for skill.

A second kind of evangelism is that which puts an equal emphasis upon the knowing side in order to win men to a hearty acceptance of Jesus. This may be called educational evangelism in distinction from the more generally accepted definition just mentioned.

One type of this kind is the person who wants to do the will of Jesus but who is in the dark about it. He does not know in any adequate way what the gospel means. In many instances the fog could be quickly lifted if the truth were presented in such a fashion as to meet the honest and reasonable questionings. In other cases a thorough study of the Bible is needed to give one his bearings in matters of religion and morality. We must learn anew what it is to love God with the mind, as a very important part of any sound evangelism.

THE HONEST INQUIRER.

There are a good many honest inquirers about today and they offer an inviting field to the minister who is able to meet them sympathetically. To go over the ground with an honest inquirer of this kind calls for an open mind on the part of the would-be guide, who may find in turn that some of his own positions need to be reviewed. It is a great thing to be evangelists one to another in the give and take which discovers to us the gospel of our Lord. Let not the humble minister despise such reciprocity.

A second type which calls for educational evangelism is made up of those who at the outset know nothing about the gospel and so are not in a position to will anything about it. Adults of this order may be found in some mission fields and perhaps in isolated parts of what we call Christian civilization.

For our purpose, however, the subjects are children, whose religious instincts are taken in the bud and whose acceptance of the gospel becomes a progressive affair. The process reaches on up into the later teens, perhaps, before it is confirmed in character, but it is evangelical from the start. Jesus makes obedience the first step into the kingdom of God,—and that is where the child begins. The aim is to secure the response of the will to each new truth as it comes to growth in the individual's life. It is the taking of the kingdom of God by nurture and not by violence. But the point to be kept in mind is that the results are just as truly evangelical as are the returns of the more dramatic efforts in behalf of maturer life. This "progressive coming of God's kingdom," to adapt a phrase of Phillips Brooks, is over hills and through valleys. The slope up to God is not an even one. If you will but know it, here is where the graded lessons in our Sunday-school program are designed to render invaluable service. They are more thoroughly evangelical in aim than the old form of lessons ever thought of being. It will take a little time for some of us who have been dealing with the latter for two score years and more to "catch on" to the idea. Let me point out in a few hundred words what the plan is driving at, and how evangelical it is.

In the first place, it is well established that in this Pilgrim's Progress of Everyman there are peaks of promise where the individual wants more than at other times to commit his way unto the Lord. The path from any one of these peaks to the next higher one drops down into a valley before it begins to rise again. It is exactly the same thing that is apt to happen after a revival meeting when all hands feel a sense of depression. It is not fair to blame the minister or the church for this condition. The only way to do is to recognize the human nature in it and its part in the program of evangelism; and to get ready for both the Mounts of Transfiguration and also the Valleys of Despair, where are the lunatic boys, the distracted fathers, and the unequal disciples.

AFTER THE REVIVAL.

Now, our evangelical Christian nurture keeps the geography of the unfolding life constantly in mind. When the youth approaches one of these peaks where he is due to get his vision, the life of Jesus makes up the Sunday-school lessons in such a way as to invite him to take his stand by the side of the Master. When the shadows of the valley begin to fall across his path, then those parts of the Bible where "Duty whispers low, Thou must," are drawn up to give courage to the faint heart. The whole procedure is on the basis that the Bible is made for man,—and not man for the Bible, as we sometimes used to think. But is there anything more evangelical in its spirit, more orthodox in its attitude toward the Bible, more hopeful in its method, than to make the Scripture a veritable revolving searchlight to illume the Christ on the Great Divide of everyone's life and to hold one to his way when he walks for a time in the shadow?

This, I take it, is educational evangelism. The aim is to reach the will as fast as it is due to form, through Jesus Christ to set it in right relations to God, and to confirm it by such discipline of character as enables it "to suffer and be strong."

Leaking at the Top

Or, Some Reasons Why Influential Young People are Being Lost to the Church.

FROM THE BIBLICAL WORLD.

SHIPS leak at the bottom. Institutions leak at the top. With them the best rises and tends to escape unless properly conserved. The modern church as an institution is subject to this danger. It is losing young and vicarious idealists who are ready to sacrifice for the cause of Jesus, but who believe that his cause can better be served in some other institution than the church. And yet they are also children of a mother who, they feel, cannot wisely employ them. They are our social workers, our playground directors, our municipal reformers, and practically all other leaders in the struggle for larger social good.

Ask these young men and women why they are not identified with some church and they will answer you frankly. They believe that they can do more good in organizations which have more definitely practical purposes and demand no profession of religious belief.

NOT A PROTEST AGAINST ORTHODOXY.

This answer is not a protest against orthodoxy. Such men and women are found no more universally in "liberal" churches than in orthodox. Their self-imposed ostracism is born in something deeper than the unwillingness to subscribe to creeds. Their impulses are Christian, but theologically they are agnostics.

Why is the church losing these men and women?

Partly because they have been told by preachers that they cannot accept science and be Christians.

Partly because the churches with which some of them are acquainted have been controlled by men without knowledge or sympathy with education, who prefer preachers who are theologically as narrow-minded as themselves.

Partly because they have never been taught to think their religion in terms of their best thinking. Therefore, they believe themselves to be more out of touch with the church than they really are. They despair of its future because they do not understand its present.

Partly, one might almost say largely, because they are themselves spiritually indifferent. In many cases they are altruistic materialists. Religion they hold to be a survival of primitive days and to be subordinate to ethics. They hold that it is useless to preach the gospel to men with empty stomachs, and therefore prefer to help people get good housing and good jobs rather than a sustaining faith in God and immortality.

MISSIONS ABROAD AND AT HOME.

But whatever may be the reasons for the loss of these efficient workers, the churches should at least be as much interested in them as the leaders across the seas. It has a mission at home to those that are neither dependent, defective, nor delinquent. Why should the church be indifferent to men and women simply because they are strong and influential? A religion or any phase of a religion which cannot satisfy the intellectual life of its time is as surely doomed as a religion which cannot master the conscience of its time. One does not need to know much history to see this.

What shall the church do to prevent the loss of these modern men and women?

For one thing, its teachers and preachers must live in today's thinking. Homiletical cleverness, oratorical persuasiveness, ecclesiastical authority, will not avail with men and women whose eyes have once been used in a methodical search for the truth. Such honesty may bring its possessor bitter experiences, misrepresentation, loss of position, but the honesty quite as truly as the blood of martyrs has been the seed of the living church.

Either Christianity will compel the assent of honest men of modern training or it is doomed to become in America what it is in Europe—the patron and protege of ignorance.

Great causes can be hindered by little men. In its zeal to save the world, let the church not forget to save its own saviors.

Will the War Reach Christ's Tomb?

Israel Zangwill, Jewish Writer, Paints a Distressing Picture of Conditions in Palestine.

IN a recent interview, Israel Zangwill, famous as the author of "The Melting Pot," and as a Jewish leader, has little hope of the Holy Land being spared the ravages of war. Jerusalem, he says, has been cut off from the world since August. Hunger, disease and violence prevail in the city and throughout the land. The Turkish armies have laid hold of all available supplies and have visited unspeakable cruelties upon the Jewish and Christian population.

THE TURKS IN JERUSALEM.

In Jerusalem 12,000 Turks are quartered; twelve regiments hold the road to Joppa; 120,000 soldiers are bivouacked along the only road that has access to water. Thousands of Jews have fled to Alexandria, where they are housed in the quarantine sheds for cattle, and thousands more are following them—old men and women and helpless little children—many dying by the way.

Mount Carmel, Mount Olivet and the Mount of Transfiguration have been converted into military posts, from which the Turkish soldiers keep watch toward the sea and over the land. If the allies bombard Joppa or any other Palestinian coast town the Turks have announced they will massacre both Jews and Christians.

The Ottoman soldiers are driven to desperation by their own lack of supplies and equipment. Many of them are wearing uniforms of summer khaki, in which they suffer terribly from the cold.

Present indications are that the Garden of Gethsemane may be shell-scarred before the war is over.

What will happen when the war, that is now clamoring at the gates of Constantinople, spreads southward into the Holy Land, Mr. Zangwill declares it is impossible to foresee.

This Jewish author fears the jealousy of the allied countries and their Christian enemies, for the sacred places of Jerusalem and the strategic worth of Palestine will expose the unhappy land to a bitter and destructive strife.

"Russia," says he, "holds more property at and sends more pilgrims to the sacred sites than all other nations. Russia will not abandon her dream of possessing Jerusalem while she has a gun in Syria. During 500 years France has been the protector of the Christians in the near East. France will surrender only to overwhelming force. The right of way across Palestine imperils Egypt, threatens Suez and the way to India. Great Britain will fight desperately for Palestine."

GERMANY AND PALESTINE.

As for Germany, the kaiser's interest, political and sentimental, in Palestine is well known. Germany alone appreciates fully the wealth of its resources in phosphorus, bitumen and petroleum, Zangwill declares. Germans control the banks and German colonies command the highways and railroads. According to Mr. Zangwill, there are fortress hospices at the Joppa and Damascus gates of Jerusalem of which the allies have yet to discover the strength, and a chime tower, built by the kaiser on Mount Olivet, is in reality a war tower which commands every approach to the Holy City.

In the vision of this modern Israelite prophet Jerusalem is destined to become the convergent point of the world's passions before this war is over.

The Women Pay for War

THEODORE Waters, Secretary of The Christian Herald, has lately told of what he saw in Belgium, where he went to assist in the distribution of American food. The New York Sun says:

"He painted a contrast of brilliantly-lighted hotels and restaurants overflowing with gorgeously-uniformed German soldier revelers, and the outside of these hotels virtually beleaguered by women who were waiting in the cold and snow for the food that would keep themselves and their children alive another day.

"He mentioned in particular the Weber Hotel at Brussels, patronized by German officers, and around the corner a theater besieged by starving, freezing women.

" 'It is a tale of human woe, a tragic misery, the like of which the world has never seen,' Mr. Waters went on. 'In Antwerp I saw over a thousand poorly-clad women, one in bedroom slippers, standing shivering in the snow, waiting for food to be doled out, and this under the shadow of a big hotel where well-fed, well-clad soldiers drank and made merry.

" 'In Brussels we say women holding babies snuggled to their necks, standing on the cold corners begging a centime for food. We visited the distributing stations, and saw the wood sent over by kind-hearted Americans being handed out in all too meager rations. They came in droves, these people, from all directions, and the clatter of their sabots on the pavement was a sad accompaniment to the sadder thoughts, for none spoke, except to murmur a thankful 'Merci, Monsieur!' as each portion was handed out.' "

No doubt in East Prussia the picture is reversed, and there it is the Russian officers who revel in the hotels in gorgeous uniforms, while thinly-clad women starve and freeze outside. And still some people persist in saying that war does not concern women!

The Pilot

WHO is the Pilot, into whose sure hand
Waiting the summons as the day grows dark,
Upon the border of this earthly strand,
We may commit our barque?
Can Reason rule the deck, and firmly steer
Through depths where swirling maelstroms rave and roar,
And madly threaten to o'erwhelm us, ere
We reach the thither shore?

* * *

Has calm Philosophy, whose love unrolls
The axioms of the age, ever found
A perfect chart to map what rocks and shoals
Beset the outward bound?
Can Science guide, that with exploring glass
Sweeps the horizon of the restless tide,
And questions, 'mid the mists that so harass,
"Is there a farther side?"

* * *

Dare old Tradition set its untrimmed light
Upon the prow, and hope to show the way
Through gulfing troughs that blinder make the night,
Out into perfect day?
Nay, none of these are strong to mount the deck,
And with authority assured and free,
Guide onward, fearless of the loss and wreck
That crowd this soundless sea.

* * *

O ye who watch the ebbing tide—what saith
The wisdom that through ages hath sufficed
For questioning souls?—The only chart is faith;
The only Pilot, Christ.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

SHORT-SIGHTED AND COSTLY.

SENSITIVE and far-seeing churchmen of the Disciples of Christ will be pained and humiliated at the sorry depths to which the contention between the Christian Standard and the Christian-Evangelist has at last descended. A "vicious circle" of charge and countercharge and endless recrimination seems to have been established.

Neither belligerent is able, apparently, to extricate itself from the toils of unseemly conflict, lest the rival publishing house thereby gain the advantage.

The latest phase of the strife involves a question of ecclesiastical strategy so delicate and so big with consequences that it ought not have been touched save by the deftest hands, and then only with the support of wise counsel.

But the "Evangelist," goaded by the embarrassing attacks of the "Standard," leaped at the chance to change the subject of controversy and shift the onus of explanation from itself to its Cincinnati competitor.

In a sensational editorial it charges that the Standard has renounced all fidelity to the missionary organizations and is leading a "boycott" that is destined to result in the destruction of the societies unless prevented by some brave defender like the Christian-Evangelist itself.

As illustrative of the heroic tone of voice of the "Evangelist's" present outbreak, read the following:

> Some years ago we predicted the "Christian Standard" was "on the way to Nashville." Since its recent manifesto, our prediction is confirmed. It now withdraws its "co-operation" and "support" from these great organizations and we may soon expect its dreadnaughts, aeroplanes and submarines seeking their complete destruction. We shall not witness this scene without comment.
> Our readers will bear witness that we have given little heed to the attacks of "The Christian Standard" on the Christian Board of Publication; but, when this journal attempts to destroy the institutions among us that minister to aged preachers, care for orphan children, and carry on the great missionary work of the Disciples, the Cincinnati weekly and the brotherhood may expect to hear from The Christian-Evangelist.

By just so much influence as it possesses the "Evangelist," with its short-sighted and self-conscious strategem, has put itself in the way of the deeper-lying strategem of God. Had the editor truly consulted the interest of our missionary organizations instead of yielding to the vindictive impulse arising from the embarrassing controversy with his neighbor, he would have seen that silence and constructive service are the best support he and his newspaper can now give to these societies. To attack the Standard's fundamental motive and to "expose" its divisive design is to fall into the very trap the far more wily strategist in Cincinnati has laid.

The societies are this year having the hardest time in their history. They have been compelled to cut their appropriations in foreign lands and on home fields by five and ten per cent, with a threatened necessity of a further cut of a like amount.

It is the most inopportune moment imaginable for a newspaper to thrust a divisive controversy into the consciousness of our brotherhood.

God and the good sense of our people were taking beautiful care of the precious interests attacked by the "Standard." That paper was steadily going to its own place. Its editorial renouncing all fidelity to the societies would have been passed unheeded by the brotherhood had not the Evangelist made it the text for its heroic but inconsequent editorial. The Standard's "howitzers" and "dreadnaughts" are mostly make-believe, except as they gain importance in minds excited by the attention given them by the self-appointed defender of our missionary societies.

Great unifying forces are at work in our brotherhood today. Such an enterprise as the Men and Millions Movement is building a wall of defense around our missionary agencies which no hostile newspaper can penetrate.

The general convention itself, which seems for the moment to be an occason of controversy, will prove to be an irresistible force for unity if, instead of eternally rehearsing its history and forever pulling up its roots to look at them, we will leave it alone and let it grow.

The Christian Century earnestly beseeches the Christian Evangelist, as a co-laborer in the common cause, to cease its journalistic warring and join us in a constructive and peaceful program for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God.

JESUS IN THE WILDERNESS.

LENTEN days are memorials of an impressive experience in the life of our Lord. That period of forty days spent, as tradition affirms, on the Quarantana mountain overlooking on the one side the rugged mountain spaces of Judea, and on the other the rank, rich, lowlands of the Jordan, was full of a struggle between the lower Messianic expectations of the time and those high purposes which the kingdom of God, long dreamed of by prophets of the past, set in his soul.

It is not inconceivable that if Jesus had yielded himself to the nationalist hopes of his day he could have become such a leader as his people desired. He had all the elements of a strong and convincing leadership. The Roman empire was losing out through the baseness of its rulers and the corruption of its system.

Why might not a noble and devoted leader, lofty in his ideals and consecrated to the highest good of his people, teach the world the lesson not only of successful nationalism, but of a world-embracing empire in which righteousness should prevail?

Many men through the ages have cherished such a dream.

Some have attempted to realize it and failed because of their own inefficiency. Others have begun with the loftiest motives, and like Mohammed and Bonaparte, have fallen at last into the mire of self-interest and egotism.

But might not Jesus have achieved that success? And what a difference there would have been in the history of the world if he had chosen that way. The imagination is stirred by such a vision.

But even so, what would have become of such an empire after its first and ideal ruler passed away? Like Alexander's fabric of world rule it would have crumbled into fragments and fallen into the hands of baser men.

Moreover, what would have become of those deeper and broader religious hopes which can never be cabined and confined in the forms of political organization?

Most of all, what would have been the message of such a leadership for the men and women who fail, and whose deepest need is not wealth or success but forgiveness and peace?

These must have been among the questions which passed many times through the mind of our Lord in the quiet, breathless days and the cold, starlit nights on the Judean highlands.

Never did temptation assume a more seductive form than that which lured him to the lesser ideal.

And never was a choice more significant for the spiritual history of the world than that at which Jesus finally arrived, as he turned his face once more toward the crowded life of the metropolis and took up that quiet task of spiritual leadership and sacrificial service which led him, unhasting and unresting, to the consummation of his work at Gethsemane, Calvary and the Garden Tomb.

DEAN MATHEWS IN JAPAN.

A LETTER received from a prominent missionary in Japan gives some interesting news regarding the importance attached by the Japanese leaders to the visit of Dean Shailer Mathews, and the reception which is being accorded him from government officials and men of importance throughout the land. The fact that Dr. Sydney Gulick is his companion, a man well known to the Japanese through many years of useful service as a Christian missionary, has added greatly to the value and impressiveness of the visit.

On one day he visited and addressed the students at the Imperial University in Tokio. It is probable that he is the first man on a definitely religious errand who has been asked to speak there, and the fact that he is an official delegate from the American churches lends significance to the welcome accorded him. He has met intimately such Japanese leaders as Count Okuma, Baron Shibusawa and other men in high official station.

Not only in the imperial cities of Tokio and Kioto has this welcome been accorded him, but in other places like Sendai, Morioka, Yokohama and Osaka. In the latter place the city government put at his disposal an official automobile during his stay, and requests for addresses and visits signed by leading officials have reached him from many other places.

In commenting on his visit in Morioka and the marked attention the officials showed him, Dr. Nitobe said to a dinner group in his home at which Professor Mathews was the guest of honor, that the interest manifested in his visit is expressive of a great change on the part of official leaders toward Christianity.

It marks a new confidence in Christianity as a moral force, and openness of mind to receive whatever Christianity has to offer. It is significant of the opportunity Japan opens to Christian work at the present time.

Those who know Dean Mathews are not surprised that the Japanese are astonished at the amount of work he undertakes. Three or four addresses a day are a common experience. Receptions and interviews fill other hours.

The Japanese press is giving large space to his utterances. Two columns were devoted to his speech at the university by the Japan Times. Apparently there have been no adverse criticisms on his addresses or his visit.

CONDITIONS IN TURKEY.

THE events of the past few days have increased the tension in the Turkish empire and made clearer than ever the fatal character of the choice made by Turkey in entering the war. The arrival of the allied fleets in the Dardanelles and their gradual progress towards Constantinople are sure signs that the end of the Turkish regime in Europe has arrived. No such action would be undertaken by the naval forces of the allies were they not certain of the character of all the defenses along the Dardanelles and at Constantinople, and confident of their ability to win through to the goal.

The panic that has fallen upon Constantinople is a sure token of Turkish inability to meet the crisis the war has forced upon her. The escape of the former sultan, Abdul-Hamid, from his captivity on the Bosphorus is not significant except as a sign of the utter weakness and disorganization of the Turkish government. The fate of the capital and the partition of the remaining portions of European Turkey, and the Mediterranean portions of Asiatic Turkey, among the waiting nations is now but a matter of weeks. Russia will receive either actively or constructively the control of Constantinople she has so long desired, England already has taken over Egypt. It is probable that France will receive Palestine as an actual province or a protectorate, and of course Greece, Bulgaria and Roumania are eagerly watching for the fragments of the European provinces.

Meantime, the situation among the native peoples of the Turkish empire grows increasingly desperate. Famine has actually come in many places, and the food supply in the most favored parts of Turkey is rapidly disappearing. The missionaries are burdened everywhere with the task of caring for the poor and the sick. The men have been drafted into the army against their will, and the property of all classes has been levied upon with remorseless severity. Conditions could hardly be worse.

Considering the weakness of government and the fanaticism of rival religious creeds there is always danger of outbreak and massacre in the interior. Great numbers of Greek and Latin Christians have taken refuge in Egypt and Europe. The mission stations on the coast have not as yet been disturbed, and have been able to render very great assistance to the distressed people. Never was missionary and educational work more strategic and valuable than today in that land, though the schools have been badly crippled by the severe drafts of even the youngest men for the army.

The United States warship, the "North Carolina," remains in the harbor of Beirut, and the "Tennessee" has done splendid service in transporting refugees from Mediterranean ports to places of safety. The great need in Turkey at present is supplies of food for the starving, and an early end of military operations whatever be the issue, so that the people may return to their homes and fields.

EUROPEAN UNIVERSITIES.

THE past ten years have witnessed a rising ambition on the part of American students to enjoy some period of university work abroad. Ministers and teachers alike have come to realize the necessity of graduate study and standing, and have felt the call of the European institutions of learning as a supplement to the best that America could offer in this field.

During the last half of that period, however, it has become increasingly clear that the necessity for European study was on the decline. As before, the advantage of travel and residential studies in Scotland, England, Germany and France is recognized. But at the same time it has become evident that the best American universities offer as competent an opportunity for research work and instruction as the European schools. And in the more important of the social sciences the American institutions are rapidly taking precedence of their European rivals.

The war has intensified this situation. The German universities are practically closed. This does not mean that their doors are shut, or that their student body has vanished. But it does mean that many of the faculties and a large percentage of the student body have gone into the army, and that at best the university work is carried on under great difficulties. Moreover, it is utterly impossible for any American to enter Germany for educational purposes at the present time.

The situation in England, France and Scotland is more favorable, though greatly affected by the war. The Rhodes scholars pursue their courses without interruption at Oxford and Cambridge. The University of Paris, for a time interrupted in its work by the expected arrival of the German troops, has resumed its activities, and the Scottish universities, always more or less attractive to American theological students, have not been seriously limited in their courses.

But the steady stream of American students to foreign universities has been effectually checked. Scores of men and women who would otherwise have been abroad are now pursuing their courses in American universities, and discovering that aside from the pleasure and advantage which travel and the acquisition of a foreign language afford, their work is as satisfactory at home as it could be in Europe. This fact is deeply significant as relates to the future of graduate studies. America, already a leader in some of the most important fields of achievement, will be recognized increasingly as a leader in the most advanced type of educational service.

It is but a matter of a few years till the tide of student migration, already marked, from certain parts of Europe and from all the Orient toward American universities, will set in as steadily and resistlessly from Germany, France, England and Scotland, and the great American universities, east, central and west, will be the Meccas of the student world.

THE RISING CHURCHES.

THERE are few greater authorities on modern missions than the Rev. Arthur Judson Brown, D.D., secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions in New York City, and author of numerous books on missionary work.

Dr. Brown has been delivering lectures at the College of Missions, Indianapolis, as reported in the news pages of The Christian Century last week. These lectures were six in number and the general theme was "The Rising Churches in the Foreign Field." It is an honor both to Dr. Brown and to the college that they are permitted to co-operate in the presentation of so important a line of thought. The lectures when published will be a valuable addition to the literature of missions.

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Will Send Children to Country.

Jenkin Lloyd Jones, head of Lincoln Center, in Chicago, and pastor of the Unitarian church which is the nucleus of this institution, has purchased in behalf of the church a forty-acre farm in Wisconsin on the site of an inland lake. A farmer will be in charge with plenty of cows and garden supplies, and to this farm will be sent every summer large numbers of city children from the Lincoln Center classes to live in tents for two weeks and enjoy the country life. During the summer of 1915, about 160 children will be given this trip. The children are sent as a reward of good behavior in the Lincoln Center classes.

C. E. Secretary for Governor.

William Shaw, LL. D., who is the general secretary of the Christian Endeavor movement, is a candidate for the governorship in Massachusetts. He has been criticised for "giving up his holy ministry" but he has manfully replied that the Christian Endeavor movement has stood for certain civic ideals and now is the time for him to come out into the open for the things he has taught. He insists that he will not involve the society in partisan politics.

World Bible Congress.

The first World Bible Congress ever held will be in connection with the Panama-Pacific Exposition, in charge of the American Bible Society. The British and Foreign, the Scotch, the French and the German Bible Societies have agreed to take part. The American Society will bring representatives from China, Japan, Siam, South and Central America, and speakers from Europe will be secured if possible. The date set for the Congress is August 1-4.

Methodist Ministry Decreasing.

A cry of distress has gone up in New England among the Methodists. A recent survey has indicated that there are not as many ministers in that section as there were forty years ago, though the membership has increased over 27,000. Many churches have "supplies," men not educated for the ministry at all, and not living on the fields. In the six New England conferences and the three New York conferences working in New England, there were, in 1914, 420 supplies and only 110 young men on trial for admission to the ministry. These facts have occasioned alarm and have awakened interest in the educational situation.

Dr. Hugh Black Will Preach.

Central Presbyterian church of New York has purchased the edifice of the Madison Ave. Reformed church for $250,000. The pastor, Rev. Wilton Merle Smith, will preach only once each Sunday, and at the other service Dr. Hugh Black of Union Theological Seminary will speak.

Roman Catholics Appoint Peace Sunday.

The pope has directed that Catholics shall observe a Sunday on which they will pray for the peace of the world. Archbishop Quigley of the Catholic archdiocese of Chicago has appointed March 21 as the day for his territory. "I am sending you a decree issued by authority of our most holy father, the pope, ordering special prayers and devotions for the return of peace to the nations now at war in Europe and in other parts of the world," the archbishop says in a letter to the priests of the archdiocese. "The special prayers and devotions in the form prescribed by our holy father himself are to be solemnly held in all parish churches and public chapels throughout this country on Passion Sunday. Exhort your people to join you in praying Almighty God in his great mercy to restore the blessing of an early and lasting peace."

Boston and Chicago to Hear Sunday.

The movement to bring "Billy" Sunday to Boston brought on much controversy in church ministerial circles in that city. Several delegations of ministers went to Philadelphia to hear the evangelist before making their final decision. Upon their return these delegations reported to the ministerial association giving their impressions. Opinions pro and con were frankly expressed. One of the editors of the Congregationalist, published in Boston, led the discussion, speaking in favor. The chief speaker of the opposition was Dr. Charles R. Brown, Dean of the Yale School of Religion, who was present and declared his absolute disapproval of Mr. Sunday. He told of going to Philadelphia, with other Yale professors to hear and investigate for the purpose of deciding whether Mr. Sunday should be invited to speak to students of Yale. He heard Mr. Sunday preach but one sermon. He was bored and disgusted and came away with the conviction that thousands of people are being buncoed by the baseball evangelist. He felt that there was a sad lack of religion in the meetings, and that those who are recorded as converts are not taking the matter seriously. He said that Mr. Sunday attacked ministers and rumsellers, but had no word of denunciation against rich men who exploit their employes and violate the moral law by social and industrial injustice, because such men contribute liberally to Mr. Sunday's work. He attributed Mr. Sunday's success to his unconventional methods, his baseball record, effective advertising and the fact that an ex-prizefighter rubs him down after his sermons. He declared that he would hold up both hands against having Mr. Sunday come. Other speakers took issue with some of Dr. Brown's points. Dr. George A. Gordon was represented as strongly opposed. Dr. A. Z. Conrad and Dr. Cortland Myers were favorable and enthusiastic. Two weeks after this discussion a favorable delegation representing a majority of the ministers went to Philadelphia and presented Mr. Sunday with their invitation, which he accepted, setting September, 1916, as the date for his Boston meeting. During his Philadelphia campaign, which has just closed, Mr. Sunday received invitations from many leading cities of the country to hold evangelistic meetings. He has withheld his promise to visit Chicago largely on account of the attitude of the Third Presbyterian church and its pastor, Dr. Martin D. Hardin. Mr. Hardin received letters from certain saloon men commending his attitude, and he says this has made him determine to support Billy Sunday, as he is no friend of the saloon. It is believed that Mr. Sunday will now come to Chicago, though his coming will be delayed on account of eastern engagements. The Chicago committee is headed by Rev. James E. Walker, of the United Presbyterian church. The churches that are inviting Mr. Sunday are all on the west side of the city and the present plan is to make it a west side campaign. Whether the consent of the city council can be gained for the erection of a tabernacle remains yet to be seen.

Rev. "Billy" Sunday.

Christian Socialists Meet.

The ninth general conference of the Christian Socialist Fellowship was held in Baltimore Feb. 23 to 28. There was a large attendance and all the leading denominations were represented. Rev. Irwin St. J. Tucker, who is managing editor of the Christian Socialist and a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal church, made an address. The Episcopalians were largely represented in the meeting, Rev. James L. Smiley, assistant minister of St. Anne's church, Annapolis, presiding and Rev. Richard W. Hogue, rector of the Church of the Ascension, delivering the opening invocation. The principal address was made by Rev. George I. Brown, rector of St. John's church, Lancaster, Pa.

Orthodox Bishop Dies.

Bishop Raphael has been the Syrian bishop of the Orthodox church in New York, and he has been the assistant to the Russian Archbishop. He died at his home in Brooklyn on Feb. 27 from heart disease at the age of 64 years.

Promote Sunday-school in Philippines.

The Protestant Missions of the Philippines claim there are 75,000 Protestant church members in the Island, but only 30,000 Sunday-school pupils. This is to be remedied by a campaign which has adopted the slogan, "A Sunday-school membership equal to the church membership by October, 1916." The time limit which has been set is the date of the World's Sunday-school Convention in Tokyo.

Empty Pews in Scotland Church.

Empty pews do not seem to be found in the United States only. The Kilrenny kirk-session in Scotland is asking the withdrawal of an order by the St. Andrews Presbytery that two services be held on Sunday. The minister has gone to the church for the second service each Sunday for eight months, with the precentor, and not a single parishioner appeared.

Congregationalists Cross Continent.

A number of prominent Congregationalists will cross the continent this summer on a special train en route to the exposition at San Francisco. The special train will be conducted under the auspices of the "Congregationalist," one of the church's leading journals. Dr. Bridgman, the editor, will accompany the train and arrange its itinerary. The people on the train will stop at Congregational college centers for addresses, and will also speak in a number of large cities in Congregational churches. Thus the tedium of a long trip will be broken up and the time will be utilized for useful ends. It is planned to spend a month from the time of leaving Boston until the return. The train will pass through Chicago where some will be added to the party. Twice before in its history, the "Congregationalist" has arranged such a tour. In 1895, under the leadership of Dr. Dunning, thirty persons went to the Holy Land, and in 1896 fifty visited the historical cities of the Pilgrim fathers in England and Holland.

Bible Is Widely Circulated.

The war times do not seem to have interfered with the wider circulation of the Bible. This book, that was to become a curiosity in museums, according to Voltaire, is now being scattered in many languages over the entire earth. Every yearly report of the Bible societies gives cause for rejoicing. The British Foreign Bible Society reports 9,000,000 copies of all or parts of the Bible in 400 languages issued last year. The American Bible Society reports 5,251,176, an increase of 1,201,566 over the previous years.

Moral Conditions at Panama Exposition.

It has been openly stated that San Francisco is to be an "open" city during the Panama Exposition. This declaration of attitude with regard to moral conditions in the city has aroused many religious and reform organizations to protest. The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America is arranging a conference of various organizations to bring pressure to bear upon the managers of the exposition to safeguard the environment of the great fair.

Free Churchmen Choose President.

The non-conformist churches of England are united through the National Free Church Council. The next president of this organization will be a Baptist, Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, M. A., who is now the national secretary of the Baptists. He has been a very efficient man in his denominational relationships. The free churches are planning an aggressive movement as soon as the war is over.

Church Must Stand for Social Justice.

"The present system of society based on competition must be overthrown and wiped out and a new society built on the basis of fraternity and brotherhood." This was the ringing call to the Christian church and its members to become the prophets of the new social order given by the Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell, dean of the Fond du Lac diocese of the Episcopal church in a sermon recently in All Saints cathedral. "False prophets are always popular and true prophets unpopular," said the Rev. Mr. Bell. "The church has too long been prophesying smooth things that were popular and that people wanted to hear instead of saying the things that are unpopular and that people do not want to hear. Selfish interests have built up a so-called civilization that is a mockery of everything the Christian church should stand for."

Preachers as Business Promoters.

Preachers as business promoters have been severely grilled in Chicago pulpits recently. Ministers in various denominations have protested against the use of the title "reverend" to give respectability to wild-cat business enterprises. It has been asserted that when the preacher in business wanted to be honest, his judgment was bad. The Rev. Samuel J. Skevington, pastor of the Belden Avenue Baptist church, said in his sermon: "I am strongly of the conviction that a preacher who uses his position or his title to promote a business venture does an injury to the kingdom of God. If a preacher finds it necessary to leave the ministry for business he ought not to be permitted to perform any of the functions of a clergyman, nor should he at any time use the title 'Reverend.'"

Fanny Crosby's Poem for Ministers.

Fanny Crosby, the blind writer, who recently died, wrote a poem especially for retired ministers, and in sending the manuscript to the Rev. Joseph B. Hingeley, secretary of the board of congerence claimants of the Methodist Episcopal church, she wrote the following interesting letter:

"I trust you will allow me to substitute a poem for the song I promised you. It seemed to me, after trying to compose the words of a song, that I could better present a plea in a poem to be read than in a song.

"Could I voice my inmost thoughts in words I am sure the appeal would touch every member of the church. I pray that what I have written will touch many."

The following is the poem:

An appeal to the members of the Methodist Episcopal church in behalf of the superannuated ministers.

Love's Recompense.

There is a world of love and duty
That devolves upon us all.
There is a tender, pleading message,
And its tones like music fall:
Help our weary veteran preachers,
Scatter roses o'er their way;
Rally 'round them, hasten quickly,
Not tomorrow, but today.

From the well of deep affection
Now their hearts with gladness fill.
Do not wait their names to honor,
Till the pulse of life is still.
Break the box of alabaster,
Pour its oil upon them now,
Make their dwelling bright and happy,
Wreathe in smiles each furrowed brow.

They have borne the royal standard
Of our Master and our Lord.
From the time of early manhood
They have preached His Holy Word.
But their strength has lost its vigor,
And their cheek its youthful glow;
For the frost of age has touched them,
And their locks are white as snow.

Watchmen on the walls of Zion.
Though their feet no more will stand,
From the top of Pisgah's mountain
Faith beholds the promised land.
Soon triumphant like an army
Marching through the realms above,
They will shout the grand old story,
Robed in white and crowned with love.

Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip.

With the decline and death of many of the denominational brotherhoods, an older movement is coming into prominence again. The International convention of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip will be held in Philadelphia, March 25 and 26. This organization has worked out during the last two years a comprehensive program for the local church. The organization is interdenominational and international. It lays stress upon evangelism, upon denominational co-operation and upon the cultivation of the spiritual in religion.

Laymen's Missionary Movement.

Though not seeking much publicity of late, the Laymen's Missionary Movement is as much alive as ever. A hundred American cities will be visited by three or more teams of strong missionary speakers next winter. The campaign will begin Oct. 20, one team starting in Buffalo, another in Des Moines, and a third will come into action the middle of November for service in New York and vicinity. Chicago meetings are to be held in December. Home missions will have equal representation on these programs this year. In the typical program proposed for each of these city conventions the opening addresses will be on "America and Christian Leadership," and "The Present World Situation and Its Appeal to Men." The second day of the gathering will be devoted to "Missionary Progress of Recent Years" as a general theme, which will cover an interesting discussion on the topic, "Is the Church on a War Footing?" The morning of the third day will be devoted to considering "The Adequacy of the Gospel to Meet Modern Social Conditions," and the afternoon to "The Best Methods of Missionary Education and Finance." The final address on the closing evening will be "Jesus Christ the Source of Power." The national convention, which is to come as a climax to all these endeavors, is to be held in Washington, April 25-28, 1916. The hope is that President Wilson and Justice Hughes will address the delegates on the first evening of this assemblage. The following days will hear reports on "The Laymen's Part in the Propagation of Christianity," "Standards of Stewardship," and "The Christianization of the Impact of Western Civilization on the Non-Christian World." James M. Speers, the national chairman of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, is expected to preside.

President Brown at McCormick.

President Francis Brown, of Union Theological Seminary, New York, is known widely for his contribution to the literature of systematic theology. One of the very best single volume statements on systematic theology from a modern standpoint is from his pen. He spoke at McCormick Theological Seminary of Chicago for a week the last of February and the first of March on "Priests and Prophets in the Old Testament."

Anti-Catholic Paper Sued.

An anti-Catholic paper published in Missouri, and with wide circulation, has been sued by Rev. E. P. Rossman, a priest at Wheeling, W. Va., because the paper slurred the priest's morality. The action was brought in the federal courts and resulted in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff with damages of $1,500.

Here and There

What Everybody Knows.

That no sect, no man, no country has a monopoly on the truth. We gather as much of it as we can, as we gather the sea in our little cups. Some men would put a fence around the sea, as some think they have put a fence around the truth. The only truth of value to us is what we can use; we all can have our portion if we seek for it as we seek for the warmth of the sun in the frosty days of the early spring. We lose the love of truth when we lose the sense of companionship with all men who seek the truth just as earnestly as we. Truth binds its friends together. They are the real brotherhood of the universe. The sectarian is he who severs those souls asunder.

We Should Remember—

That the great souls do their work as well in the chimney-corner as on the mountain-top. The smaller a man is the more he desires a place in the sun. Pigmies on Alps are pigmies still. The head of the table, as ever, is where the great man sits, whether at the side or the end. The little man is lost in the sun; a hundred suns have nothing to add to the lustre of the really great.

The Bane of "Billy" Sunday.

I do not say that Mr. Sunday does not do a vast amount of good. Perhaps he is the one man to arouse the sleepy conscience of a money-mad, pleasure-mad age. My admiration for him is very great, despite all that may be said against him, and there is much that can justly be said.

But unless the preachers and editors are careful the greatness of "Billy" will become his bane and ours. It is not necessary to preach to us to be like him. A number of imitators has already appeared, and their efforts are pathetic. It is difficult to say whether we should smile or weep. Human second-hand editions of "Billy" are shelf-worn, badly battered and a drug on the market. For our good and his we had better allow him to enjoy his gifts and his rewards without infringement.

One good man tells us that what the preachers need today is a direct gift of speech like "Billy's." We might agree with that on general principles, if we are not likely to fall into the toils of his slang which sooner or later would have to be "cut out." We can get a better vocabulary than that of the great evangelist if we will work for it in Chaucer, in Pilgrim's Progress, in all the great literature of our mother tongue, and, within the reach of all, our English Bible. It is easy to make "Billy" appear a master of direct and forcible speech if you set him by the side of a half-educated man who has inflicted a book of some kind or other on an unoffending public.

But simple speech is a relative term. All depends upon the hearer. Drs. Storrs and Beecher were leagues removed from the vocabulary of the famous evangelist, and none will say that they sinned against the English tongue or the human understanding in their incomparable discourses. What two men of the past generation wielded a greater influence than they in their respective spheres? Did they speak to the intellectual aristocrat or to the common people? If we wished to find models of speech to recommend to the oncoming generation would we recommend Mr. Sunday or Dr. Storrs? In our Bible Colleges it will be a fatal day when we descend from the models of pulpit eloquence to follow the will-o'-the-wisp of a great evangelist's vocabulary, especially when hundreds believe that he is great in spite of his language. Mr. Moody was an example of plain speech, but do we not know of a seminary that instructs its students in the use of the English tongue after the model of Mr. Moody. The fact is that many good people are hooked on the peculiarities of great men, mistaking these peculiarities for genius. "Billy" Sunday's blunt speech will not make a "Billy" Sunday. Putting one's hands under the coat tails while preaching will not make an Alexander Campbell. Resting the Bible upon one's shelf while reading as only Mr. Moody could do, (though the tendency in the ministry is to develop a shelf), will not make a Moody.

Whatver speech brings the gospel within the understanding of men is the best, but we say that with many reservations.

The Tragedy and a Dream.

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise in a recent address in Philadelphia, said:

"The great struggle in Europe today is a war decreed by twenty men to perpetuate the dynastic system of government, and 600,000,000 of persons find themselves involved in a combat costing $50,000,000.

So much for the delightful pastime of blood-letting which some of the sharpshooters in America wish to see carried on in one way or another by this country. Suppose these leaders had sat down and talked over their differences before the war in the same spirit as they will sit down and talk them over when the war is ended, could there have been any war? When men depend on rifles to settle differences, they don't need any reason; and when they depend on reason to settle differences, they don't need any rifles.

The war in Europe is the age-long struggle between the beast and the angel, but no matter which wins, the beast must go.

A Successful Experiment With a Men's Bible Class.

The danger in the strong emphasis we are now putting upon the organized men's class is that it may become an end in itself, and do more harm than good to the work of the church as a whole. While the pastor was wrestling with the problem of Sunday evening service a friend suggested that an effort be made to enlist the men in that work. So in a quiet way, without any special plans or promises, they were invited to attend the Sunday evening service in a body, sitting in the center section of the church and taking the front seats. Thus far the evening service has been a delight. The men not only attended, but, in addition, we have had a splendid increase of all classes, so that our auditorium seating upwards of six hundred, is well filled week after week. The men are becoming enthusiastic over their part in the work, and many have told the pastor that he is doing the best preaching of his life. A series on some of the Old Testament characters has had the element of novelty in the mere recital of the story, and the application of some of the lessons found therein to every day living. We pass the suggestion on, hoping that it may be as helpful elsewhere as in Richmond.

Method or Inspiration?

Would it not be well throughout the year at our district or state conventions to invite a speaker of recognized power to help us all to see the need of doing what should be done in the different departments of the church? The methods can be worked out as before, but all work becomes easier when we urge new methods all the time and put as many levers as we can under the old to keep them from becoming commonplace, but without vision the people perish. We must first transplant our minds to Liverpool before we buy the ticket for the trip abroad. We must see the New Jerusalem before we can lay the foundations of one on the earth. The great voices today are as near us and as necessary as the voice of an Isaiah or a John the Baptist.

Is God On the Side of the Heaviest Battalions?

Few statements are more widely known and accepted, yet fewer are as far from the truth. Most of us take such statements without question because of the great names connected with them, and because they seem to be true. If this be true, then God was on the side of the crowd that burned the martyrs, because force was on their side. They had the heaviest battalions. He has ever been on the side of the strong against the weak, and in many instances we know that the weak have been right and the strong have been wrong. It is absurd to say that God is on the side of the strong arm always. There are times when the heaviest battalions may be correct in their contentions. If history teaches anything it is that God has not been on the side of the strongest very often. The majorities have usually been wrong. It would be better to revise Napoleon and say that victory is on the side of the heaviest battalions, and leave God out. The still small voice has led the world to greater victory than the roar of all the guns from the day the first one was fired until now. It must be a little risky to expect God to go into partnership with guns. The justice of a cause will decide the issue sooner or later no matter what the guns may do.

Friends Who Keep us Humble.

We all number among our amiable friends certain ones who consider it their Christian duty to tell us of our faults for our good, and in such a way that we wend our steps homeward, feeling that we have been crushed by a steam-roller, and that our self-esteem had been reduced to the thinness of a postage stamp. There are a few saints in the world who seem to believe that the worse they can make you feel, the more Christian they are. They seem to believe that it is all right to flay a neighbor or even a dear friend, provided the flaying be done in a Christian spirit. I have never met a victim who took that view of the case. Yet our friends who essay to tell us of our faults assume that their virtues are so flawless that a snowbank might cast a shadow by the side of them. They are almost perfect, but need a little more time for their wings to expand.

Who Began the War?

By Samuel Harden Church.

all those morally responsible for this terrible murder shall suffer deserved punishment."

We begin to see now why those German soldiers have died, and why those German women are weeping. A prince, no matter whether he was a usurper and an invader, has been shot. Therefore let all hell break loose in Europe! And those of us who have been shocked when bombs were hurled at emperors, are now astounded to behold that emperors, in emulation of the most despicable anarchists, have themselves hurled bombs at defenseless women and children in Antwerp and in Paris.

The Czar replied: "A disgraceful war has been declared on a weak nation; the indignation at this, which I fully share, is immense in Russia. I foresee that soon I can no longer withstand the pressure that is being brought to bear upon me, and that I shall be forced to adopt measures which will lead to war."

The emperor answered thus: "I cannot consider Austria's action a disgraceful war. Austria knows by experience that Servia's promises, when they are merely on paper, are quite unreliable."

"SCRAPS OF PAPER."

I cannot help asking you, dear Doctor Schaper, if the world has not come to know that there are other promises which, when they are merely on paper, are quite unreliable? Does not one such paper bear your emperor's signature? Has not your emperor declared that his solemn and sacred guarantee of Belgium's neutrality is nothing but a scrap of paper?

England now asked whether Germany, in the event of war, would guarantee that she would not despoil France of her territorial possessions, and Germany replied that she could not give such guarantees. And in answer to a last effort on the part of England to protect France from dismemberment and spoliation, the emperor sends this amazing telegram to the King of England: "My mobilization cannot be countermanded because I am sorry your telegram came so late. But if France offers me neutrality, which must be guaranteed by the British fleet and army, I shall of course refrain from attacking France and employ my troops elsewhere. I hope that France will not become nervous. The troops on my frontiers are in the act of being stopped by telegraph and telephone from crossing into France."

"My mobilization!" It is the emperor, then, who has mobilized. The time may come, dear Doctor Schaper, and you and I ought to hope that it will come soon, when there will be neither kings nor emperors with power to mobilize armies as a child plays with toy soldiers! In a certain event, says the emperor, "I shall refrain attacking France"—and mark what follows! "—and employ my troops elsewhere." The emperor is determined to make war, either on France, or "elsewhere." And then: "I hope France will not become nervous." Now what should make France nervous? "The troops on my frontiers are in the act of being stopped by telegraph and telephone from crossing into France." There we have it all! The telegram from England came too late; the German has mobilized; his armies are already crossing the French frontiers, but France must not become nervous! Poor France! already shaking with the tread of a million invaders, she must not get nervous!

The final step, then, appears to be an ultimatum, on July 31st, from the Imperial German Chancellor giving Russia twelve hours to cease her mobilization. But Russia continued to make her preparations, and the war broke out on Aug. 1.

Who began it? Was it England? Scarcely so, for England, in so far as her army is concerned, had yielded to the popular plea for arbitration, she was not ready for war, and will not be ready for another six months. Not one of the ninety-three distinguished men who have sent me this letter, if they will read the evidence, will say so. Nominally it was Austria, who, by her unreasonable and inexorable attack on Servia, began the war, but Austria was supported, controlled and guided at every step by Germany, who, in her turn, gave notice to the powers of Europe that any interference with Austria would be resented by Germany to the full limit of war.

For what, then, have these brave German soldiers died? Alas! Not one of all those among her slaughtered battalions could answer that question, in the last moment of his agony. The men who have fallen among the allies have died on their own soil, defending their countries against invasion, but all your sons have died in a foreign land without a cause.

Thank God every morning when you get up that you have something to do that day which must be done whether you like it or not. Being forced to work, and forced to do your best, will breed in you a hundred virtues which the idle never know.—Charles Kingsley.

Our Readers Opinions

THE "CENTURY" AND THE DISCIPLES' FUTURE.

Editor The Christian Century:

It has been with increasing interest that I have read your editorials from week to week on The Future of the Disciples' Movement. And it is a satisfaction to know that our people have in The Christian Century a paper to treat in a modern way the religious thought and life of the times.

That our religious life is undergoing a marked change is very patent to any student. The growth of democracy and the tendency of the individual to use his freedom in matters religious as well as secular could not result otherwise than in a demand for a new spirituality which has little to do with ecclesiastical principles and a dogmatic Christianity.

There is no doubt but the present great war has hastened the already growing conviction of the inadequacy of conventional religion.

It seems to me that the Disciples' movement has reached a critical point in its development as a great religious body. I know of no people in the present changing conditions who occupy such a strategic position as the Disciples. With its great ideals of Christian unity, the supremacy of Christ, and the restoration of a spiritual primitive Christianity we are in a position to become a great uniting force in the welding together of the spiritual energies of the church.

So I feel that the Disciples owe a debt of gratitude to The Christian Century for the helpful and catholic manner in which it meets the religious problems of the day.

The Mid-Week Service

TOPIC FOR MARCH 31.

The Courage of Jesus. Matt. 26:36-46.

It has always required courage to live the Christian life. There have been times when it was possible for a coward to go through the forms and ceremonies of the church. One may at the present day pass for a disciple of Jesus without incurring opposition and danger. But whoever takes his discipleship seriously and displays independence in thought and action will need courage. The new Jerusalem is not yet the chief city of the earth. The social and religious ideals of a present day disciple of Jesus who knows his Master and himself, excite wrath and indignation wherever they are preached. The church itself is only partly Christian. This is not said in derision of the church, but in recognition of its progressive realization of its mission.

Vision and Courage.

The foolhardy take risks for no good reason. Sober-minded men think that no man is justified in taking needless risks. The civilian is ordered off the battlefield because he has no business there. The soldier faces death because he feels that his country needs him where death is liable to meet him. Men who see what the world may become are justified in exciting the anger of the world that is. The courage of Jesus was the courage of one who understood the world that opposed him better than it understood itself. He knew that men would like a religion of freedom when once they really saw what it was. The courage of so many of us fails because it is only occasionally that we have visions of the better day. The present absorbs our attention so fully that we submit to its commands and thus fail to serve it well.

The Courage of Peace.

The noisy advocates of war have belittled the courage of the man who loves peace. They do not distinguish between the man who does not fight because he is a coward and the man who does not fight because he is courageous. The challenge of the bully may be met by physical force or by moral force. There are instances where the former must be used, for the bully does not always allow the lover of peace to employ moral and intellectual force to the exclusion of physical. But where it is possible, the truly courageous man acts in a way that makes the appeal to brute force seem childish. Was there ever a finer exhibition of bravery than that which Jesus gave to us when he stood before his accusers?

Courage and the Will of God.

To submit to the will of God requires the highest kind of courage. The words in which such submission is often described may leave the impression that only passive souls follow the leading of God. If they do, we need a new vocabulary. It is the active, energetic soul that is the channel of divine power. They who wait on God are very busy. Their difficulty comes when their inclination runs in one direction and the purpose of God runs in another. For them to submit is not to be quiescent, but to change the course of their activity. Jesus in Gethsemane was praying that his energies might go in the right direction. He wanted to have a full life. Surrender to the will of God insures us against profitless exertion. When we doubt that what we are doing is worth doing, our courage begins to weaken. Those who are sure of God have no such doubts. They frequently discover that they had misinterpreted the will of God. They know their knowledge is always imperfect. But what heartens them is the faith that they can know the purpose of their lives and that a divinely guided life is a real life.

SAMUEL REJECTED BY THE LORD.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR APRIL 4.

1 Sam. 15:10-23 Memory Verses, 22, 23.

Golden Text: Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice. 1 Samuel 15:22.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(10) Then came the word of Jehovah unto Samuel, saying, (11) It repenteth me that I have set up Saul to be king; for he is turned back from following me, and hath not performed my commandments. And Samuel was wroth; and he cried unto Jehovah all night. (12) And Samuel rose early to meet Saul in the morning; and it was told Samuel, saying, Saul came to Carmel, and, behold, he set him up a monument and turned, and passed on, and went down to Gilgal. (13) And Samuel came to Saul; and Saul said unto him, Blessed be thou of Jehovah: I have performed the commandment of Jehovah. (14) And Samuel said, What meaneth then this bleating of the sheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear? (15) And Saul said, They have brought them from the Amalekites: for the people spared the best of the sheep and of the oxen, to sacrifice unto Jehovah thy God; and the rest we have utterly destroyed. (16) Then Samuel said unto Saul, Stay, and I will tell thee what Jehovah hath said to me this night. And he said unto him, Say on.

(17) And Samuel said, Though thou wast little in thine own sight, wast thou not made the head of the tribes of Israel? And Jehovah anointed thee king over Israel; (18) and Jehovah sent thee on a journey, and said, Go, and utterly destroy the sinners the Amalekites, and fight against them until they be consumed. (19) Wherefore then didst thou not obey the voice of Jehovah, but didst fly upon the spoil, and didst that which was evil in the sight of Jehovah? (20) And Saul said unto Samuel, Yea, I have obeyed the voice of Jehovah, and have gone the way which Jehovah sent me, and have brought Agag the king of Amalek, and have utterly destroyed the Amalekites. (21) But the people took of the spoil, sheep and oxen, the chief of the devoted things, to sacrifice unto Jehovah thy God in Gilgal. (22) And Samuel said, Hath Jehovah as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of Jehovah? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams. (23) For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as idolatry and teraphim. Because thou hast rejected the word of Jehovah, he hath also rejected thee from being king.

Verse by Verse.

BY ASA MCDANIEL.

10. Then refers to Saul's disobedience, verses 4-9.—Came the word of Jehovah unto Samuel saying. The context implies that it was in a vision of the night. In this vision Samuel became convinced that God was speaking to him.

11. It repenteth me that I have set Saul to be king. Samuel was convinced that Jehovah had rejected Saul and that he was no longer the man for the kingdom. He represents Jehovah as using words which might be used by a human ruler. The divine nature is not capricious.—He has turned back from following me. Turned from the will of Jehovah to follow his own will. He left God out of the account.—Wrath, displeased, anger.—Cried unto Jehovah all night. A prayer of protest and expostulation.

12. Saul came to Carmel. The Carmel in Judah. In the hill country south of Hebron.—He set him up a monument. Note the self-exaltation. In this connection contrast I Sam. 9:21.—And went down to Gilgal. The Septuagint asserts that he went to Gilgal to make a thank offering.

13. Blessed be thou of Jehovah. A common form of salutation. It was originally a prayer. The spirit in which it was given seems to indicate a guilty conscience.—I have performed the commandment of Jehovah. In fact he had performed only part of the commandment, see verse 3.

16. Stay. Stop! Forbear! Samuel would listen no longer to the language of hypocrisy.—This night. Last night, would be our phrase.

17. Little in thine own sight. The reference is to his own statement in chapter 9: 21.—Head of the tribes of Israel. This was a sharp rebuke, for Saul was in authority and should have restrained the people. Anointed. Saul was only a servant and should have obeyed.

18. Sinners. The Amalekites are called sinners because of the ancient offense against Israel; see Ex. 17:8-15 and Deut. 25:17-19.—Until they be consumed. This must be considered in the light of that day, and we must also keep in mind the low stage of revelation.

19. Fly upon the spoils. Samuel graphically shows that it was greed and not reverence for God that saved the spoils.

20. I have obeyed the voice. Saul's obedience was with a but. Many people are serving Jehovah in the same way today.—And have brought Agag. Saul wished to enrich his own victory in this way quite as much as did the Roman conquerors.

21. To sacrifice unto Jehovah. He justified the conduct of the people with the motive they had in mind when disobeying. This protest still farther convicts him, for it is an absurdity.

22. Hath Jehovah as great delight in burnt-offering and sacrifices as in obeying the voice of Jehovah? The passage, verses 22, 23, is a brief summary of later Jewish theology. Read in this connection: Ps. 50:9; 51:18; Hosea 6:6; Amos 5:21-24: Micah 6:6-8; Isa. 1:11-15; and Jer. 7:22.—To obey is better than sacrifice. This is a parallel expression with the one following. Obedience is more important than observing religious forms.

A King Dethroned by Sin

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

Here is one of the most superb lessons of this year. The teacher should come to this hour with a wonderful keenness and a firm resolve to get results. What a time for decisions!

"UTTERLY."

There is only one attitude to take toward your sins—root them out "utterly." There are certain growths which threaten our bodies that if but a fragment remains will spread again and bring death. This is true of any sin. It is characteristic of that besetting sin of yours; that sin which you have always indulged in because it seemed to be a part of yourself; that sin which seemed so natural for you that to put it away "utterly" was out of the question. Israel always had trouble with unconquered tribes within their borders. "Destroy utterly," that is the word. Is it in your case, pride, laziness, jealousy, envy, theft, lying, stubbornness, lust, ungovernable temper, frivolity, covetousness or gluttony? Every one of us has one or more besetting sins. Study to know thyself. Spot that evil trait. Allow no excuse. Make no allowance. Vanish all softness. That sin has got to go.

BROKEN STATUES.

Did you ever stop to think about the broken statues which adorn our museums of art? Venus de Milo—arms gone; the famous Victory at the head of the stairway in the Louvre—head gone. The Elgin marbles in the British Museum—all broken. Headless, limbless, wingless, sometimes only torsos. How we would love to see the perfect statues! Palmer of Harvard shows us how sin destroys the symmetry of life. We are only part men when we are despoiled by sins.

KILL THE AMALEKITES.

I am not worrying about those ancient enemies of Israel, but I am bothered this Easter day by my own enemies—my sins. I must hunt them to earth. I must not spare one no matter how fair it seems. My sins rob me of strength, of beauty, of freshness, of the joy of living, of self-respect, of sovereign power. Therefore my sins must be utterly destroyed. Utterly. Utterly. Not even Agag may be spared. "Go and utterly destroy these sinners the Amalekites." Unconditional surrender. No quarter. No compromise.

AGAG?

Agag? Yes, the king also. But he was such a fine, fierce fellow. How fine he would look in chains at the banquet! What fun to torment him as a cat does a mouse! How proud one would be to have him on display! That temper of mine. How fine to let it burst out occasionally, blistering and scorching everything in sight. It is as beautiful as the eruption of Vesuvius. That pride of mine. How big it makes me feel at times, how superior to the hoi polloi! That stubbornness of mine. How firm it makes me feel at times, what a marvelous will-power. (What an ass.) That laziness of mine. What a gentleman of leisure am I, what moments to brood over my own worth! (My own incapacity). No, Agag, big and burly as he may be must humbly bow his noble head (?) and basely die like the enemy he really is. That which is sin in another cannot possibly be virtue in me. My neighbor is stingy; I am only prudent! My neighbor is shifty, I am merely clever. My neighbor has a vile mind; I am human. Of all weaknesses, self-pity, self-excuse, is the worst. Walk the chalk line there. Step lively. No side-stepping.

"OBEY."

"To obey is better than sacrifice and to hearken than the fat of rams." The need of modern young people is discipline. We have certain studies in school which we call disciplines. Arithmetic to cultivate accuracy and precision. Languages to cultivate memory. Science to cultivate awareness. Where shall we get moral discipline? That is the crying need of this epoch. That is the task for the church. The Sunday-school and the pulpit must co-operate with the home in developing moral discipline, i. e., obedience.

NOT MECHANICAL.

The watch has to obey, the engine has to keep the rails, the trolley has to keep connected. But obedience is not a mechanical affair. It springs from the heart. We must cause our children to love the right. It is not enough to teach, we must train. Young men and young women must love truth, beauty, justice and mercy. Had Saul loved God more he would have obeyed better. Augustine used to say, "Love God and do as you please." Religion is harmony. There it is in a nutshell. Religion is harmony with God and his laws. Harmony. Get that. Harmony.

REJECTED.

A lost kingship. Failure. Lost. Rejected. Does it seem hard? Well, you see it every day. A young fellow who might have been a king dethroned by his unconquered sins, his perverted loves. What is sadder than an unfrocked priest, a dethroned monarch?

Disciples Table Talk

Offered a College Presidency.

H. E. Van Horn left Des Moines last year for Oklahoma City, and his ministry in the latter city has been as successful as in the Hawkeye state. He has recently been offered the presidency of Phillips University at Enid, Okla. His decision is not yet announced.

Says No Christian Outside the Church.

Ira M. Boswell, pastor at First church, Chattanooga, Tenn., spoke recently on the theme, "Can a Man Be a Christian Without Being a Church Member?" He said: I have been requested to answer the question, 'Can a Man Be a Christian Without Being a Church Member?' It is with pleasure that I address myself to the task this morning. I am sure no one will object to my saying that no one can be a Christian, in the New Testament sense of the term, who is not a believer in Christ. I, therefore, in order to come to close quarters in the discussion, affirm that to be a Christian a believer must be a member of the church, or, to state it in another form, a believer cannot be a Christian without being a member of the church. I take it that all my hearers accept the New Testament as the authoritative word of God. I shall, then, devote my attention to what the New Testament says on the subject. A believer is not a Christian, but has the right to become one. 'Every one, therefore, who shall confess Me before men, him will I confess before My Father who is in heaven. But whosoever shall deny Me before men, him will I deny before My Father who is in heaven. It is clear that no one can confess what he does not believe, and no one, in the meaning of the verses just quoted, can deny Christ who does not believe in Him. Christ can not, or at least will not, deny a Christian. But he will deny the one who believes, but refuses to confess. It follows, then, that one can believe in Christ and not be a Christian."

Union Meeting with Chas. Reign Scoville.

Aurora, Mo., has just gone through union evangelistic services with Chas. Reign Scoville leading. There were 1,500 penitents, and the Disciple church received 400 new members. More class rooms are being fitted up for the Sunday-school and the Men's Bible class is planning to raise a fund for a new pipe organ. Four years ago this church was in debt four thousand dollars. R. S. Robertson is the pastor and he is talking in the most optimistic terms of the prospects of the church.

Must Build for Sunday School.

The growth of the Sunday-school at Keokuk, Ia., has compelled the church to take action looking to a future building on the church lot for the Sunday-school. More land has been bought and the congregation is making ready for the campaign for the building. There have been eleven accessions to the church the past three weeks. This congregation is a living link in foreign missions and Miss Gretchen Garst of Japan represents the church. The pastor recently gave a stereopticon address upon the work in Japan and was heard by an audience crowding the auditorium of the church. Recently Mrs. Elizabeth Ross and her son Emory Ross visited this church and delivered addresses. W. M. Baker is the pastor.

Pastor Says Religion Was Other-Worldly.

J. N. Jessup in a recent sermon in his church at Hopkinsville, Ky., charged that the church had been altogether too much interested in the other world to the neglect of this one. In a sermon called "Religion as an Asset," he said: "Ministers have been charged with living in the clouds and are therefore called sky-pilots. Give us a religion that has its feet on the earth, say some. This criticism might have had some basis of truth twenty-five years ago. Up to that time the emphasis was put upon getting men safely to heaven. The lure of heaven as a place where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest, was loudly proclaimed. Recent years have seen a change of emphasis. Now the church is proclaiming a life; a life here and now; a life of virile manhood; a life with good red corpuscles in its veins. The church today is not so much concerned with getting its members into heaven as it is in getting its members to live Christian lives here on earth, knowing full well that if the life is right heaven will take care of itself."

Disciple Honored at Free Church Council.

The National Free Church Council is the means of union between the non-Conformist Christians of England of various denominations. At the introduction of missionaries, W. R. Hunt, of the Disciple mission of China, was invited to speak by Rev. F. B. Meyer, the president, and he was introduced by Leslie W. Morgan. Mr. Hunt spoke on the relation of the war to mission work and deprecated the influence of the present struggle upon the Christian propaganda of the Orient.

Mr. W. Remfry Hunt, who recently addressed the Free Church Council of England.

Spokane Sunday-schools Organize.

The Sunday-school forces of nine Disciple Sunday-schools in Spokane have organized a city union and elected officers for it. This resulted during a visit of Robert M. Hopkins, national Bible school superintendent, who is at this time touring the coast. There were over two hundred in attendance at the meeting at which the organization was formed.

Send for the State Secretary.

To send for the state secretary was once a sign of trouble in the church, but in these happy days he has other uses than that of arbiter. John R. Golden was called to a banquet of the Men's Bible class at Lovington, Ill., recently. Eighty men were in attendance and there was a very happy evening.

Good Work at Cleveland, O.

O. L. Hull, who is pastor of Glenville church, Cleveland, has issued an annual report full of interesting items. Eighty were added to the membership of the church. Money raised for current expenses, $2,814.78; for the building fund, $412.30; for missions and benevolence, $640.95. The every-member canvass has resulted in fifty-two more pledged givers than the church has ever had before.

Good Report from Fulton, Mo.

The Fulton, Mo., church had a good year in 1914. They raised a total of $6,936.90. Of this amount $1,500 was given to the cause of missions and benevolence. The Sunday-school has an enrollment of 459 and last year they had an average attendance of 300. Nearly two hundred accessions to the church have been received. Most of these came from the Forsythe tabernacle meeting. The present membership is 700. The church has adopted the combined morning service, two hours being used for the Sunday-school, sermon and communion service. William Woods College is located here and the personnel of the students in this institution is said to be very superior this year. The young ladies are planning a pageant for commencement week. M. C. Hutchinson is pastor of the church.

Pastor Withstands the Mob.

At Waxahachie, Tex., a mob of citizens seized a negro and were about to deal with him summarily when they were interrupted by A. C. Parker, Disciple pastor of the city. The negro man was in jail charged with murder and the citizens were greatly excited and enraged. After an hour of pleading, the counsels of prudence and orderliness prevailed, and the community was spared a lasting disgrace. This conspicuous service of the local pastor has greatly enhanced the appreciation which the community has for him.

The Japanese Institute.

The Japanese Institute conducted by the Disciples at Los Angeles is one of the prominent features of their work on the coast. The work is carried on by Mr. Kawai. The Institute has a kindergarten where the Japanese children are given oversight and training. There are classes in dressmaking for the Japanese women, and every person in the Japanese community is offered some opportunity of advancement. A recent visit to the Institute by the ladies of the C. W. B. M. of Wilshire Blvd. church was a very interesting experience on both sides.

Missouri State Convention.

The Missouri State convention will be held this year in the Ozark mountains in the scenes made familiar by Harold Bell Wright's "The Shepherd of the Hills." The city in which the convention will be held is Springfield and the date is June 15-17. The program is described as practical, inspirational and spiritual. There are three churches in Springfield and they will join in being hosts to the convention. It is expected that the meeting will bring a large company of people to Springfield this year.

Start a Missionary Library.

The C. W. B. M. auxiliary of Centralia, Mo., where Chas. H. Swift is pastor, has felt the need of a missionary library. The members are asking various ones of the congregation for donations of fifty cents each with which to purchase books.

Norwood (O.) Church Has Four Workers.

Norwood church, Cincinnati, has recently added Mrs. E. Coyner to the staff of paid workers of the church, which now makes a total of four. Mrs. Coyner will be given charge of the section of the parish north of the B. & O. tracks. It is no wonder we hear such stories of activity in this church. The Sunday-school is trying for an attendance of a thousand.

Second Efficiency Congress.

The second annual Efficiency Congress of the churches in Kosciusko county, Ind., was held in Milford, March 13 and 14. Garry L. Cook, state superintendent of Sunday-schools, was present and took a prominent part in the discussions. A McLean, president of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, was also present and made a number of addresses on foreign missionary work.

High School Boys and Girls Want Bible.

Since the Indiana schools permit credit for high school students studying the Bible, under certain conditions, twenty-five of those attending Downey Avenue church, Indianapolis, have signed for a course and they will be taught by Mrs. Cook of that church. It is said there is about an equal number of boys and girls in the class.

Lexington, Mo., Church Prints Report.

Lexington, Mo., church has printed the annual report of the congregation for 1914. Among the interesting items is the statement that the net total receipts were $4,921 and that the total given to missions was $521. The present membership of the church is 375.

Heads Committee to Fight Vice.

Before the election in which Mayor Buschemmeyer was elected at Louisville, each candidate promised, if elected, to appoint a commission to investigate the vice situation in Louisville. The commission has been named by the mayor, with a Catholic, a Protestant, a business man and the chief of police on the commission. E. L. Powell is chairman. Two thousand dollars has been appropriated to defray expenses and a complete survey will be made of the city with reference to the social evil. The commission will also investigate the alliance between this vice and the other vices of the city.

A Village Reclaimed.

Hiram N. VanVoorhis, pastor at Oxford, Ind., went to a nearby village called Winthrop and held a series of evangelistic meetings recently. His congregation had previously bought at public auction an abandoned Methodist building in the community. The village had proved an impossible one for religious leaders previously, but the evangelistic meetings resulted in the organization of a church of seventy-nine members. For the first time in its history, the community is to have a located preacher. A parsonage will be erected right away, and the man who locates with the church will preach for another nearby congregation. The newly selected pastor is Roy E. Saylor, a recent graduate of Hiram College.

Church Has Numerous Accessions.

A hundred and fifteen accessions to the church in eight months is a good record for a pastor. This has been achieved by John A. Tabor of Third Avenue church, Dallas, Tex. The Ladies' Aid Society has increased from 12 members to 100. The building has been repainted and repaired. There is every evidence of a real revival in the church.

Wins Peace Oratorical Contest.

An intercollegiate oratorical contest has been held in the east recently, and among the contestants was Lee H. Sadler, a senior of Atlanta Christian College, of Wilson, N. C. So excellent was his production that he was given the prize.

Pastor Becomes a Socialist Lecturer.

E. H. H. Gates has closed his ministry at La Junta, Cal., and will henceforth devote his time to promoting the interests of socialism, in which task he has proven himself an effective campaigner.

A. W. Fortune Evangelizes.

A. W. Fortune is one of the most popular of the teachers of the College of the Bible at Lexington, Ky. He is now engaged in holding evangelistic meetings at Broadway church of his own city. E. A. Osborne, who is pastor at Rome, Ga., is leading the music.

Ben Franklin Club Proud of Church Paper.

The Ben Franklin Club of Indianapolis has been holding an exhibit of fine printing, and the Thomas and Evans firm of linotypers have exhibited the Christian Visitor, the neighborhood paper published by Clay Trusty of Seventh church, as an example of good work. One of the mottoes prominent in the exhibition was "Swat the Lie!"

Surprise Preacher on Wedding Anniversary.

When James N. Thomas went to board meeting on a recent evening, he was thinking of church business, but he found the church filled to help him and Mrs. Thomas celebrate his sixteenth wedding anniversary. They had been married in the bygone years at Girard, Ill., and they recently came to Ottawa, Kans., to make their home.

Aged Disciple is Ill.

O. S. Barker is a pioneer Disciple living at La Grange, Mo., and is well on in the eighties. He remembers well sitting under the preaching of John Smith and Ben Franklin in the early days. He is quite ill at the present time, with no very favorable prognosis for his recovery.

Professor Athearn at Buffalo.

Many of the workers in the churches along the Niagara frontier have been taking advantage during the past week of the splendid sessions of the Religious Education Convention on "The Rights of the Child." The work presented was of a practical nature, and suited to the needs of the up-to-date school. Few Disciples took advantage of this convention.

The leading light of the convention was Prof. Athearn of Drake. His presentations were always well attended and eagerly sought. He spoke at a luncheon before fifteen of the ministers of the locality on the subject, "The Next Step in the Development of Our Sunday-school Lessons." One evening, also, he addressed about 50 workers of Richmond Ave. church, setting up a practical program for the efficient use of their excellent equipment. The effects of the revival held last month are still in evidence, there being three accessions Sunday, two by confession.

Speaks on Russian Religion

At the Chicago Ministers' meeting, Mar. 8, Mr. Herbert Hines, spoke on his impressions of Russia. Mr. Hines is a native of Boston and a graduate of Harvard. Two years ago, he visited Russia for special studies.

I. S. Prokhanoff, leader of the Evangelical Christians in Russia.

The address was significant, especially in its analysis of the religious situation in Russia, and the description of the relationship of the Baptists in Russia to the Evangelical Christians or Disciples, headed by Mr. Prokhanoff.

The priests of Russia have given up their teaching and preaching functions and conduct the ritual in the old Slavonic language, which is no longer intelligible to the people. The services are three hours long.

The present organization of the Russian church was fixed by Peter the Great. At that time the Russian church lost its independence, and ever since has been ruled by a "holy synod" with a layman at its head.

Every one in Russia is required by the state to take communion once a year and records are kept so the civil authorities may know who the delinquents are. Those excused are members of permitted sects in Russia.

There is religious liberty in Russia in the sense that all religions are permitted but no one is allowed to solicit a member of the Russian church to leave his communion. Thus there is liberty to worship but not to evangelize.

A Fruitful Field for Sects.

The conservatism of the Russian church, and its failures to instruct its people, make Russia a fruitful field for sects and there are many of them. Some are conservative, as the Raskolniks. Others are consciously affiliated with the evangelical movement. Most of the Protestants of the country are in the south and southeast sections. These Protestants for a time were called Stundists, from the German "stunde," an hour, probably referring to the prayer hours established by early German Baptists. Since the Baptists have become a permitted sect in Russia, nearly all the Stundists have become allied with them for political reasons. On this account large Baptist churches are often discovered that were hitherto unknown to the authorities of the denomination, a church with 1,200 members having been found recently on the Caspian sea. The non-Conformist movements in Russia are not allowed to organize their scattered congregations, so no one knows how many Russians belong to the Protestant movements. It is stated by the Baptist leaders that they have knowledge of 250,000 Baptists in the land of the Czar.

The denominational bond is very dear to Russian Baptists, and they practice the holy kiss. When Mr. Hines proclaimed himself a Baptist at Kief, he was hardly prepared for what happened, a number of the sisters, young and old, offering him the Scriptural salute.

Prokhanoff Once a Baptist.

In Petrograd, Mr. Fetler is the great Baptist leader and in his Doma Evangelica he has four thousand members. Mr. Simons is the Methodist leader in the capital city, but so far his work has been confined entirely to evangelizing the Finns and Letts, on account of difficulty with the government. Mr. Simons found the Russians already practicing immersion, and has had difficulty in promoting another practice of baptism.

Mr. Prokhanoff was once a Baptist, but his movement is now entirely separate from the Baptist movement. Mr. Hines describes the difference as due to a different attitude on the subject of Christian union. Mr. Prokhanoff organized the Sectants—non-Conformists—of Russia into a sort of federation into which the Baptists refused to come because certain sects, such as the Molokani who do not practice any kind of baptism, were allowed fellowship.

Mr. Hines expressed solicitude that the Disciples form a firm connection with this movement, as there has been some little danger of the Plymouth Brethren of England getting relations with it, and this would mean the loss of any regular ministry in the Evangelical Christian churches. He said the Baptist leaders had not given up hope of again bringing Mr. Prokhanoff back into the Baptist fellowship, but in his own judgment, this was a futile hope.

The Nova Vremya, a prominent paper of Petrograd, reviewing the history of crime in Russia, says it is a curious fact that the non-Conformists are not to be found among those who are hailed before the police courts, and draws some very interesting conclusions from this undisputed fact. Moral teaching in Russia is found only in the Protestant churches, Mr. Hines asserted.

Russia's Missionary Importance.

John R. Mott puts Russia second only to Japan in missionary importance. He has tried to get a Bible training school started in Petrograd, but has met difficulties from the government.

Some personal items with regard to Mr. Prokhanoff will be found of interest. He is a graduate engineer and works at his profesion continually. He is thus enabled to nate his time to the religious movement without compensation of any sort. He has beeu in America on engineering commissions from the Russian government and frequently visits England. Besides his engineering equipment, he has been trained in the Spurgeon school in London, for religious work.

Men and Millions Leaders in Chicago

The Men and Millions team is in Chicago and has become the center of interest in all the churches. The coming of these leaders has been heralded for some time and the congregations have made arrangements to give them the right of way.

First came John R. Golden, state secretary of Illinois, who is a kind of advance man. He interviewed the preachers, and in co-operation with W. G. Winn, secretary of the Chicago Christian Missionary Society, made the schedule for the team in the main. He also secured hotel accommodations, arranging quarters for the team at the New Morrison during their Chicago stay.

Planning the Campaign.

The first meeting of the team with Chicago leaders was held in the tea room of the great Marshall Field store, March 13, at 12:30. The team was met by the pastors and a group of Chicago laymen, so that a company of about fifty people came together. At this meeting, a number of the team made brief speeches, giving a sample of the kind of thing that would be presented at the larger meetings. Here the pastors received the information about the kind of co-operation that is to be expected of them. Three meetings are to be held in every church wherever possible, the first of these being a public service on Sunday. Four men are to be sent to each church and they will deliver ten and fifteen minute addresses on phases of the movement. This is to be followed by a "Life" meeting some evening the following week at which all the young people of the church and its auxiliary organizations are gathered at a luncheon and the men on the team designated for that purpose talk to the young people about a life vocation and point the way to specific Christian work. R. H. Miller has general charge of the life meetings. A meeting with the official board and the men of the church follows at which the detailed plans and purposes of the every-member canvass are expounded. Just as the young people are not asked to volunteer for the mission field, though they often do, so the official board is not stampeded into the every-member canvass, though nearly every church sees the reasonableness of this method of procedure. This completes the round of meetings in the local church.

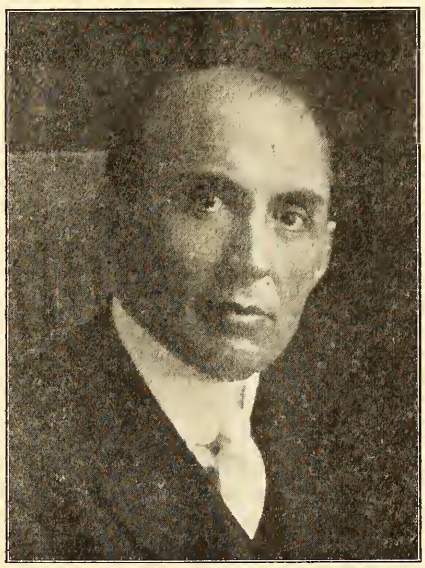
No public pledges are taken for any sum of money, though it is sometimes offered. The financial methods of the campaign involve quiet personal work. No one may give less than five hundred dollars, a hundred dollars a year for five years. The men and women able to give this amount in any given church are visited by the personal workers and to each of them is presented the matter of Christian stewardship. It is by such means that astounding results have been secured. The team in Chicago is making no announcement with regard to the amount of money raised to date. Unauthorized rumors place the amount at one and a half millions, besides the million promised by R. A. Long on condition that the whole amount be raised.

The First Joint Meeting.

On the afternoon of March 14, a meeting of members of all the Chicago churches was held in the First M. E. building in the "loop" and was largely attended. At this meeting every member of the team spoke, and so brief were these burning messages that only seventy-five minutes was required to hear from thirteen men. Abram E. Cory responded with a more extended address at the close of the symposium.

The team gives an impression of tremendous intensity, not by means of any overwrought emotional periods, but by having specialists condense the desires of a lifetime into a statement requiring but a few minutes. There is incident and specific example in the speeches, but only such materials as will put forward enterprizes that are empire-like in the sweep of their vision. Facts are piled high, but they are human facts, and not collections of statisties. A simple story often helps to characterize a situation in an entire continent.

Out of the thirteen men in Chicago on March 14, there were organized three teams which reached six churches during the day, besides attending the central rally at the First M. E. church. Team number one was composed of Abram E. Cory, secretary of the Men and Millions Movement; Emory Ross, missionary to Liberia; Miner Lee Bates, president of Hiram college; and Frederick W. Burnham, secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society. Team number two was composed of R. H. Miller, secretary of the Men and Millions Movement; Clifford S. Weaver, returned missionary from Japan; H. J. Derthick, city worker in Indianapolis under the C. W. B. M.; W. R. Warren, secretary of the Board of Ministerial Relief, and Mr. Teachout, a young business man of Cleveland. Team number three was composed of G. W. Muckley, secretary of the Church Extension Society; John R. Golden, secretary of the Illinois Christian Missionary Society; Dr. Royal J. Dye, returned missionary from the Congo, and H. O. Pritchard, president of Eureka College. These teams were stationed as follows: In the morning, team number one was at Sheffield avenue church and in the evening at Douglas Park church. Team number two was at Jackson Boulevard church in the morning, and at Irving Park in the evening. Team number three was at Evanston in the morning, and at Austin at night. The only deviation from this schedule was that at night, Mr. Burnham exchanging places with Mr. Golden, and Mr. Cory with Mr. Miller.



A. E. Cory, Men and Millions Secretary

Next Sunday's Program.

It is too early to announce what specific men will appear in any given church next Sunday, but at the morning service the team will reach Hyde Park, Memorial and Englewood churches, and in the evening Ashland Avenue, Chicago Heights and West Pullman.

The individuals that compose the Men and Millions Team are all men of outstanding ability, but together they form a unit of unrivaled power. Unsuspected richness is discovered in many men who have spent years upon a routine task. One secretary joked another that if the Men and Millions team has done nothing else, it has made Secretary X. get up a new speech! He has not only gotten up a new speech but he has gotten a new grasp upon the whole task of the kingdom.

The place of prayer in the Movement is one of the prominent features, but there is an anxious effort continually to distinguish between true prayer and a lazy pietism that would wait for divine power to accomplish things. These men pray, but they pray that they may know how to work. They seem continually anxious to get away from anything that may sound like mere cant phrase. The Movement is significant as one of the expressions of the rising spiritual life among the Disciples.

Great emphasis is placed also upon life. The leader says that if he were renaming the Movement he would eliminate any word that was suggestive of money. He regards as the highest contribution the Movement has to make to the church the note of consecration of life talents everywhere to the service of Jesus Christ. It is not only stewardship of money that the Movement teaches, but stewardship of spiritual powers.

The Movement is deeply significant of a growing unity among Disciple leaders. While organs of obscurantism are fulminating against the organized interests, these interests which have had any close fellowship before are drawn together with an esprit de corps that is astonishing. Foreign missionaries pleading for the slums of American cities, and the Church Extension secretary pleading the emergency of the situation at Nantungchow, is an accomplishment that cannot help but bring lasting results in the church.

Final Effects of the Movement.

The effect of the Movement upon the whole Christian world, if it succeeds, will be lasting and wonderful. It is not only that Disciples will be held in new esteem. That is one of the smaller blessings. The great religious bodies of the world will be encouraged to new tasks and inspired to new achivements, greater doubtless than this movement is among the Disciples.

It may seem a far cry, but the relation of the Movement to Christian union may be its greatest contribution. Not only is it unifying all the constructive forces of the Disciples and removing any feeling of competition from them, but it is bringing the Disciples into a new relation with all Christian forces. When the campaign is over, the Disciples' great mission will be greatly put forward.

IN AND AROUND CHICAGO.

There will be a union meeting of all Chicago ministers at the auditorium of the Central Y. M. C. A., Monday, March 29.

Lenten activites in Evanston church include the reading of the New Testament through by thirty or forty people, the conducting of catechetical classes, in which the pastor gives Christian instruction to a number of children and young people, and the conducting of special services each evening throughout Holy Week.

Austin Hunter will hold special Lenten services in his church the week before Easter, preaching every night. He is an enthusiastic supporter of the movement to bring "Billy" Sunday to the west side and reports a union meeting on March 19 in the Third Presbyterian church, at which time this project was further considered.

Asa McDaniel preached at Monroe street church, on March 14 to appreciative audiences.

C. G. Kindred, of Englewood church, is released two weeks each year to hold a series of meetings for a small church as a missionary service. He is now holding services at Ladysmith, Wis.

Lisbon, O., Pastor Is Married.

G. L. Ferguson, of Lisbon, O., went away on a little trip the other day and when he came home he was a married man. The Silver Circle in his church rose to the occasion and immediately arranged for a reception in the church parlors.

Will Get Large Pipe Organ.

Central church, of Spokane, Wash, has let a contract to the N. P. Moller Pipe Organ Company, of Hagerstown, Md., for a six thousand dollar organ. The placing of the organ requires some radical changes in the building which will be taken care of immediately. It is expected that a month hence the organ will be in use.

Veteran Preacher Lectures.

J. B. Briney, veteran debater, and foe of all higher critics, is lecturing these days at Milligan College, and preaching at the local church at Johnson City, Tenn. He is now in his seventy-sixth year but is in good health.

Present a Play in Church.

The young ladies at Advance, Ind., church recently presented a play called "Cornelia." There were nineteen characters in the production. The musical part of the program was very pleasing.

Young Missionary Praises Language School.

E. P. Gish, a Eureka College graduate, went out to China last fall and his friends have received a letter from him describing his experiences. He praises the language school recently established for missionaries at Nanking. Mr. Gish writes: "I feel that this general account would not be complete if I failed to say a word about the 'Language School,' which is one department of the university. I am attending the school now trying to learn how to write those characters that always have looked to me like so many chicken tracks. I have no adequate words to express my appreciation of the advantages offered by this school. The language is not easy even at the best, especially to some of us that have had our heads full of more practical things than arbitrary marks for some years, but the idea of having to get on to it the best way you were able, with no one to help you out but a Chinese teacher whose knowledge of pedagogy is nil—the mere thought of it, I say, makes me faint. Yet that is precisely what the pioneers and all older missionaries in the field have had to do. When I contemplate what this means my respect for those men grows by leaps and bounds. At present, after less than three months' study we are able to write almost 300 characters and make known to the Chinese in their own tongue some of the simpler wants of life. Even this seems to us very slow, but the older missionaries keep us wonderfully encouraged for our task by the 'awful' stories they tell us of their unguided efforts to learn to speak."

Church To Be Enlarged.

Thorntown, Ind., has secured property adjoining the church building, and will enlarge the edifice there by a substantial addition. Forty feet more of land was secured to make this change possible.

Church Has Old-Time Spelling Bee.

Central church, Huntington, Ind., held an old-time spelling bee recently at which the members "spelled down." After an extended contest the three best spellers all proved to be women.

Says Church Should Do Healing Work.

At Hillside church, Indianapolis, recently Charles M. Fillmore spoke on "When a Christian Is Sick, What Shall He Do? Shall He Depend on Faith and Prayer or Consult a Doctor?" He showed that Jesus and the apostles healed the bodies of men as well as dealt with their souls and said no church could claim to preach the full gospel of Jesus if it was indifferent to the physical welfare of humanity. Because churches have greatly neglected this side of Christian work, Christian Science has drawn away multitudes who might have remained in the church if it had done its full duty, he said. He pointed to the great hospital work done by the Catholics and said it was vain for Protestants to denounce that organization so long as it was outdoing them in such charitable and philanthropic work. More than a year ago a free clinic for the poor was established at Hillside church, which is still conducted every Friday. More than two hundred patients have been treated there without charge.

Dr. Powell Praises the Jew.

Dr. E. L. Powell, of First church, Louisville, gave his month-end sermon recently on "Justice for the Jew." This sermon each month is published in the Courier-Journal, a leading daily of that city. Dr. Powell introduced the sermon by speaking of the Leo Frank case in Atlanta. He said: "Be it said to the everlasting credit of America that there has never been one statute in any of its codes discriminating against the Jew, but, on the contrary, there has been always given the widest welcome and the most splendid appreciation of the influence and culture and power of our Jewish fellow-citizens. Possibly we have remembered that if it had not been for a Jew it is altogether probable that Columbus would never have sailed the seas; perhaps we have remembered that the first of that immortal company which sailed with Columbus against the seas—the first of that company who planted his foot on American soil was a Jew. While other Christian nations have put upon their statute books proscriptive and restrictive laws, there has been on the part of America no deviation from the fundamental principles of the Declaration of Independence that all men before God, and in the presence of the law, are created free and equal, and that there are certain inalienable rights which have never been conferred by government, and with which government cannot, therefore, interfere: The right to life and to liberty and to the pursuit of happiness.

Annual Report from Philadelphia, Third.

Third church of Philadelphia has issued its annual report. The total accessions to the church were 131, and there was a net gain of 120. The present enrollment of the Sunday-school is 795. The total disbursements of the church were $7,476.60. Of this $815.37 went for missions and benevolence. T. E. Winter has recently become the pastor of this church and the best of reports are coming from his ministry. There have been thirty accessions since January 1.

Drake University Honors Student Evangelists

For several years President Bell has given a banquet to the ministerial students of Drake university who use their Christmas vacation to hold evangelistic meetings. This year the banquet was held on the evening of March 3, in the Chamber of Commerce rooms in the Shops building, at Des Moines. There were twenty-six banqueters and the president insured long memories to the preachers by having the course of pie and ice cream repeated.

Short talks were made by President Bell and Dean Sherman Kirk, and these were followed by brief reports from the men regarding meetings held. Twenty-four men held meetings with 451 accessions.

Most of the meetings were held where large results were out of the question; they were only a week or ten days long, and there was the distraction of the holiday season everywhere, but every man reported additions from his meetings. Almost all of the meetings were held in the churches for which the students preach, and for several of them it was the first meeting they had ever held. In addition to these direct results of their work, several of the men had other evangelists conducting meetings for them either immediately before or continuing their own meetings, and through this means 84 more additions were made. The total number of additions through the meetings directed by student preachers was 533.

Besides the number of converts secured the reports show profitable results of other kinds: a church reorganized and a young people's society formed, finances insured in several churches for the coming year, a new interest in the standard hymns in preference to cheap church music. Two or three of the men are ready for new pastorates because their churches are now able to support a located pastor. Converts are received every week by the students at their preaching points and it is difficult to distinguish the number due definitely to holiday meetings from those who were received at regular services at that time.

The holiday meetings are one of the features of the ministerial course in Drake university. The men are expected to go out, considerable emphasis is placed upon the matter as the time approaches, and the annual banquet when the evangelists return with their reports is one of the happiest events of the year. Many of those present this month had been present on former occasions, the oldest in point of service reporting that this was his fifth evangelistic banquet.

Convention Hall at Los Angeles

It will interest every reader of The Christian Century to know something of the preparations that are being made for the reception of the General Convention, which will meet in Los Angeles on July 18 to 25, in the new Bible Institute Auditorium, and no other feature is of equal importance with that of the convention hall. With memories of some bygone discomforts, every delegate will hail with delight the prospects of a good auditorium.

Among the great enterprises developed in Los Angeles during the past year is the magnificent new structure of the Bible Institute, built and equipped at an outlay of $1,500,000.

This vast fireproof structure of reinforced concrete, in its entirety, upwards of 650 rooms, and the enormity of its proportions dwarfs every other building in this wonderful, modern, progressive city.

The two dormitories, forming the north and south portions of the structure, are thirteen stories in height; the dome of the great auditorium reaches to the height of ten stories. The auditorium seats 4,200 persons.

The Bible school is in full operation, though work in still in progress on the main auditorium. It is scheduled to be completed for the official opening on April 4, and the promise is that as an assembly place for great religious conventions, the Institute will have few equals in America.

This auditorium, linking together the two thirteen story dormitories, one for men and one for women, is a most imposing feature. The entrance is one of massive dignity. Seven graceful arches at the street line, reaching to the height of three stories of the structure, give access to the vestibule, and five entrances lead into a magnificent foyer 112 feet in length, 84 feet in width, and having a 30 ft. ceiling. Three impressive arches of great height connect the foyer and the auditorium, and at the extremes of the foyer two yet taller arches communicate with long cloisters which lead to the platform without attracting attention from the audience. The two great balconies have stairways leading directly to the street, two of them through the vestibule.

A more ideal plan for expediting the movement of great throngs of people could not be conceived. The heating and ventilating system is the result of the most recent scientific investigation, and the architects give assurance that the acoustics will be as near perfection as it is possible to approach.

Commodious and convenient rooms will afford the very best facilities and assure comfort to the executives and working committees of any great body that may there assemble. In this connection, not to be despised, is the kitchen and dining-room equipment, capable of serving over 600 persons at a single sitting.

In the school, the evangelist, R. A. Torrey, is dean. His co-workers are T. C. Horton (superintendent), J. H. Hunter, J. H. Sammis and others. S. M. B.

"Rum Rule" Considered in Chicago Churches.

Mr. E. J. Davis, a member of the Englewood Christian Church, is the superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Chicago. Two weeks ago he addressed the "Current Events Conference" at Memorial Church on "Rum Rule at Springfield." The address and the conference that followed were full of information and suggestion for the enemies of the saloon.

Five Hundred Calls in a Month.

First church, Frankfort, Ky., of which Roger T. Nooe is minister, has set the goal for five hundred calls by the members during the month of March. These calls are to prepare for special services in April. The calls will be made on shut-ins, unidentified Disciples, and on members of the church who have been irregular in attendance.

Retiring Pastor Given a Tribute.

Chas. A. Stevens has closed his work at Edinburg, Ill., and on his last Sunday, Feb. 28, the Methodist and Reformed churches surprised him by dismissing and going to his church in a body. He is beginning some special meetings in Richland country, Wisconsin.

Hiram Evangelistic Meetings.

The evangelistic meetings held at Hiram, O., recently continue to bear fruit. Eight more responded to the gospel invitation at a recent prayer-meeting, this making a total of 39 since the movement began.

Disciple 105 Years Old.

Ira Howland of Hutchinson, Kans., was 105 years old on Washington's birthday, and he claims to have held membership with the Disciples for seventy-five years. He was a native of Virginia and served in two wars, the Mexican and the Civil wars, going through both wars without a scratch. If Abraham Lincoln were living he would be only one year older than Mr. Howland. Mr. Howland is an ardent democrat, but says Lincoln was a good man even if he was a Republican. K. F. Nance, his pastor, has promised to call around the first bright Sunday with his auto and take the centenarian to church, as in the days of his strength he was a most regular attendant.

Kindergarten a Feature.

The Sunday-school of First church, Cedar Rapids, Ia., has made a feature of the kindergarten department. The work has been so well done that the department has in a short time grown from twenty-five children to a hundred and twenty. Much mid-week work is done in behalf of the children to hold their interest.

New School In Southern California.

There has been talk for a long time about founding a school for the training of ministers in southern California, but active steps are now being taken. A committee presented a report to the Los Angeles ministers on February 15, which will now receive consideration by the College Commission of Southern California and the Joint Board of Christian Churches of Los Angeles. The present idea is to found a training school instead of a regular divinity school.

Disciple to Lecture at Yale.

J. C. Archer, who is director of religious education in South Congregational church at Brockton, Mass., but who has been a lifelong Disciple, has been invited to deliver lectures at the School of Religion of Yale University next year. Mr. Archer has a degree from the institution and his call to lecture is a compliment to him which is well deserved. The lectures will deal with India and the Far East.

Pleads for Hell Doctrine.

James Small at a recent service in Hyde Park church, Kansas City, complained of the decline of hell-fire preaching in the modern pulpit. He had taken for his topic, "Is Hell a Visionary Place?" "It has been stated that hell is not consistent with the goodness of God," Mr. Small said. "If the will of the state is carried out in the building of jails and penitentiaries, why should it seem incredible that God should provide a place of punishment? God's will is baffled here, why might it not be baffled beyond the grave? God would prevent murders and all other evils on earth if the people would accept faith in Him. Some refuse and probably will refuse beyond the grave." Mr. Small arraigned ministers of the gospel who have taken up preaching the doctrine of no hell. "Such ministers," he said, "should not retard the efforts being made by others to save persons here on earth."

Preacher's Son Preaches.

Preachers' sons do preach frequently, in spite of widespread impressions to the contrary. Paul H. Stevenson, son of Marion Stevenson, a writer of Sunday-school literature in St. Louis who is also a preacher, is now ministering regularly to the Maplewood church, St. Louis, while he attends medical college, in preparation for larger Christian work.

Frankfort, Ky., to Observe Holy Week.

Roger T. Nooe, pastor of First church, Frankfort, Ky., was recently elected as president of the local ministers' association and one of his first duties will be to arrange for union services in his city celebrating Holy Week, just preceding Easter.

Dedicate at Lowell, Ind.

Lowell, Ind., church dedicated a remodeled building Feb. 28. C. W. Cauble, the state secretary, was there and though only five thousand dollars was needed, $6,524 was secured. The building was crowded at every service all day long. S. O. Landis is the pastor. He had prepared for the day for some weeks in advance, visiting country schoolhouses and preaching, and inviting the country people to the dedication.

Finds Lesson Comments Helpful.

J. C. McArthur, of Salina, Kans., has been examining Sunday-school lesson treatments and he finds that those written by John Ray Ewers, and printed each week in The Christian Century and The Conquest the best for his purpose. He marvels at the amount of help given in small space.

Build a Parsonage.

It is easier to keep a minister when the church has a good parsonage, so the congregation at Lampasas, Tex., decided to promote length of pastorates in that city by erecting a $2,500 parsonage for the use of the minister, D. R. Hardison.

A New Church for Houston, Tex.

Although there are already three churches in Houston, Tex., which is a city of eighty thousand people, O. M. Pennock, city missionary in that city, will organize a new church soon. It will be located in the eastern part of the city and will be known as the East Side church. The church has grown out of a Sunday-school organized several years ago in that section.

Union Meeting Is Followed Up.

Rev. John S. Hamilton held union meetings in Coshocton, O., and the net results of the meetings were 1,470 penitents. It is said that both a Y. M. C. A. and a Y. W. C. A. will result from the meetings. The Disciple church has received 130 new members. J. A. Canby, of Uhrichsville, assisted the church in a ten day follow-up series of meetings which were very helpful. The every-member canvass will be made in this church at an early date.

Young Women Active In Missions.

The C. W. B. M. auxiliary of Norwood church, Cincinnati, is extending mission study among the girls and young women of their congregation. A Circle has been in existence for some time which gives interesting mission programs. An organization, new to the Disciples, has been formed with a still younger group of girls called the Triangle Club. It is made up of the Intermediate girls of the Sunday-school. This younger group has direction from the auxiliary and holds some very interesting meetings.

A Good Annual Report.

The fiscal year of Barberton, O., church, ends on February 28, and this church recently issued its annual report. The number of sermons preached was 148; the special addresses were 10; pastoral visits amounted to 1,800; the pastor conducted 5 funerals and performed 6 wedding ceremonies; the accessions to the church were 126; the net gain in membership was 120. The congregation is so pleased with these results that they have raised the pastor's salary two hundred dollars. A significant feature of the year's work has been the organization of a brotherhood of over 200 men.

Talks On Standard Hymns.

W. E. M. Hackleman is busy in the work of singing evangelist and a part of his service in each congregation where he goes now is to illustrate the standard hymns and tell the people the story of their origin, with the idea of promoting a taste for better music among Disciple churches. He has been engaged to lead the music this year in the state conventions in Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and other states. In the evangelistic meetings at Valparaiso, Ind., he organized and drilled a chorus to sing the cantata, "King in Zion," the libretto of which was written by Jessie Brown Pounds, and the music composed by Dr. J. B. Herbert.

Social Service Bulletin Appears.

The Commission on Social Service and the Rural Church maintained by the American Missionary Society, has issued the first number of a bi-monthly bulletin which will appear regularly hereafter. This commission is composed of J. H. Mohorter, F. E. Lumley, H. H. Peters, O. F. Jordan, and A. W. Taylor, the last named man being secretary of the commission and the first, president. Each bulletin will have one complete article on some specific problem that comes within the province of the commission. Future numbers of the bulletin will contain articles by each member of the commission. Dr. Lumley will write for the next issue on "The Spirit of Social Service." The following issue will contain a work of research by O. F. Jordan on "The Russian Immigrant in America."

Concerning American Missions

J. B. Holmes, A. C. M. S. representative at Galveston, Tex., is bringing order out of chaos in that important Gulf city. A healthy growth is in evidence and the Sunday-school of eighty-five crowds the little building. A new building on a new location is needed.

Frank L. Van Voorhis, for five years superintendent of missions in Wisconsin, has recently resigned and is now located as minister at Billings, Mont. Mr. Van Voorhis' faithful ministry as pastor-at-large in an important state has accomplished much constructive work. Mr. Clark W. Cummings has recently removed from Illinois to Janesville, Wis., where he becomes the Living Link Missionary of the Beatrice, Neb., church under the American Society.

J. B. Pickel, for two years the representative at Lethbridge, an important city in Alberta, has recently resigned.

The hard times make it necessary for the Home board to extend somewhat a policy of conservation. They have arranged in Alabama for the work of the state secretary to be conducted largely from the office and have located S. P. Spiegel with the church at Mobile. He reports splendid audiences and a renewed interest in the work at Mobile and the conditions in the state as developing favorably.

S. L. Jackson, missionary at Daytona, Fla., reports that the new building is nearing completion.

The superintendent in Michigan, J. Frank Green, has been located at Owosso, from which place he will continue to look after the local church and through the week give considerable attention to the state work. Under the State Board churches are being developed at the important centers of Battle Creek, Lansing and Flint.

Grant K. Lewis.

Would Abolish Elders and Deacons.

Frank Waller Allen is securing opinions from leading citizens in Springfield, Ill., about the church and one of these citizens would like to abolish elders and deacons. The excerpt from Mr. Allen's sermon published last week failed to show that Mr. Allen was quoting this citizen instead of expressing his own opinion.

Building a New Church.

Pico Heights congregation, Los Angeles, is building a new edifice. It has been determined that this shall not interfere with the church's missionary service this year. The new building will double the capacity for church work, so far as material equipment goes.

Praises the Newspapers.

B. S. Ferrall, speaking in Central church, Buffalo, recently estimated the religious value of the daily newspaper. He said: "There is scarcely a reform movement that has not been started or fostered by some newspaper. It is also becoming more and more an evangelizing agency. Our best dailies are giving increasing space to church news, religious conventions, peace conferences, evangelistic campaigns and religious educational conferences. The Saturday issues present entire pages dedicated to the interests of the church, while the Monday papers report many pulpit utterances of the Lord's day. The space freely given to such noted evangelists as Sunday, Biederwolf, Scoville and Chapman could not be bought by the average business firms of our city, so great an amount does it represent. Once or twice a week the pulpit reaches a few score or hundreds with its message, while the newspaper is the daily preacher to millions seven days in the week, none being too poor to have access to its columns."

Scoville Holds Successful Union Meeting.

The Scoville Union meetings in Akron, O., are proving successful. There have been a total of 4,667 penitents during the twenty-five days and on March 14 there were 560 in the one day alone. There are twelve members of the team. The special meetings will close on March 28 and Mr. Scoville and his party will go to Clinton, Ia. Mrs. Scoville has been very successful in her work for girls and women.

Holds Theater Meetings.

E. W. Allen, pastor at Auburn, N. Y., has rented the local theater and preaches to great crowds every Sunday night. The great auditorium is filled each week. He has received 44 into the church since the first of the year.

California Pastor Dies.

Grant Overholtzer, pastor at Gilroy, Cal., died recently. He had been at Gilroy only a year but was already greatly beloved in the community and had built up the church. He was a California man by birth and when he decided to preach, he went to Tennessee and attended the Johnson Bible College. He has been pastor at Winters, Saratoga and Gilroy, all in California.

Z. T. Sweeney Now Rural Parson.

Z. T. Sweeney, who was until recently pastor of Lenox Avenue church, New York City, has returned to his home at Columbus, Ind., and he has been called by two rural congregations to preach for them until they can secure a located minister. These congregations are Elizabethtown and New Hope.

PENSIONS OF AGED MINISTERS CUT.

In February the receipts for Ministerial Relief took an upward turn again and showed an increase of over $800 above February, 1914. But the total for the five months to date is still $3,740 short of the same period last year and the Board felt compelled to make a reduction of 20 per cent in March payments.

This means that those who have been receiving $30 get $24, that $12 goes where $15 went before and $8 instead of $10. The actual suffering this will entail among our veterans is beyond computation. It is all the deeper blot on our honor since not one of these heroes has uttered a word of complaint on receipt of the reduced allowance!

There were 437 churches, 151 individuals and 109 Bible schools whose prompt remittances have made it possible to pay any pensions at all this year. Other payments will come from many of these and from as many more whose loyalty last year is a pledge that they will still be true to their fathers in the faith. Seven new names have just been added to the pension roll, making it number one hundred twenty-two.

W. R. Warren,
Sec'y, Board of Ministerial Relief.

Chicago Sunday Schools in Greatest Meeting

Over two hundred of the Sunday-school leaders of the Chicago churches gathered at Jackson Boulevard church on the evening of March 8, for a dinner and a program of speeches and conferences. A large wall chart showed what schools had made the largest gains over their February average last year. The colored Sunday-school on Armour avenue led the whole list, while Monroe street held second place and Austin was third. Only four schools in the whole list showed a loss this year over last, though last year conditions were supposed to be improved on account of the "Go-to-Church Sunday" movement.

O. A. Rosboro, president of the Sunday-school organization, was toastmaster for the evening and he introduced Clarence L. Depew, the state superintedent of Bible school work. Mr. Depew announced that more than two-thirds of the divinity men in Drake university this year are majoring in religious education, which fact he regarded as of great significance to the Sunday-school.

After the conferences, representing the various departments of the Sunday-school, Myron C. Settle, of Gary, Indiana, was introduced. Mr. Settle provides mid-week religious instruction to the children of the public school and is supported by the Sunday-school department of the American Christian Missionary Society. He said he visited the Sunday-school forces of many large cities but found the personnel in Chicago second to none of the large cities where the Disciples of Christ are at work. He criticised Chicago for being satisfied with being fifth or sixth in the matter of attendance among the great cities of the country and suggested that the slogan should be adopted of five thousand in the Sunday-school instead of three thousand.

An article by Mr. Settle concerning the remarkable work being done at Gary will appear in The Christian Century soon.

This Sunday-school meeting proved to be the greatest ever held in the history of the Chicago Sunday-school forces and all went home to reflect upon the revolutionary utterances which had been given forth with such sweetness and constructive power.

A new spirit has taken hold of the Sunday-school work in Chicago, and he is blind who cannot see a future here rich in abiding results. A very significant fact at the Jackson Boulevard meeting was that each of the conferences closed with a season of thoughtful and earnest prayers of reconsecration.

Transylvania U. and College of the Bible

Professor A. W. Fortune of The College of the Bible is conducting a very successful revival at Broadway church, Lexington Ky. No minister who has come to Lexington in recent years has attained a more secure place in the affections of the people of the city than Professor Fortune. He is assisted by E. A. Osborne, minister of Rome, Ga., church, who is conducting the music in a most satisfactory manner.

The Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. recently elected officers for the year. These associations are doing much for the spiritual development of the student body.

Professor H. L. Calhoun is giving a well attended and much appreciated series of lectures at the city Y. M. C. A., covering historical and geographical aspects of the Bible. Professor Calhoun recently made a tour of Egypt, the Holy Land, and the Mediterranean countries.

Transylvania is preparing to have a reunion of all her old students who are now teaching in the schools of Kentucky at the next meeting of the Kentucky Educational Association in Louisville, April 21-24. Headquarters will be opened in the Watterson Hotel and a dinner will be given on Thursday evening, at 5:30 o'clock. Supt. T. A. Houston, of Shelbyville, is in charge of the arrangements.

Transylvania and The College of the Bible will be represented on the programs of the eighteen district conventions, beginning at Stanton on April 2. President Crossfield will attend most of these conventions and, in addition to delivering an address, will conduct a conference with the members of the Life Committees attending.

President Crossfield has accepted a number of invitations for commencement addresses, and will be kept busy during the month of May attending the closing exercises of Kentucky high schools and colleges.

Church Young People Study Birds.

Seventh church, Indianapolis, is encouraging its young people to study birds this spring and Mrs. Etta S. Wilson, field secretary of the Indiana Audubon Society, and a resident of North Indianapolis, will conduct a department in the Christian Visitor, the neighborhood paper which is published under the auspices of the local church. The robins have already appeared in Indianapolis and there was a race among the children to report the first one. The different birds and their habits will be treated in the articles.

Eight Years of Parish Paper

First church of Lincoln, Neb., has published a weekly parish paper for eight years and the files of the paper have been preserved. The paper has a paid circulation outside the city of 135 copies and these go from coast to coast, and from the Mexican border to the northern boundaries of the country. Most of the removals have gone westward, however, and on the Pacific coast is to be found the greatest part of this nonresident constitutency of the paper.

President Todd Visits.

President E. M. Todd of Canton College, visited at Liberty, Mo., recently where Graham Frank is pastor. "There are over a hundred colleges in Missouri, but only seven of them are accredited schools," he said. "The Disciples have six educational institutions in the state and not a one of them is standardized. Unless these institutions standardize immediately, they will pass."

Out of Debt in a Year.

First church, Lincoln, Neb., will be out of debt in a year if the present plans do not miscarry. Most of the money is already pledged to meet the total indebtedness of $2,100. The remainder of the money is being raised by popular subscription, and will be paid in the next twelve months. The church has struggled for a long time with this burden and it feels good to have this prospect of early relief from the "white elephant."

Good Report for Rural Church.

The best report in years, is the way they talk about it at Fertile, Ia. C. F. Schmidt is pastor. Forty-four cottage prayer-meetings were conducted. The missionary offerings have totaled $130. The local expenses were $1,093.

Hiram College Wins Debates.

Hiram college has some good debaters in its student body this year. The team won from Heidelberg college and also from Baldwin-Wallace. The latter victory was by a unanimous decision.

Fresno (Cal.) First Church Dedication

Sunday, Feb. 28, 1915, was ushered in throughout central California with clouds and fog which developed into a heavy downpour of rain about 8 o'clock a. m., and continued almost all day. Yet the day was without question one of the brightest for many years to the Disciples of Christ throughout the territory and especially to those living in the city of Fresno; for it was the Lord's day set apart for occupancy of their new home, by the ministers and congregation of Fresno First church.

In the nearly three years that have elapsed since the coming of Dr. and Mrs. H. O. Breeden to the First church the work has grown amazingly; and yet, there was nothing sensational in its growth or in the teaching and leadership.

At the opening service which was held at eleven o'clock, the building, which with the galleries can be made to accommodate 1,200 people, was packed. Dr. Breeden preached the opening sermon on "The Lost Beatitude." At the evening service the gifted and efficient associate minister, Roy O. Youtz, preached on "The Worth of Power." The great attraction at the evening service was the boys' choir of eighty members.

During the ensuing week the following program was carried out:

Monday Night: History and Reminiscense. Address: R. L. McHatton, Fruitvale. Address: Ellis Purlee, State Missionary Secretary. Pictures illustrating pioneer days in the Church of Christ in California.

Tuesday Night: Young People's Night. Address: T. J. O'Connor, Singer. Address: Shirley R. Shaw, Red Bluff.

Wednesday Night: Temperance. Address: W. E. Babbitt, Woodland. Address: Thos. E. Boyer, Richmond.

Thursday Night: Brotherhood Night. Address: Geo. W. Brewster, Jr., San Jose.

Friday Night: Religious Education. Address: Prof. Willis A. Parker, Pomona. Address: D. A. Russell, San Francisco.

An interesting feature on this evening was the ordination of Shirley R. Shaw, former associate pastor of Fresno First church and now pastor of the Red Bluff church. Dr. Breeden officiated in the ordination and E. B. Ware, editor of the "Christian Church News," offered prayer and Prof. W. A. Parker and the present associate pastor of First church, of Fresno, Roy O. Youtz, assisted.

The California North Christian Ministers' Institute was held on Wednesday and Thursday, forenoon and afternoon. This brought about forty ministers and many remained until Saturday, Mar. 6th.

The principal entrance to the new Fresno building is through a circular colonnade, porch and vestibule at the corner. Between this entrance and another on the other front corner are the large organ and choir alcove, pulpit and baptistry. The baptistry is of marble and open. At the rear end of the sanctuary and leading directly to the Sunday-school department are two other entrances, one on either side.

On the roof back of the great dome is a roof arbor with an area of 2,800 square feet and a seating capacity of 500. It is intended for social and other church gatherings during the warm weather. The roof garden has been carefully planned for safety as well as convenience.

In every particular this great church is splendidly equipped. An interesting feature of the equipment is a moving picture machine which can be used either in the sanctuary or the Sunday-school department.

On Sunday, March 7, the dedication took place. The church was packed. Dr. H. O. Breeden conducted the service assisted by the associate minister, Roy O. Youtz. E. B. Ware delivered the address and Mrs. Shirley R. Shaw sang a solo. In cash and subscriptions the $26,000 to be provided for was nearly all raised the week before the dedication; so the $85,000 building was practically without financial incumbrance when dedicated.

At 3 p. m. there was a "fellowship" service in which many pastors of the city took part, among the number being Bishop Sanford of the Protestant Episcopal church. Letters of greeting and congratulation from former pastors were read and Pastor J. W. Webb of Modesto in a happy address represented the California North ministers.

The evening service was a musical festival in which 150 members took part led by Director John Henry Lyons. The church on this occasion was made to accommodate 1,500 or more, but many had to stand to make room for the great crowd. Yet hundreds were turned away.

Dr. Harvey Hugo Guy, of Pacific Theological Seminary, an old friend of Dr. Breeden, delivered the closing address on "Universal Aspects of Religion." It was generally considered to be the greatest address of the week, but Dr. Guy could not help being at his best on an occasion so spiritually inspiring. T. J. O'Connor.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

The Best!

Many Sunday School classes will wish to study the life of Jesus THIS YEAR. They want the very best text for young people's or adult classes that can be found. This is simply to remind them that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practical, so usable, so true to the best scholarship, so bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned, as Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF JESUS in Fifty-two Lessons. It is being widely used in Sunday Schools and Y. M. C. A. classes. It is being used in numerous leading Sunday Schools both of the Disciples and other religious bodies. This testifies to its popularity. You must have it in your school. Price 50c. In quantities of 10 or more, 40c each.

Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desire nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper. The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

WHY The Bethany System of Sunday School Literature Demands Your Attention!

1. It is the product, not simply of the talent of our own brotherhood, but of the expert workers and writers of the ENTIRE SUNDAY SCHOOL WORLD.
2. Mechanically it is the most nearly perfect of all the systems of graded literature produced to date.
3. Because the use of the Bethany lessons will make it possible for your school to co-operate in graded union activities. With other literatures, you will be handicapped in such co-operation.
4. It represents a notable achievement in Christian unity, for which principle the Disciples as a people stand. The Bethany literature is the joint product of five Protestant bodies.

We do not ask you to use the "Bethany." We do ask you to compare it with other systems. If it does not prove to be the Best, after a careful examination, use the system that IS the best.

God's Experiment in Christian Union

AFTER all, God works in very much the same way that man works. By the method of experimentation he brings to pass the good things he purposes for his children. "Try, try again," is not child's motto merely, but that of the great God.

If he fails in one of his chosen vessels he chooses another.

In the reuniting of his broken and scattered Church he has worked by many methods. The intractible material would not hold together by the principle of authority, nor the principle of orders, nor the principle of creedal agreement.

So at the beginning of the nineteenth century God began a long-time experiment in Christian union through the principle of liberty in opinion, unity in faith and love in all things.

He gathered a people together who made it their business to advocate union and to practice it on this basis. The Christian world did not listen to their advocacy with over-much respect. Its sectarian interests blinded its eyes to the sin of division and it waived off the question with indfference.

Meanwhile other factors have made the problems of Christian union no longer academic. It has become conscious to the whole Church of God, and is the most urgent and immediate practical question the Church is today facing.

The denominations have been laying aside their creeds. They have been cultivating a spirit of fellowship and co-operation across sectarian lines. They have organized what they call a Federation of Churches—a scheme to co-operate yet further and on a larger scale. But already this federation scheme is felt to be inadequate and temporary. Its promoters see that only real union will satisfy the demands of the Christian ideal and meet the needs of the world.

The bass note underlying the harmony of present day religious fellowship is union, not merely federation.

* * *

In view of this pronounced movement toward unity, manifested at many other points which need not here be mentioned, how significant becomes the century of history recently completed by the Disciples of Christ! While the Spirit of God has been wooing the broken and divided Church to desire unity, the same Spirit has been carrying on an experiment in the method by which this unity may become organic and enduring.

We, the Disciples of Christ, are God's experiment in Christian union!

We have greatly emphasized our plea, our advocacy, of union. But we have ever been in danger of forgetting that we are not only the advocate but the illustration of union.

It is ours to preach union with trumpet voice, but it is our chief duty to practice it with meekness and love, assured that the still, small voice of our example will carry further than the storm and earthquake of our advocacy.

There are many voices shouting union.

From the mission field a shout goes up, "Get together!"

The modern consolidating of business enterprise suggests vividly to the churches the advantages of getting together.

Every consideration of prudence and economy in housing and manning the church argues for union.

The grim necessity of self-preservation often compels churches to unite.

Education is carrying thinking men away from the problems over which the Church split itself in former days, and urging new problems requiring a new spirit for their solution—a spirit of inquiry and toleration.

Evangelism demands unity.

The sense of helplessness to cope with the vast problem of our cities makes each denomination lean back for re-inforcement upon its neighbor.

Sin is in league. Christ must not be divided.

Rome is united under authority, and never so aggressive as today.

The free Church of Jesus Christ must be one in its liberty or the religion of democracy shall fail.

Our voice, that of the Disciples of Christ, has been but one of many voices shouting for the union of God's scattered people. But our voice has not been heeded as have some others.

As a people we have not yet been taken seriously in this our plea. Evidently we were not raised up merely to plead for union, God having provided many other advocates. But he has reserved for us a far more difficult and important service. Perhaps our hour has not yet come.

Or has it not just now struck?

This, it would seem, is the purpose God has all along had with the Disciples of Christ: that they might be an organized and convincing illustration of Christian union.

Not advocates simply, but an example—this is indispensable in consummating Christian union. Christian men admit the un-Christian and costly character of divisions. They say, "Certainly we should unite if it is possible; but how is it possible? Who will show us the way? So long as men differ are not divisions necessary? Is there any basis upon which we can unite?

Now behold the stratagem of God!

While leading his people by his Spirit to hate divisions and to seek union, he has been all along preparing a brotherhood which should illustrate in its temper and practice the kind of unity that he proposes for his Church. So that when men ask, How can it be done?—God's answer is simply to point to his experiment. If he is able to show the world an illustration of a union that has already been consummated, on a basis broad enough to embrace all Christian men of widely divergent tempers and beliefs, and actually embracing them, and enduring through a period long enough to guarantee the adequacy of its principle of unity against the shifting vicissitudes of time—if God is able to exhibit such an illustration to the inquiring Church, sectarianism must stand speechless and without excuse.

We are God's experiment! For one hundred years he has been moulding us. Through crises searching and testing we have come. Men have said the experiment would fail. You cannot keep a brotherhood together without external authority, or a fixed creed, or a common ritual, they have asserted.

How proudly have we pointed to our history! What storms have we weathered! The civil war, a rock of further division to the denominations, how firmly held our bond of unity through that fierce and fratricidal strife!

But for the past two decades our body has been shivered through with divisive passions.

Such words as "excommunication," "split," "heretic," "not of us," "disloyal," have become familiar to our ears. Accustomed to a hard and aggressive disputatiousness with our religious neighbors, some have become equally contentious over men and movements within the brotherhood itself.

Is not the thought that God has staked so much upon his experiment with us potent enough to calm our hearts while we consider well what we are doing?

These are days when God is coming into his laboratory to examine his experiment for the last time. Shall he find us living in peace together? Shall he find us practicing sectarian exclusiveness or living in a truly catholic fellowship?

Our hearts feel that the theory of the experiment has all along been valid, that unity is possible upon the basis of such ideals as ours. If, then, the experiment fails, what does it mean but that we have introduced into the experiment some foreign and hostile factors?

But we must not fail! We must not let God fail in us!

Every loyal soul among us must in these delicate and difficult days set his purpose with determination to keep the terms of the experiment true to the theory of the experiment—that is to say, to keep the Disciples of Christ truly and unambiguously a Christian union people.

We must make it clear to our hearts that we are not simply advocating unity and promising to practice it when others do, but we are set for the practice of it here and now, so that God may offer us as a model to his sadly divided Church.

Does this statement of God's purpose with us sound ironical in the light of our faltering and wayward history and our present distraught condition?

A Visit to China's Mission Field

BY DR. VACHEL T. AND CATHARINE F. LINDSAY.

Dr. and Mrs. Lindsay recently returned from a six-months' trip in the Orient, having been drawn thither by their deep interest in mission work in general, together with a parental desire to visit their daughter, Mrs. Olive Wakefield, wife of Dr. Paul Wakefield, who is in charge of the mission hospital at Lu Chow-fu. Their visit was timed so as to attend the notable conference of missionaries at Kuling, of which Mr. Sherwood Eddy was the master spirit. In a second article they will tell of this conference and in a third they will give their observations of our mission station at Lu Chow-fu. Mrs. Lindsay is the mother of the Missionary Social Union idea and founder, more than twenty years ago, of the first local union of missionary workers representing all denominations in her city of Springfield, Ill. This local union is stronger today than ever before. Mrs. Lindsay has been its president from the start. Hardly a week in the year passes without from one to a half-dozen missionary groups assembling in her home for mission study. Her grasp on missionary facts—historic, social and administrative—is surpassed by but few. In all the radiations of her missionary enthusiasm and instruction Dr. Lindsay has had his substantial and inspiring share.

Dr. Vachel T. and Catharine F. Lindsay

IF THOSE of our friends who are not familiar with the geography of China will look on the map of Asia, they will find that great country divided near the center, east and west, by the Yangtse river. This river is to China what the Mississippi is to the United States. Near the mouth on the south side you will find the city of Shanghai, the chief seaport of that part of the Pacific. It would take a long letter to describe this cosmopolitan city. It is quite modern, and has been under British influence since it became the most important of the five Treaty Ports granted to foreign trade by the Treaty of Nanking in 1842.

From Shanghai there are several lines of steamers that go regularly up the river five days to Hankow, and some as far as Ichang. These are large, well equipped, and in every way as comfortable as ocean liners. On one of these boats we went up the river three days, about five hundred miles, past the old educational center and former capital, Nanking—to which we returned later and spent a week—past several large cities of historical interest, and landed at Kiukiang, an important river port, on the south side of the Yangtse.

A MOUNTAIN EXPEDITION.

From Kiukiang we were carried in chairs up the mountain which rises a little south of the city. The distance up to Kuling, the summer home of the missionaries of the Yangtse valley, is fifteen miles. It took about four hours to make the journey. We have had many interesting mountain climbs in the Alps, Appennines, Tyrol, and have spent months in exploring the Rockies, but no mountain expedition was ever so novel and fascinating as this journey from Kiukiang up to Kuling. Our swinging chairs were each carried by four Chinamen, resting bamboo poles on their shoulders. It seemed cruel that men should thus do the work of beasts of burden, but there was no other way possible to us. We were assured that these chairmen make higher wages and are less fatigued than in any other employment open to them. Dr. Wakefield warned our chairmen to hurry past the Half-way House, as he had been advised that another company of chairmen were waiting there to take their jobs away from them.

This was the seventeenth of June. There had been heavy rains on the previous day, but the sky was clear and the heat not oppressive. The valley from the city to the foot of the mountain was in as close cultivation as a vegetable garden in the suburbs of Chicago. The tiny fields enclosed by dykes were filled with growing rice, wheat, beans, a variety of calla-lilies and several kinds of vegetables that we had not seen before. The rice resembled young wheat, but grew in little clusters planted about four inches apart, several stalks springing from one root. During the last part of August it becomes yellow, its heads droop and it appears much like wheat when ripe.

The rice fields must needs be level to hold the water in which the plants grow, so this necessitates that the dykes be of varying heights according to the natural inclination of the ground, some not more than two feet high, others as much as five or six feet. On nearly all these dykes are planted beans of many varieties, on one side of the very narrow pathway. On the high ground, where the water is not so easily supplied, the little fields were filled with a species of calla-lily, the root of which is used for food and considered a delicacy. Still higher up we found wheat, and occasionally Indian corn, of a small variety. The climate is not suitable for our corn, and it is only used for roasting-ears.

We had forgotten our pictures of Chinese dress and were surprised that the dress of the women was so much like that of our men, consisting of long, narrow trousers and a short, loose slip very much like a man's shirt, outside the trousers. The men who are in the dress of leisure wear long robes extending to the ankle, but those who were at work were clad in short trousers, sandals, and sometimes a sleeveless, neckless shirt.

CHINESE FARMS.

The women whom we saw at work were not carrying heavy burdens. We have often seen women in Germany pulling carts, in company with dogs and donkeys, or carrying immense baskets filled with heavy vegetables on their backs. Many of them have habitually borne such heavy burdens that their backs are permanently

Plowing on a Chinese Farm

bent and they can only walk in a stooped position. Not so in China. We saw no woman engaged in the heavier kinds of labor. The men carry on bamboo poles swung over their shoulders all the materials for building houses—timber, stone, or sand; everything, in short, that we would haul in wagons. Every article used by the people of Kuling is carried up the mountains in this manner.

The crude little plow the men were using was pulled by a water-buffalo, an animal about the color of a Jersey cow, a little larger, and decorated with very long, curved horns. This animal does the work of the horse in America.

THE FLOWERS OF CHINA.

The path is often very narrow, overlooking deep precipices, and in one place ascending a thousand steps cut in rock.

We were greatly interested in the low trees and the wild flowers. At a distance the mountains looked very like the Rockies—dark pines and long lines of light green resembling the quaking aspen which on near view showed the very graceful bamboo, a richer shade of color, a little more yellow than the bluish olive green of the aspen. The wild flowers were very interesting. A great abundance of lilies, daisies, two varieties of spirea, such as we buy at Easter at one dollar a pot, in full bloom all over the hills; many kinds of yellow flowers, beautiful vines with rich foliage, mimosa trees, similar in leaf to wild locust and covered with sheets of wild flowers. A little later in the season there was an abundance of white hydrangea, fairy lilies of rich pink, violet colored platycodon, and fields of such tall, sweet, white lilies as we buy at Easter, only much larger and handsomer. Many of the finest flowers of our green-houses we saw growing wild as we climbed the mountains to Kuling. As we neared the town and came into a well traveled and wider road, we recognized our familiar neighbors at home, dandelion and plantain leaves, marks of Christian civilization.

We need not tell how we felt as we finally saw the stone cottages peeping out among the tall trees, and Dr. Wakefield said, "There is Kuling!"

We passed through a gap in the mountain, then emerged into a long street of native Chinese houses, then into an open, where we entered such a town as one might expect to find in the mountains of America. There was a store, a postoffice, a grocery, many stone cottages, in irregularly laid out park-like yards, with trees and flowers, paths winding everywhere, no roads, no horses. Our chairmen soon turned up a little lane marked by a signboard "Montreal Road," and a small boy and girl came running and yelling "Gokie! Gokie!" and "Baba! Baba!"—their baby names for grandpa and grandma.

They had left us September 27, 1910.

We started May 11, arrived June 17, five weeks and three days on the road.

Common Sense and Marriage

Some Reflections and Observations for the Especial Attention of Parents.

BY FRANK WALLER ALLEN.

"DEARLY beloved, we are gathered here, in the sight of God and in the face of this company, to join together this man and this woman in holy matrimony; which is an honorable estate, instituted of God in the time of man's innocency, signifying unto us the mystical union that is betwixt Christ and His church; which holy estate Christ adorned and beautified with his presence and first miracle that he wrought in Cana of Galilee, and is commended of Saint Paul to be honorable among all men; and therefore is not by any to be entered into unadvisedly or lightly; but reverently, discreetly, advisedly, soberly, and in the fear of God. . . ."

This is the opening sentence of the marriage service of the Protestant Episcopal Church. For strength, beauty and fitness it is unequalled in the English tongue. Here is created an atmosphere of sacredness in which a new social relationship about to be entered into is approved and instituted of the Father, the Elder Brother and the Church; it is to be honored by all, and never to be assumed lightly, inconsiderately, unpreparedly; but "reverently, discreetly, advisedly, soberly."

PRACTICAL EQUIPMENT OF IDEAS NEEDED.

It is well to impress such "lessons" upon the minds of passionate youth when they come to be married; yet, too frequently it is given to mistrained, miseducated pairs, whose self-centeredness, plus ignorance about the less romantic elemental facts of life, makes "reverently, discreetly, advisedly, soberly" meaningless terms. We carelessly misfit our boys and girls for mating. It is true that there are adjustments and facts about life that the experience of married life itself alone can work out, but there are likewise many things by way of practical equipment that we could give them that would make for happiness and change the face of divorce courts.

The trouble has been in girls being prepared to be sweethearts, instead of wives; of the boys being taught—more frequently by example than by precept—that the home obligation is less exacting than the commercial. How long will women persist in the illusion that romantic love, which may be very much in its place at seventeen and twenty, must be the heart's bread for the entire meal of life? We know that the love which sustains and makes holy the life-long experience of husband and wife is made of finer, sterner, gentler stuff than the rose-colored dreams and palpitations of our April years.

IS MARRIAGE A GAMBLE?

Youth has the right to know the truth about life. To the romance, the glamor, the sweet-scented atmosphere of April years, should be added the knowledge of the sterner virtues, the more exacting tasks, the less romantic but more sacred obligations of actual living. Rich and poor, cultured and illiterate alike, must meet the facts of birth, death, human weakness manifested in greed, lust and other forms of selfishness. To turn loose a boy and girl, who know nothing of life save its poetry and its fancy, into a world from which genuine beauty and happiness may only be had through work, discipline, service and truth, is to do them an irreparable injustice.

Truth may be less colorful and adventurous, but it is certainly more peaceful and abiding than fancy. The realities of elemental life are likely at first to appear ugly, even vicious, to one who knows only of the rose-bud world of ignorant youth. This period of molting, illusion and romance is dangerous. Its dangers have given credence to that saying that marriage is a gamble. There is no reason why marriage should be a hazard, except from its economic side. There is but one reason why this social relationship should not be entered with confidence as to its fortunate outcome: that is, our failure to prepare ourselves to become fathers and mothers, husbands and wives, as well as for other conditions of life. When a girl comes out of her finishing school she knows she is equal to the occasion of meeting every requirement from her debut to the altar. Why shouldn't she be equally as assured, through preparation, that she can cope with the holier associations of later life: her household economy, her first child, the making of a home?

WHEN SHOULD A MAN MARRY?

A man should never marry unless he is reasonably sure that he can make a living. Incompetency, poverty, bad management are responsible for much friction in the newly-made family. While every one realizes that to make a living, to make a living, to make a living is not living at all; yet to be able to do all the things that make life worth while, we must first make a livelihood. Even romantic love has an appetite for bread and cheese, olives and pickles! The roses will not blanket us in winter, and the dear white moonlit nights of June will not keep out November rains. While love does not live by bread alone, and while bread may get along without love, love cannot get far without bread. Love must be fed bread plus.

A ROCK OF MATRIMONIAL SHIPWRECK.

A girl should not marry who is not competent to manage the domestic affairs of her house. She should know how to buy, how to cook, sew and make the home clean, wholesome and inviting. A husband's ability to earn a reasonable living may be undermined by a wife's extravagance or her incompetence. Here is a rock on which many matrimonial ships have been wrecked. Debt again looms wickedly and misery surely follows. It must be remembered that more than 90 percent of the marriages made in the United States are among the middle and lower classes: the farmer, the small business man and the laborer. Frequently with them it is but a step from reasonable security to poverty. With the most of them financial embarrassment would follow three months'—or even one month's lack of wage earning employment. Again, many do not get a living wage throughout the year.

All of this is vital to the point that matrimony looks towards the family, the welfare of which makes or unmakes a people. The welfare of the family depends upon economic security, fidelity, children and an unselfish acceptance of the obligations of parentage. It shouldn't be a haphazard, hit-and-miss union, formed from the impulsive urge of romantic love alone, or the "holy" sale of the woman for a "home." A part of education—the training for fitness in coping with the tasks and obligations of life—should be devoted to preparing girls to be competent wives and mothers, boys to be fit husbands and fathers.

Not to do so is to wrong them and to wrong the nation.

Silver Linings to the Clouds of War

What Some of the World's Leaders of Thought Say About the Possibility of Certain Compensations for the Ravages of the Present Conflict.

From the London Morning Post:

"The war opens out a vast field of usefulness for the Christian Church; as it reminds people of death, so it reminds them of faith; as it destroys their wealth, so it suggests to them spiritual consolations; as it teaches them the folly of sloth and self-indulgence, so it instructs them in the deeper purposes and meanings of life. Therefore war and faith go commonly hand in hand; and war teaches mankind what childbirth teaches women. The spiritual field is plowed and harrowed by such terrible events, and the seed which the Church sows should fall upon prepared ground. And if the Church uses the opportunity well, and scorns all comfortable doctrine, not confusing safety with virtue or war with evil, it should reap a great spiritual harvest."

From the London Christian Commonwealth.

"Men have tried to conduct civilization without Christ. Men have tried to get on without his church. They have neglected its claims and ignored its appeals, turned aside from its worship and sacraments; they have desecrated its Sundays, they have sought their pleasure in sensuous comforts and enjoyments, placed their safety in riches and markets, their peace in reliance on the world's strength, and then, when their falsely founded and fraudulently built House of Life has toppled about their ears, they have the amazing effrontery to put the blame on the very religion they have despised and scorned. They attribute their insolvency to the true gold which they have kicked aside and condemned in order to hoard its glittering counterfeit. Surely there never was a more striking instance of the tendency of men to wreak their resentment on the thing they have wronged and injured. Having tried everything except Christianity, they proclaim the failure of the very faith that would have saved and redeemed them. What we find proved up to the hilt is the colossal failure of materialism and its abundant secularities. What we find established is the inexorable success of the Christianity which materialism has denied. If anything can ever convince the world of the triumphant power of Christianity, if anything can avail to vindicate our faith in the eyes of the nations it is the recurring, unfailing, inevitable collapse of every Christless civilization."

Rev W. S. Rainsford in the New York Times:

"Behind the awful turmoil of struggling, strangling millions the Kaisers and the Czars, the Chancellors and Generals are calling on God to help them strangle and kill. What sort of god are they calling on? The merely national god, the tribal god, the god that favors one man as against another, the god that loves his Jacobs and hates his Esaus, a god as unlike the God and Father of all as Juggernaut is unlike Jesus?

"Men are beginning to tire of such a god today. After this war they will loath him. . .

"In the nations of men, in all the nations, unorganized Serbs or highly organized Germans, there are unimagined, undreamed-of springs of unselfishness and of valor but waiting the call of a great emotion, the supreme call of self-sacrifice. Reverently be it spoken, the very same call that led Jesus to the cross.

"We have had it dinned into our ears by essayists, learned professors, and the clergy that our age was given over to materialism, and that the modern man's god, whether he carried a dinner pail or hired a French cook, was his belly.

"We know better now. It is before all preceding ages an idealistic age.

"Jesus said, 'Man can not live by bread alone,' and because this is mysteriously, eternally true, and only because it is true, the nations are steadily trooping forth today, old men and boys, nobles and common born, rich men forsaking their riches, and poor men braving deeper poverty. And what for?

"Just to give the best they have to the best they know.

"If that is not religion, then Jesus was deluded, and the wisest and greatest of all races and of all religions were deluded, too. Self-sacrifice may be and sometimes has been misdirected; if so it will fail of its immediate purpose, but it is the root and source of all lasting religion, and so long as it can control the life of men, even in times of crisis, that life cannot fail to be in its essence religious. Today self-sacrifice is the religion of the embattled world."

From the Philadelphia North American:

"France seems to be finding her lost faith. So deep is the mood of religion among the people, and so shining has been the service of the priests and monks, both in the ranks and in relief work, that it is freely predicted that a return of the old relation between Church and State is possible.

"Belgium's quickened religious fervor is most easily explicable of all; for adversity ever turns men to God. Germany, whose church congregations had been depleted by what orthodox folk call 'rationalism,' is turning again to the simple devotion of its fathers. Russia is sure that this is a 'holy war' and that it will result in the sacred consummation of the return of the cross to the Mosque of St. Sophia in Constantinople. The religious fervor of the Russian soldiers is remarked by all observers.

"In this country many persons are declaring that the world-war presages the return of Christ to earth. Everywhere a deepening of religious interest is reported. Revivals have not had such vogue or success for many years.

"'Billy' Sunday, the baseball evangelist, who opened a ten weeks' series of meetings in Philadelphia, in January, the largest evangelistic project America has known for a generation, is the center of surprising national interest. It is being said by many observing persons that this attempt to awaken cities of the first magnitude is providentially timed, because the war has sobered the thinking of all classes of people.

"In America the churches have shown quick and beautiful sympathy with the victims of war. If 'to visit the widows and fatherless in their affliction' is, as St. James declares, 'pure religion and undefiled,' then America has been undergoing a great religious experience.

"Christians, as well as Jews, have been deeply stirred by the suffering of the inhabitants of the holy land, and especially the Zionists there. The prediction is being freely made that when this war ends Palestine will be open to the Jews to possess, in fulfilment of the ancient kingdom dream."

From the New York Christian Advocate:

"God's movements are marvelous. He seizes an opportunity which men would not discern, and uses it for spiritual strategy.

"The world is rent by profound grief over a war which is marked by unparalleled devastation. Men speak dismally of the collapse of civilization. Divine Providence finds in the abyss unwonted hope of religion.

"Driven to their knees by the very hopelessness of their estate, millions of Europeans who had almost forgotten how to pray are now supplicating the throne of Grace. Chapels, churches, and cathedrals are thronged with petitioners. Religion is experiencing a unique and unforeseen revival.

"A kindred movement shows itself on this side the globe. An unusual seriousness has seized America. The people of our land are deeply thoughtful. Their hearts have been opened by pity and compassion for the suffering. They stand in a solemn hush before the Lord of all the earth.

"Over various sections of our domain evangelistic tides are sweeping with amazing power. Thousands of souls are turning to God. They represent all classes of society. Religion is having such a hearing as has not been given to it in many years."

To-Day's "Biggest Religious News"

Signs of a Spiritual Awakening in Somnolent China.

The information that Sherwood Eddy, Secretary for Asia of the International Young Men's Christian Association, after three months of special gospel meetings among the students, gentry and officials of thirteen cities of China—that is no doubt the biggest piece of religious news reported for a century. The significance of this news item is that it indicates that Christianity has "worked up to the top" in the land of the queue. Hitherto the story of the gospel in China is the story of work among the poor and outcast. Mr. Eddy has told for the Missionary Review of the World of some of his experiences in this recent campaign. We reprint some of these bits of narrative.

IN PEKING, where the work began, Mr. Eddy had an enjoyable half-hour with President Yuan Shih Kai, whom he believes to be China's strong man today. The President, though not deeply religious, "sees the alarming growth of immorality, with the breakdown of old standards before new ones have been formed, and he believes in supporting morality or any religion that will uphold the State." The Vice-president also gave Mr. Eddy and his associates a hearing, and an opportunity to present Christianity to him. Mr. Eddy found the change in Peking in fourteen years most striking:

"In 1900 the Boxers were killing our Christians, and attempting to drive foreigners out of China. This year, for the first time, the Chinese officials opened the Forbidden City, where the foot of the 'foreign devil' was formerly never permitted to rest, and gave us a site for our tabernacle right near the palaces of the boy Emperor, and close to the sacred altar where the Emperor annually worshiped. Four thousand students assembled in this tabernacle to hear the gospel, and some six hundred men were enrolled in Bible classes in twelve churches in different parts of the city . . . The response of the officials and leaders of China was most notable in the capital city, which has long been the most conservative center of China. At one meeting for inquirers who were deemed near the point of decision for the Christian life there were present one former governor, two generals, a private secretary to the President, the director of China's national bank, prominent officials, and a young non-Christian philanthropist who has given this year $12,000 to Christian work."

At Hangchow, the Confucian owners of the modern theater canceled a scheduled entertainment, and gave Mr. Eddy the use of the theater free of charge. The governor granted a holiday that the students might attend, which they did. The theater was filled on two successive days, and about a thousand men signed cards promising to study the life of Christ and follow him so far as they were convinced that his claims were just. The governor invited the visitors to a banquet. Here is the story of this incident, as told by Mr. Eddy:

"For an hour we presented Jesus Christ to that governor and his secretary, Mr. S. T. Wen. Finally, I said to the secretary, as I took out my Testament: 'Mr. Wen, when the eunuch had heard the gospel that Philip preached to him, he said:

"'What doth hinder me to be baptized? What hinders you from becoming a Christian here and now?' Mr. Wen replied:

"'Mr. Eddy, some day I will; but now it would complicate my official position. Some day I will retire from political life and go into private life and become a Christian.'

"'Why not do it now?' I urged. 'We need Christian leaders now. Will you not do it now?'

"He answered: 'I will.' And we shook hands. Then I said: 'Mr. Wen, when will you do it?'

"'Next Sunday,' he replied. At first he asked me for private baptism, but I said: 'Let us be plain; we must be courageous, and work for the glory of Jesus Christ. Will you go down to the little church and be baptized in public?'

"'I will,' he said. The following day

President Yuan Shih Kai, whom Mr. Eddy believes to be "China's strong man."

this fearless man took the chair at the meeting and stated publicly that he had decided to become a Christian. Even the non-Christian students broke into applause. The next Sunday he went down and gave his testimony before the people in the little church. He said: 'I may lose my official position, but I take my stand today once for all for Jesus Christ.' . . . He immediately started Bible classes among his household servants and officials; and on the last day of meetings in China, when illness prevented me from conducting the meetings as scheduled, Mr. Wen came down and carried them on with Mr. C. T. Wang."

At Foochow, where twenty years ago eleven missionaries were torn limb from limb by an angry mob, Mr. Eddy spoke at the invitation of the governor, the chamber of commerce, and all the Confucian College presidents. The meetings were successful. Mr. Eddy dined with the governor, who subscribed generously toward a new Y. M. C. A. building, and he was told in an address presented by the Confucian educators:

"Confucianism alone cannot save China. We need the moral dynamic and principle of progress which Christianity can give. Christianity has long appealed to the lower classes, but has not the time now come for you to appeal to the leaders and educated men of the nation?"

In the port city of Amoy an attempt was made to reach the merchant class. With this success:

"When we arrived there we found that the lieutenant-governor had sent out his proclamation announcing the meetings to such an extent that they did not dare give out tickets for the meeting. All of these audiences were not people admitted from the streets; they were picked audiences of those three classes, officials, students, and business men. In order to gain admission to the evangelistic meetings, men were compelled to go to a certain place and sign written applications. Eight thousand men came in advance and signed those applications. The opening night five thousand gathered—the place only held two thousand, and had to be filled three times. The next day it rained, and as in China they don't go out in the rain, I did not expect that a meeting would be held. I was taking dinner at six o'clock, when I was summoned by a messenger to come at once. Three thousand men had come, and they sat while the rain dripped down, some of them wiping the rain from the seats. For one hour they listened as we talked about sin, their sins—gambling, graft, and the sins that are honeycombing the life of China. One business man who signed a card got ten others to join his class. Men said: 'Wherever there is a Christian to teach, you can form classes all over the city.'"

"But," says Mr. Eddy, "the door will not forever remain open to Christianity as at present"—

"The movement toward Confucianism is not united, it is not self-conscious yet, but it is growing. One party is trying to promote a materialistic movement, but a far larger party is trying to strengthen the religious element in Confucianism. It reminds me of an old watch that has run down, into which they are going to put a new mainspring, the mainspring of patriotism and nationalism, so that the old watch will not only keep time, but go faster than the normal. I no longer dread that movement, however, after what I have seen."

THE OPTIMIST.

The world can never pay its debt to him. The man that hopes, that plans great and glorious things, that lives much in that wonderful land of the ideal, is the man that is leading the world of mankind slowly up the golden rounds of the ladder of real achievement. To believe in the ultimate good, and not to be turned aside from that faith by any present victory of evil or of wrong; to cherish the vision of the triumph, and not lose sight of it in the conflict and struggle through which it is won, is to be an optimist after God's own thought. Such a one was Jesus Christ and to such triumphant faith and hopefulness He has called us all.—Christian Guardian.

GUIDANCE.

Lord, in each day's littleness
Let thy mercy hold and bless.
Choose my way, that I may be
Ever wise in serving thee:
Nor in childish folly call
Any gift or mercy small,—
Any trial of my state,
Any cross or sorrow great.
For thy greatness holdeth me;
And thy littleness may be
The first token of a care
High as heaven and heavenly fair.

MEN AND MILLIONS.

THE Men and Millions Movement has arrived in Chicago, and Chicago churches know that it has arrived. They welcomed the movement, like most churches do, at first with a touch of patronage in their attitude, but they soon came to see that what the movement asks of the churches is as nothing compared with what it bestows upon them.

As an embodiment and voicing of the total claim of Christ upon his followers this movement is the most effective and illuminating thing the Church ever saw. It is literally unique.

If in theory and anticipation it stirred the imagination, its actual presence confirms all the hopes it had awakened and leaves the imagination still wondering to what divine goal it will finally carry the Disciples of Christ.

The idea in this movement grows larger by being realized!

Twelve men, apostles every one of some specific cause in Christ's Kingdom, are merging their separate personalities into one group personality, and arranging their separate messages into one compelling argument, and blending their separate appeals into one overwhelming symphony of Christian emotion, and bringing it all to bear with tremendous impact upon the conscience of the whole Church.

Nothing like it was ever experienced before.

Churchmen to whom the full-rounded claim of the Kingdom has hitherto been put in little bits, and whose conception of it all was, consequently, vague and fragmentary, are made to see the task steadily and to see it whole.

And they respond to it!

The presence of Men and Millions in Chicago is proving the most searching and deep-going and gladdest religious experience the Disciples of this city have ever had.

Some say it is equal to a revival. But nothing that goes by the name of revival ever did or ever can help the churches so wholesomely and fruitfully.

To the churches of the whole land The Christian Century trumpets this message:

Welcome the coming of Men and Millions to your community! Prepare for its coming! And expect God to pour you out a blessing so abundant that you will not be able to receive it!

TWO CANDIDATES.

THE citizens of Chicago are being solicited in a very active campaign to vote for one or the other of two candidates at the polls on April 6. At the Democratic primaries Mr. Harrison, the present mayor, was defeated by Mr. Sweitzer, the county clerk. In the Republican primary, Judge Olson, of the Municipal Court, was defeated by Mr. Thompson, a business man, whose life has been devoted principally to sporting interests.

The defeat of Judge Olson by a narrow majority was a very great disappointment to the reform elements of the Republican and Progressive parties. That he was by far the best of the candidates the lovers of the higher type of city administration believe.

The campaign between Mr. Sweitzer and Mr. Thompson is now under full headway. It is generally understood that Mr. Sweitzer has back of him the influence and organization of Mr. Sullivan, the Democratic leader who was recently defeated for United States Senator. Mr. Sullivan represents the boss system in its most efficient form, and no one doubts that should his candidate be elected it is he, rather than the mayor, who would dictate policies and divide the spoils.

On the other hand, Mr. Thompson's associations have been those of the sporting world. He was the chairman of the meeting which welcomed home Mr. Lorimer when he was convicted at the close of his second trial for obtaining his seat in the United States Senate by bribery.

Since that time Mr. Lorimer has been discredited, both as a politician and a financier by the wreck of his political career and the bankruptcy of his institutions. Yet it is a matter of common knowledge that he has never abandoned the hope of rehabilitation nor relaxed his hold upon the machine he so long controlled. Nor does it seem doubtful that Mr. Thompson's election would offer the opportunity the Lorimer faction seeks in order to regain its power.

If there is one thing worse for Chicago than control by a Sullivan Democracy it would be government by Lorimer Republicanism.

In the meantime those citizens who have higher ideals for their city are left to regret their inactivity in permitting the defeat of Judge Olson, and to treasure the lesson for another day.

LET US HAVE PEACE!

IS NOT twenty years long enough for Christians whose main business is to practice Christian unity to be bitterly and jealously at war among themselves?

It would seem that the time had surely come for this strife to be finished, if not by partisan victory then by weariness and disgust.

What the Disciples of Christ now need is the development of a positive and prompt-acting peace conscience so purposeful and vigorous that it will brand with anathema any man or institution that introduces new discord or continues the old dissension.

The hour is ripe for the appearance of a new leadership among us—a leadership in the fine and fruitful art of constructive peace.

We say "constructive" peace, in contrast to a supine peace, a peace of acquiescence, of mere amiability. No more instructive illustration of the failure of this peace of weakness and of silence could be imagined than we are now witnessing. For months one of our newspapers has been parading as its chief virtue the fact that it kept all controversy out of its columns. But now behold! Its pages are shouting the kind of recrimination that angry boys indulge in on the school ground.

Why did its peace policy of silence break down? Because in the months that it kept controversy out of its columns it failed to put constructiveness in.

The fact must be squarely faced, that the problems among the Disciples are not fictitious problems, they are very real and they go very deep.

And a second fact must be squarely faced, that the Disciples are not the kind of people to hide their heads in the sand when a dangerous problem reaches them. They want it discussed.

But they want it discussed constructively. They want to see progress in the discussion. They do not want a treadmill controversy that ends where it began, and begins again only to end in the same spot.

An unconstructive peaceableness always tends to burst into temper and puerile wrath under the goading of its opponents, because it is not the peaceableness of conviction and of clear-visioned purpose but of soft sentiment or short-sighted selfishness.

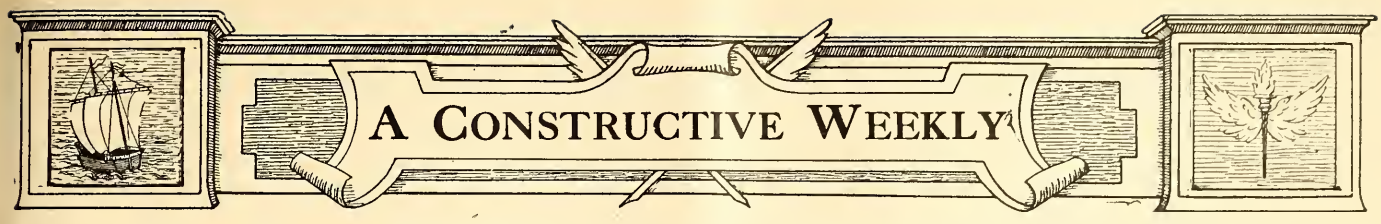
And when the policy of unconstructive peace breaks down it usually breaks down at the most unfortunate moment, bringing loss and chagrin to the cause. Of this general observation the flagrant instance we are now witnessing in the Disciples' journalism is a luminous illustration.

Let us have peace!

And let us have a leadership that symbolizes and cultivates peace by constructively laying foundations of conviction deep in the souls of our people!

The tasks that have been thrust upon us in these days are tremendous. The brotherhood ought to be spared the distraction and disgust of witnessing two rival newspapers doing their laundry work in the back yard.

The eyes of the Christian world are drawn to us by our Men and Millions Movement, and we should be spared the humiliation of a noisy quarrel over matters that do not concern nor interest those whose hearts are aflame with devotion to the great cause.



THE NEW QUEST OF SUFFRAGE.

SOME months since, The Christian Century pointed out the fact that many of the women of Illinois had discovered too late that the measure of suffrage obtained by them two years ago was only at best a half-complete privilege.

For many years the suffrage organization of the state, headed by such women as Mrs. Ella S. Stewart and Mrs. Catherine Waugh McCullough, labored earnestly to secure equal suffrage, and was rewarded with a growing favor and the prospect of complete success.

Then the state organization fell into other hands, and a measure was secured in the legislature which afforded partial franchise to women. This was hailed as a great triumph by the leaders of the organization, and much congratulation was indulged in by the friends of the cause.

Later the more thoughtful women discovered the fact that the amount of suffrage actually obtained was by no means what the earlier workers had almost succeeded in winning. The compromise accepted by the younger group was an easy gift from the legislature, and might in fact, have been obtained even earlier if the same willingness to accept half-favors had been the mood of the suffragists.

At the present time there is an awakening in the suffrage ranks to the real situation. An urgent protest has arisen against the policy of complaisance, and there is now the prospect that a new suffrage organization will be formed to press a more vigorous campaign and to obtain a measure which is worthy to be called equal suffrage.

In this movement Mrs. Stewart and Mrs. McCullough are leaders as before, and they have the support of a large company of the more aggressive suffragists in this city and throughout the state. Perhaps under their leadership the women of Illinois may be able to win a suffrage law which will make the women's vote a far more effective instrument for the accomplishment of much needed reforms.

WANTED: LEADERS THAT LEAD.

FIVE terms mayor of his city, and he leaves no constructive public service by which he will be remembered.

That is the pathetic and deliberate judgment of the citizenship of Chicago upon the conspicuous political career of Carter H. Harrison.

By his recent primary defeat it is generally believed that Mr. Harrison's leadership in the politics of this city is ended.

As mayor of Chicago he was a national figure. He brought to his office the heritage of a popular family name. His father was the distinguished mayor of the city at the time of the World's Fair, and through his clever handling of the many complex municipal problems connected with that exposition became a popular idol.

The son began political life well educated, wealthy and with a reputation for democratic sympathies. He was elected because it was believed by many leaders of social uplift that he would guide the city forward on a program of progress.

The people believed he was aware of the social movement of the new day, and there are many evidences that he was aware of it. They were ready for a sane far-visioned policy of city-building on modern lines.

The people are now disillusionized.

No man in modern American life has faced a more inspiring opportunity to render monumental service to human life through the established mechanism of social organization than Mr. Harrison has faced ever since he entered upon his task as mayor of this city!

But no sooner was he seated in official position than he lost his leadership.

Instead of setting up ideal standards and working toward them steadily, with constructive purpose, he struck a respectable average of popular sentiment and made his administrations conform to that average.

To him the important thing was to be re-elected!

His administration became an end in itself, not a means of public service. And he now passes to private life with no abiding honor.

Contrast Carter Harrison wth Mayor Tom Johnson of Cleveland who, with less auspicious circumstances, re-organized the street car system of that city on a three-cent fare basis and wrought into the procedure of the city's institutional charities a quality of idealism and humanity and justice which no city in the land today excels.

And compare Mr. Harrison's career with a similar type of leadership in religion. Among leaders of the Disciples of Christ the great fetish has always been "the consensus of opinion." By this phrase is meant precisely the same thing that Mr. Harrison sought to conform his policy to.

What the Church, like the secular community, calls for today is a leadership that leads—a leadership of idealism, a leadership that gets its pattern in the Mount, and regards the "consensus of opinion" not as a standard, but merely a part of the data to be taken into account in making the ideal real.

HELPFUL HERESY.

MODERN thought—after all, what is it? Both its partisans and opponents magnify its significance, especially when it enters the sphere of religion and appears as the "new theology."

But there is much cloudiness of mind as to just what modern thought as related to religion really is.

If the earnest reader will pause at the threshold of that stimulating and gracious little book, "The Higher Individualism," by Dr. E. S. Ames, he will find in its modest preface a statement that will bear re-reading and considerable reflection.

The characteristic ideas, says Dr. Ames, held by men of today who are working earnestly and constructively at the problems of religion are these:

"The social nature of the individual and the value of social service."

"The charm of the nearer view of Jesus."

"The naturalness and accessibility of the central religious experiences, such as regeneration, inspiration, and the mystical moods."

"The world-old quest for a more abundant and a more ideal life."

These ideas do not sound very heretical and naughty, do they, fair-minded but still doubtful reader? If you take them as words merely, they will surely flow naturally through the grooves of the most orthodox and conventional mind.

And if you take them as suggesting what the author intends they shall suggest, in their fullest possible significance, they will not weaken a single orthodox idea that anybody as sensible as the Disciples of Christ have always been would care to cherish.

Instead of weakening, they will vitalize old truth and give it a new grip upon the soul.

If this modern thinking is heresy, then let us have more heresy!

THE SPIRITUAL LIFE.

ALL Christians believe that the most desirable of attainments is the spiritual life. The New Testament gives emphasis to that desirability and Christian literature has deepened the impression. Yet no element of the Christian life is more vague in the popular mind than this. What is it to possess spirituality?

In one of the journals of William Robertson Smith there occurs this paragraph: "Intellectual culture, some may say, is apt to make a man less spiritual. This supposes the spiritual part of the man to be a peculiar faculty. In fact, the emotional is meant. But a man may as readily err by trusting his own emotions as by trusting his own intellect. Spirituality is not the development of one part of the mind, but the development of the whole mind in a spiritual direction."

Spirituality is the quality of being in sympathy and relationship with the divine purpose in the world; sensitive to the program of God as interpreted by Jesus and co-operant in its realization. The spiritual man is not merely the man of piety, still less of pietism; but he who intelligently and with ardor attempts to comprehend the divine task for his generation and to assist in bringing it to completion.

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

"The Trial of John Barleycorn."

Mr. Daniel Poling, the temperance secretary of the Christian Endeavor Society, announces "The Trial of John Barleycorn," to be given in Chicago in October, 1915. It will be held in Chicago's largest available auditorium. The Hon. J. Frank Hanly will prosecute the case. Two able liquor attorneys will defend. It promises to be one of the most notable events in the temperance warfare of the present year, and will probably do as much for the prohibition cause as "The World in Chicago" did for missions.

Chinese Young Men Ask Christian Aid.

Forty-five Chinese Christian young men in Washington, D. C., have addressed a letter to President Wilson asking his interest in China and through him asking the interest of all the citizens of the United States in the demands being made upon China by Japan at this time. These young men, who are members of the Y. M. C. A., urge that the pushing of these demands will issue in a war between Japan and China sooner or later.

The Knights of Columbus Oath.

Much misunderstanding between Catholics and Protestants has been rendered in the United States on account of the publication of a supposed "fourth degree" oath of the Knights of Columbus, a Catholic order. In order to stop the flood of calumny the Knights of Columbus have published their oath as it is really administered and have asked some of the highest Masonic officials in California to examine their ritual as well and report on its character. The oath really is as follows: "I swear to support the Constitution of the United States. I pledge myself, as a Catholic citizen and Knight of Columbus, to enlighten myself fully upon my duties as a citizen and to conscientiously perform such duties entirely in the interest of my country and regardless of all personal consequences. I pledge myself to do all in my power to preserve the integrity and purity of the ballot and to promote reverence and respect for law and order. I promise to practice my religion openly and consistently, but without ostentation, and to so conduct myself in public affairs and in the exercise of public virtue as to reflect nothing but credit upon our holy church, to the end that she may flourish and our country prosper to the greater honor and glory of God." This frank declaration ought to stop the printing of many columns of alarming piffle about the proposal to have another St. Bartholomew's massacre. A man is none the less a Protestant who wishes that justice be done his Catholic fellow-citizens.

Dr. Woelfkin Visits Chicago.

On March 7 the university preacher at the University of Chicago was Rev. Cornelius Woelfkin, of the Calvary Baptist church, New York City. Dr. Woelfkin has received many academic honors, including the degree of Doctor of Divinity from Rutgers college and Rochester university, LL. D. from Denison, and Litt. D. from Franklin and Marshall college. Dr. Woelfkin was also the speaker on Convocation Sunday, March 14.

Memorial Building for Dr. Hamill.

Dr. H. M. Hamill, the International Sunday School Association president, died recently, and a group of Chicago Sunday-school men have organized to erect a building in his memory at Conference Point, Lake Geneva, Wis. This building will increase the equipment of the International Training School for Sunday-school leaders, which is already in operation. This school trains various kinds of Sunday-school workers who plan to make Sunday-school work a life vocation.

Subjects for the Week of Prayer.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has issued a list of prayer topics for Holy Week, March 28 to April 3. Beginning with Palm Sunday, these topics are, "Unity in Christ," "Christ's Evangel," "Christ and the Nations," "Christ and World Missions," "Christ and the Home, Education, and the Sabbath," "Christ on the Cross," "Christ and Social Service."

Baptist Leaders Quit Mission Staff.

The American Baptist Foreign Mission Society announced on March 18 that it had accepted the resignations of the two most recent additions to its staff of secretaries—the Rev. Dr. Emory W. Hunt, former president of Denison university, Granville, Ohio, and the Rev. Arthur C. Baldwin, formerly pastor of the First Baptist church of Fall river, Mass. The resignations, it was said, had been voluntary, because of the critical financial situation which the society faced. The society had known for two months of the desire of these men to relieve the organization but had deferred action.

Ministers Fight Commercialized Vice.

The Chicago Church Federation Council sent out a request recently that the ministers of the city preach against commercialized vice on March 14. This request was acted upon by many ministers in all sections of the city. Rev. F. W. Gunsaulus, pastor of Central church, meeting in the Auditorium theater, said: "Segregated vice is un-American. It gives a kind of permissive halo to vice. It encourages blackmail, graft, and political alliance with evil. Chicago has no right to advertise itself as an educational center, the home of 80,000 music students, 20,000 students in technology and allied sciences, and the greatest center for medical students in the world, and not make it a safe and clean city so that students coming here from pure homes in the country and smaller cities return as clean as when they came here."

Catholic Theatre Movement.

The Catholic Theatre Movement is a voluntary organization within the Roman Catholic church of America, headed by Rev. John J. Burke, and endorsed by Cardinal Farley, which undertakes to provide Catholics with advice with regard to the offerings upon the stage. The society publishes a "white list" of plays which, if not entirely unobjectionable, are regarded as proper for Catholics to witness. The white list now contains the names of nearly two hundred plays. There are promise cards which Catholics sign, promising not to attend indecent plays. It is planned to extend these activities to the movies and vaudeville.

Woman's Congress of Missions.

The Woman's Congress of Missions is to be held June 6-13, 1915, in the Exposition at the Civic Center, Larkin and Hayes streets, San Francisco. This congress is to present missions in all its aspects, being held under the joint auspices of the Council of Women for Home Missions, and the Federation of Woman's Foreign Missionary Boards in the United States. A large committee of California women are working enthusiastically on all local arrangements and they will present the two missionary pageants. There is to be an exhibit of literature, a series of study classes and conferences, large inspirational gatherings and addresses by experts in the field of women's missionary enterprise.

New Divinity Instructor.

Announcement is just made by the board of trustees of the University of Chicago of the appointment of a new member to the faculty of the university—Dr. Martin Sprengling, of Harvard university, to be Assistant Professor of Arabic and Hebrew in the Department of Semitic Languages and Literatures. Dr. Sprengling was for three years a graduate student in the University of Chicago, and later held a fellowship for two years in the Department of Biblical and Patristic Greek. The appointment begins with the opening of the autumn quarter.

Sermons by University Professors.

A volume that is expected to attract much attention from ministers and laymen alike is to be issued this month by the University of Chicago Press under the title of "University of Chicago Sermons." It is to contain a single sermon from each of eighteen well-known members of the university faculties, including not only representatives of biblical and theological departments but also those of education, sociology, and philosophy. All of the contributions to the volume have actually been delivered, and range in subject from "Manufactured Gods" by Shailer Mathews, Dean of the Divinity School, to "Has the Church a Message for the Modern World?" by Nathaniel Butler, and "The Function of Death in Human Experience" by Professor George Burman Foster, of the Department of Comparative Religion. The combination of modern scholarship and pulpit power is fortunately illustrated in this unique effort at co-operation in religious thought and influence.

The Work of Rev. Geo. A. Kilbey.

One of the unique and outstanding useful figures in Chicago Presbyterianism is Rev. Geo. A. Kilbey. For twenty-nine years he was identified with the Salvation Army. He was once second in command of the army in England and was sent to Australia as head of the forces there. Later he had charge of army affairs in South Africa. He was sent to Chicago with charge of the middle west. At last, he became sure he did not want to be a Salvation Army man any longer and without prospects he stepped out of their ranks with no prospects ahead. He joined the Presbyterian church and was ordained in that fellowship. He opened a place near the Twelfth street station in Chicago where he collected second-hand articles and gave the unemployed work in mending them. He has a genius for reclaiming seemingly useless articles. He conducts a cheap rooming house and he has become the head of a vast movement for the help of the needy in the city on lines which preserve self-respect. Mr. Kilbey is interested in the spiritual side of his work and he is able to renovate the seemingly worn-out religious nature of a man and put it to work again for God.

Dr. Adeney In Burmah.

Dr. Adeney, the well-known New Testament scholar of the Congregational fellowship in England, is now traveling in Burmah and will travel through India this spring. He expects to return to England before the middle of May. He writes from Rangoon that he attended a watch-night service at which native Christians sang "All Hail the Power" to the tune of Miles Lane, simultaneously in three languages.

College Episcopalians Meet.

There are seventeen thousand college men in New England and one-tenth of them are Episcopalians. For thirteen years, representatives of the Episcopalian students have met for conference. This year the meeting was held at Harvard, with the St. Paul's society of Harvard as hosts. Eighty-three delegates were present. The matter of church loyalty was warmly discussed and one speaker presented the claims of the ministry upon the college student. Another speaker considered the opportunity of the educated man in the orient as a Christian worker. The corporate communion was held in Christ church with Bishop Perry officiating.

Give Price of One Day's Labor.

The Protestant Episcopal church missionary leaders find it necessary to raise a special fund of $400,000. They are asking every Episcopalian in America to give the price of one day's labor in order to meet the emergency. This contribution is to be in addition to the regular missionary offering made in the church.

Congregational Polish Church.

The city of Detroit, Mich., has 650,000 Poles, of whom about a hundred thousand are of the second generation. One-fifth of these second generation Poles are said to be without religious affiliation of any sort. In recent years Rev. J. P. Huget, pastor of First Congregational church, has carried on some work among these young Poles. A parish house costing $8,000 has been recently erected and dedicated. The Polish work has resulted in the organization of a Polish church. Rev. Paul Kozielek, who is the pastor, is a graduate of Oberlin college. Mr. Kozielek is said to be better informed about Protestant religious work among Poles than any other man in America.

Dutch Reformed Church Losing.

The loss of three organizations in New York by the Dutch Reformed Church in recent years is quite surprising, for this is the oldest denomination in the city, dating its history back to the time when New York was called Amsterdam. These churches have lost partly on account of bad business management, but there is also some tendency for the members to enter other denominations. The Reformed church is almost identical in creed and government with the Presbyterians, but there does not seem to be any tendency for them to unite with the Presbyterian church.

The Lord's Day League.

The twentieth annual meeting of the Lord's Day League was held in Boston recently and there was much to cheer the leaders of this organization. Fifteen bills looking toward a less strict observance of the Lord's day in New England have been introduced this winter and the League has defeated them. The annual day for the discussion of Lord's Day observance has been set as April 11.

Negro Bishops in Episcopal Church.

One of the vexed problems of the Episcopal church has been the question of providing negro bishops for the southern negro. At a recent meeting of the Synod of the southwest, it was voted to ask the Commission on Racial Episcopate to recommend the appointment of such bishops. The report of the Commission will be presented at the General Convention in St. Louis in 1916.

Bishop Helps Coal Miners.

Bishop Darlington, of Harrisburg, Pa., of the Protestant Episcopal communion, has been moved by the plight of the coal miners in his district. In some sections there is a saloon for every hundred people, men, women and children. At night there is no light upon the streets except that from saloon windows. The bishop is projecting buildings to be used as social centers and one of these is already erected at Mt. Carmel. These buildings are to be kept painted white, which is unusual in that sooty country, and they will be open during the evenings with every legitimate device to entice the men back to sanity and clean living. The bishop calls these social center "lighthouses." They will be put into cities where there is no Y. M. C. A. nor public library.

Congress of Religious Liberals.

The fifth Congress of the National Federation of Religious Liberals met in Philadelphia Feb. 21-24, as the guests of the Liberal Ministers' Club of that city. The meeting place was the historic Friends' Meeting House at Race and Fifteenth streets. Within a few blocks of the place where Rev. "Billy" Sunday was ladling out brimstone, Unitarians, Universalists and others met to consider what things were true for them in Christianity. The common theme was World-wide Brotherhood, with such subtitles as The Higher Patriotism, International Wars and World Peace, Race Antipathies and the Brotherhood of Man, Race Problems in the United States and their Ethical Solution, Religion after the War, and others. Among the speakers were: Drs. Samuel A. Eliot, Charles F. Dole, Samuel M. Crothers, Frederick Lynch; Profs. Jay W. Hudson, Daniel Evans, Franz Boas, William E. B. DuBois, I. W. Jenks, Arthur C. McGifffert; several rabbis, with Edwin D. Mead of the World's Peace Foundation and Stanton Coit, president of the West London Ethical Society. The program was pitched on a high plane and included readings from the Bible, Emerson, Channing, Browning, Carlyle, Tolstoi, Whittier, Washington, President Wilson, Jefferson, Sumner, Tennyson. Lowell and others.

Belgium Protestants Ask Help.

The Union of the Protestant Evangelical churches of Belgium are appealing to America for aid to further religious work in that unhappy country in these troublesome times. They have sent to this country as their delegate, Dr. Henri Anet, who is visiting American churches. He says: "Poor Belgium has lost all, but not its soul. This soul must be redeemed by the gospel of justice and liberty."

Dr. Mathews Makes Friends in Japan

The freedom with which views have been exchanged as to the relations between the United States and Japan has been a notable feature of the last few weeks. This has been due directly to the visit of Professor Shailer Mathews of the University of Chicago, part of whose speeches in Japan in the interests of friendlier relations have been cabled.

Professor Mathews bore instructions from the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, which sent him to present with frankness the American views as he interpreted them. In the same spirit Baron Kato, minister of foreign affairs, replied after hearing Professor Mathews speak before the Concordia Association.

Professor Mathews said the great body of Christians in the United States was ready to be of service to Japan if its services were desired. As to the American attitude toward Japan, he thought some Americans failed to understand Japan's foreign policy and suspected the Japanese of deliberately undertaking to be in the East what Germany undertook to be in Europe.

"I have been reading literature on that subject sufficiently to see how that is," he said. "There are expressions in Japanese publications which give the impressions similar to the remarks of General Bernhardi relative to German 'kultur.' This feeling, again, I do not want to have emphasized in your minds as a dominant one, or in any sense active or general, but there is no question that it is in the minds of some American citizens; and, at the risk of appearing discourteous, I want to mention one or two things in this connection.

"I know you will not understand me as saying what I think, but simply reporting what I have found in America. There is a feeling on the part of certain Americans that the agitation over the California incident is all out of proportion to the importance of the incident, and that the real point that lies back of it all is a suspicion that Japan fears that America will in some way mix up with China."

Baron Kato thanked Professor Mathews for his frank and straightforward presentation of the views and sentiments of Americans. He was happy to say, speaking generally, the relations between Japan and the United States were very intimate and satisfactory.

It was only recently that untoward incidents began to claim attention, chiefly on account of the California question, the baron went on. That question was not, in his opinion, of any great importance so far as the material interests involved were concerned.

Nevertheless, the question was an irritating one to the Japanese. As a matter of fact, there was no desire on the part of Japan to dump any large number of her people where they were not wanted. Japan was prepared to go a long way to avoid unpleasantness with the United States, as was shown by the voluntary restriction of emigration to the United States under "the gentlemen's agreement." That arrangement had been honestly and rigorously carried out by Japan.

Here and There

Too Good to Keep.

A certain teacher in one of our colleges who has undergone a good deal of criticism for some alleged heresies recently preached a sermon that a few years ago would have made him the object of harsh criticism. An ardent Disciple who heard the sermon was loud in his praise of it, not knowing that a few men would have damned the preacher if they had been permitted to have their way. "Ah," said this veteran Disciple," that is the kind of preaching we need; in the congregation where I attend we have heard nothing like that in two years." And the fun is boundless when it is known the aforesaid congregation is as free from suspicion of heresy as a pumice-stone is free from water.

What we see in this world depends upon the eyes that we see with. Any man can find heresy in his brethren if he wants to find it. Those who agree with me are really great men, and I find no fault in them at all.

The Fact of the Resurrection.

It is well for us to remind ourselves at this season that there is more in the Easter services than special music and beautiful flowers. There is a tremendous truth to be declared, a truth that should fill our souls with awe as well as with hope—the truth that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, and that he was buried, and rose again the third day, according to the Scriptures. If Christ be not risen—ought to be the central thought of the day.

* * *

Scrutinizing Ourselves Too Closely.

Every religious movement suffers from the criticism of its well-wishers, from those who live so near the center of its interests that a due sense of proportion is lost. They are so interested and involved that they become hyper-sensitive and critical. They are so much in the public eye that they cannot see, they are blinded by an excess of light.

We Disciples are no exception to the rule. We have a few good men who think all the rest of us are going to the bad, and who flourish on what they consider our heresies. Our virtues are pushed by these men into the background. Those who just now are covering themselves with sackcloth and ashes over a general convention should look outward that they may see something besides the perplexities within. They need to be reminded that our future depends upon the fruits of the life we lead as a people, and not upon questions of mere methods. If recent dissent be taken at its face value what becomes of our boasted liberty in methods? What a travesty on our history would be a new manifestation of the spirit that became almost o-missionary because of dissensions about missionary methods? If that history should repeat itself, what apology could we make?

What Washington Irving said years ago about the failure of the Englishmen who wrote about America, is true of the Disciples today. The British traveler could observe with scientific particularity the customs of the Fiji Islanders, but went into spasms because of his prejudices when he wrote about America. He was too closely related to his American cousins to see things as they were. Some of us need to take a Fiji Island survey of ourselves. We shall see the better the farther off we are.

Hunting Big Game.

In some churches the war on popular amusements continues. It is called the war on worldliness. Let us admit that there is worldliness in the case. But it ought not to be forgotten that there is a world of worldliness in the church apart from card-playing and dancing. Have we lost sight of the Christian who never prays, of the ones who use unclean language, of the large class who justify dishonesty under the guise of business competition? What do we say of those who never contribute anything to the great enterprises of the church? What of the multitude who never darken the door of the prayer-meeting? What shall we say of entire congregations who are never moved to lift a hand to stay the iniquities of their community in any co-operative way?

It is lamentable now and then to see communities vexed over the matter of popular amusements, when mightier sins flourish under the shadow of the Church without so much as a rebuke. Why not use our efforts where they will count for most?

Church History in Second Hand Book Catalogues.

That is a natural place to find it. Where are the mighty messages that rang out a generation or two ago on the second coming, the interpretation of prophecy, the end of the world, and other similar themes? Where now the battlefields between those who contended over predestination and foreordination? Where the giants of other days who framed unanswerable arguments on both sides of puzzling questions? Themes and men alike well-nigh forgotten. The dust of oblivion has settled upon one as upon the other. What is a second hand book store, but a grave for departed theories, opinions, finalities? The names of the books themselves remind us of an old fashion-plate book. There is something as hopelessly out of date in the one as in the other. Do ideas undergo the changes which seem inevitable in our dress? Go, gentle reader, to the nearest second-hand book store where departed greatness looks down upon you as the occupant of the Egyptian tombs looks upon the traveler, and there receive the unambiguous answer.

Such a store is a fitting place to be reminded of the vanity of contending parties. The opinions of those who thought themselves infallible while living may be bought for thirty cents a few years after they have gone the way of all flesh.

O why should the spirit of mortal be proud!

Lot's Wife.

We always have a touch of pity for this monumental woman. The scholars tell us that it has become the duty of the Church to forget her, but there will always be in that tragic story a lesson that not one should willingly forget. There were many experiences in the life of Lot's wife in Sodom that no doubt were dear to her heart. She hoped to catch a reminiscence by a final look upon the doomed city. But the backward look has generally been fatal, despite the temptations it offers us all. We love the road over which we have come, the associations of youth and of childhood, and particularly do these become dear as the descent into the valley of old age begins. Why should we not turn back for a moment at least? The divine order is that we should find our Golden Age in the future. Ours must be the forward look, though, as in the case of Israel, for there be flesh-pots to allure and a country wherein to live in content. The wilderness has its graves and we shrink from them. Canaan is an illusion. But a great Power impels us on, and the wise will progress even over graves, making darkness to blaze like beacons.

If our fathers had not cultivated the forward look no progress among the Disciples would have been possible. Had they no temptations to cast their eyes to the earth and enjoy the fruits of other men's labors, or to look to ancient days and eat the bread that such satisfaction brings? But they were leaving worn-out systems, obsolete shrines, decaying temples. The old was slipping away beneath their feet. The lure of the new was irresistible. They went out not knowing whither they went. If they were blest by the light that falls from eastern skies, we may be sure that they were thrice blessed in following the gleam that brightened more and more until western skies were melted into seas of gold.

The Lessening Emphasis on Denominational Preaching.

Among Disciples this fact may be witnessed at our national gatherings on the day devoted to our charitable work. The age is interested in results, and cares little for the roads that led thereto. We are not interested half as much in the religion of the priest and the Levite as we are in that of the man who had more of the spirit of helpfulness than either one. The very demand that some men make for a few doctrinal sermons at our great conventions to show where we stand, shows that we are not thinking so much of doctrine as we are about the forces which help humanity at home and abroad. Verbal accuracy is good, but a cup of cold water is better to a feverish world. This is not to say that we should dispense with doctrinal preaching, but that it should be related to all the needs of men. However, as compared with the pulpit themes of twenty-five years ago, the themes of today are radically different.

"The Pastor-Preacher."

Some years ago I called attention to this excellent volume by Bishop Quayle. My reference to it must have sold several copies, for brethren tell me from time to time how valuable it has been to them. My appreciation of it grows with the years. I take it down frequently and read a chapter as I would read a volume of poetry. Every subject treated is freighted with good common sense. It is a better book than many we could name that have come from experts in the chairs of Homiletics. I am yet to hear from the first man who does not set a high price upon the work.

A BOOK THAT IS STIRRING MINISTERS.

Three weeks ago was "Little Sir Galahad" Sunday in Chicago and twenty ministers took the book written by Phoebe Gray as the subject of their sermons to illustrate points on good citizenship, temperance and right living.

The celebration by the clergy of "Little Sir Galahad's" truths is country-wide and thousands have learned not only to laugh and weep with the little crippled hero, but to take home to themselves the lessons he teaches in his search for his "Holy Grail."

With the possible exception of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and "In His Steps," it has been said that "Little Sir Galahad" has been the subject of more special sermons than any other book of recent years.

The progress of the crippled boy to health and fortune is attended by a love story, of course, and staunch Mary Alice Brown delights all. Lem Brown's rise from degradation caused by intemperance furnishes graphic features in the story and anti-saloon organizations all over the United States have found in the book material for their campaigns.

One reviewer, speaking of the lessons in the book, said:

"It is the story of John Willett, the 'leading citizen' who neglects his own duty of citizenship until the touch of personal adversity forces him to recognize his neglect of opportunities for good.

"It is the story of young Francis Willett, brought up in luxury, who falls a victim to the besetting sins of our day, but 'comes back' through the fine strength of his own will, stimulated by the love of a noble girl.

"These and other characters, minor but always interesting, act out their destinies with a faithfulness to real life which is absolutely convincing and awakens the finest emotions of the human heart. 'Sir Galahad' is indeed 'the book with a blessing.'"

Among the letters received praising "Little Sir Galahad" many have been from ministers who told of using the lessons of fortitude, devotion and unselfish service suggested by the story as topics for their sermons. [This book may be secured from The Disciples Publication Society at the regular price, $1.35.]

Three Poems by Disciple Writers

THE UNHEEDED CALL.

By Clement Manly Morton.

God called to me. I heard His voice, but I
Had tasted sin, and to my selfish eye
God's way seemed hard. The path seemed narrow, lone,
And I was young. I had a way my own.

God called again when I had older grown.
But still the way of sin more brightly shone,—
And beckoned me, and called me from the right.
I saw not at my heels the shades of night.

Once more He called. The glow of sin had died.
Oh, hour of gloom! I sought to reach His side.
I turned, but found that sin, though seeming bright,
Had led me to the heart of darkest night.

God called me still. Outstretched His hand sought mine.
But in the gloom, His way I could not fin'.
His love ne'er failed. On sin all mine was spent.
The sun had set. I could not then repent.

ASPIRATION.

By F. Treudly.

"Today if ye will hear my voice."
Thus spake the Master once.
That day is now, and ever now.
Far down the never-ending years,
Above their sorrows and their tears,
Soothing their heart-burns and their fears,
We hear His word, "Rejoice."

Only one being could thus speak;
Only one master of the soul.
He spake and silence fell.
And yet His fingers sweep the strings
Of human harps and music, rings
As sweet and clear as in those days
When multitudes were filled with praise
And followed in His train.

And will we listen to His words?
We of these later years
Amidst the throbbings of earth's toil?
If not, to whom then shall we go?
Where shall we find those living founts,
Which issuing from the holy mounts,
Can master every woe?

There is one Name and one alone
In which combine both power and will;
The Counsellor, the Wonderful, Immanuel.
His voice is "on the rolling air,"
We see Him "where the waters run,"
He's standing "in the rising sun,"
And in the setting "He is fair."

"O living will that shall endure
When all that seems shall suffer shock,
Rise in the spiritual rock,
Flow through our deeds and make them pure.

"That we may lift from out of dust
A voice as unto Him that hears,
A cry above the conquered years,
To one that with us works, and trusts,

"With faith that comes of self-control,
The truth that never can be proved,
Until we close with all we loved,
And all we flow from, soul in soul."

And so the Word took human breath,
And to the listening world it spoke,
And silence into music broke.
And now to-day, far down the stream
Of never-ending years, is breaking on its crest the beam
Of light, which in those far-off days
Lit up the old world's toilsome ways,
We're listening to His voice.

BROTHERHOOD.

By C. R. Piety.

There's a watchword that is worthy to be painted on the sky,
Brotherhood;
It should flame in rainbow colors that will catch the earthly eye,
Brotherhood;
Christ proclaimed its place and power in the dreamy long ago;
Through His church it ever echoes while the ages come and go;
Hear, O man, and spread the tidings till the entire race shall know,
Brotherhood.

Send the slogan sweetly ringing through the homes of ev'ry land,
Brotherhood;
Sing it in the humble cottage, shout it in the mansion grand,
Brotherhood;
Sing it, shout it, send it flying through our troubled social life,
Where that greed and lust are preying and where hate and pride are rife;
It is Heaven's holy concord to supplant our human strife,
Brotherhood.

Bear this word of mighty meaning all the world of business through,
Brotherhood;
Take it to the big employers and the labor unions, too,
Brotherhood;
Teach it to the avaracious that are grabbing after gain,
Those whose gold when it is gotten always wears a bloody stain;
It will make the rich man happy and remove the poor man's chain,
Brotherhood.

Cry aloud to ruled and rulers this great signal of good cheer,
Brotherhood;
Preach it to the whole creation till all nations pause and hear,
Brotherhood;
We will banish war forever from the land and from the sea,
And the countries all shall prosper and the people all be free,
When mankind shall dwell together in that bond of unity,
Brotherhood.

DAVID ANOINTED KING.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR APRIL 11.

1 Sam. 16:4-13. Memory Verses, 12, 13.
Golden Text: Man looketh on the outward appearance, but Jehovah looketh on the heart. 1 Samuel 16:17.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(4) And Samuel did that which Jehovah spake, and came to Bethlehem. And the elders of the city came to meet him trembling, and said, Comest thou peaceably? (5) And he said, Peaceably; I am come to sacrifice unto Jehovah; sanctify yourselves, and come with me to the sacrifice. And he sanctified Jesse and his sons, and called them to the sacrifice. (6) And it came to pass, when they were come, that he looked on Eliab, and said, Surely Jehovah's anointed is before him. (7) But Jehovah said unto Samuel, Look not on his countenance, or on the height of his stature; because I have rejected him: for Jehovah seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but Jehovah looketh on the heart. (8) Then Jesse called Abinadab, and made him pass before Samuel. And he said, Neither hath Jehovah chosen this. (9) Then Jesse made Shammah to pass by. And he said, Neither hath Jehovah chosen this. (10) And Jesse made seven of his sons pass before Samuel. And Samuel said unto Jesse, Jehovah hath not chosen these. (11) And Samuel said unto Jesse, Are here all thy children? And he said, There remaineth yet the youngest, and behold, he is keeping the sheep. And Samuel said unto Jesse, Send and fetch him; for we will not sit down till he come hither. (12) and he sent, and brought him in. Now he was ruddy, and withal of a beautiful countenance, and goodly to look upon. And Jehovah said, Arise, anoint him; for this is he. (13) Then Samuel took the horn of oil, and anointed him in the midst of his brethren: and the Spirit of Jehovah came mightily upon David from that day forward. So Samuel rose up, and went to Ramah.

Verse by Verse.

BY ASA MCDANIEL.

4. Samuel did that which Jehovah spake. Read verses 1-3.—Elders came to meet him trembling. Samuel was a prophet and judge. It was his practice to go from town to town, and dispense justice. Bethlehem not being a regular stop, this visit gave the elders much concern.—Comest thou peaceably? Their way of finding out the purpose of Samuel's visit.

5. I am come to sacrifice unto Jehovah. See verse 2. Samuel did not only come on a mission of peace but to perform a religious service.—Sanctify yourselves. The people were to get ready for the sacrifice by making themselves ceremonially clean. See Ex. 19:10.—He sanctified Jesse and his sons. Samuel gave special attention to the preparation of Jesse and his sons. He was anxious to have no legal impurity hinder the execution of his purpose.

6. When they were come. When they assembled for the sacrificial feast, and the sons passed in review before Samuel. This seems evident from the following verses.—Eliab. The eldest son of Jesse.—And said. To himself.—Jehovah's anointed. The one whom God had chosen to be anointed. Samuel's choice was moved by personal attractions, but Jehovah looked deeper.

7. Jehovah said unto Samuel. The voice was an inward one, which became clear to Samuel's consciousness.—Look not on his countenance. . . stature. This standard had influenced the choice of Saul, but it was no longer a true guide. Outward appearance is often deceptive. Character is the true measure of a man.

8. Neither hath Jehovah chosen this. Samuel was conscious that Abinadab was not the man when he passed in review.

9. Jesse made Shammah to pass by. Shammah, the third of Jesse's sons to pass before Samuel is elsewhere called Shimeah, see 2 Samuel 13:3, 32. He was also rejected.

10. Jesse made seven of his sons pass before Samuel. These were the sons who were in the house, but Jehovah made it clear to Samuel that he had chosen none of these.

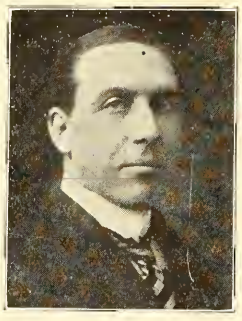
11. There remaineth yet the youngest. He was reckoned of small account being the youngest and hence was not brought before Samuel.—He is keeping the sheep. A very necessary task in that day, and since David was not likely to be chosen he was assigned that task.—We will not sit down. We will not sit down at the table until he comes.

13. The horn of oil. He brought it with him for the purpose, see verse 1. The oil used for this purpose was carefully prepared, see Ex. 30:22-25; and later kept in the sanctuary, see 1 Kings 1:39.—Anointed him. It appears that the anointing took place in Jesse's house, in the presence of the family. This act was the symbol of setting apart a person for some special service.—The Spirit of Jehovah came upon David. David was gripped by the divine purpose, and possessed of the worthfulness of the task which awakens in every faithful and true heart the spirit of a prince.—David. David means beloved, darling—Went to Ramah. Ramah was the home of Samuel, see I Samuel 1:1, 20; 7:17; 25:1.

David Anointed King

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.



Saul had lost his throne. His worthy son, Jonathan, was debarred by an unworthy father. Thus are the sins visited upon children. And now a successor must be chosen. The most royal son of Israel must be found. Samuel, like an ancient Earl of Warwick, goes forth to make another king. Moreover he seems not to have learned much from his experience with Saul, for he is still upon the lookout for tall and powerful men, physically. When Samuel sees a tall Saul or a tall Eliab, he loses his head and says, "Surely this is the Lord's anointed." Now there is something in that point of view. A big man is like a big house. But one of the biggest houses I know is empty! A mansion needs furniture, musical instruments, books, pictures, statuary, rich rugs, china and plate and last but not least, living people. Saul, in this lesson, is like a big house—"To let."

HOW GOD TELLS.

God has a different measure than we have. He looks on the heart. I would like to see my whole congregation on a beautiful Sunday morning as they would look as God sees them. What, if standing in the pulpit, I could look down and see only hearts? We judge by outward appearance—face, clothes, smiles. God looks on the heart. Appearance—what slaves we are to it! The house mortgaged that we may ride in a car; the merchant unpaid that we may wear fine clothes; the church dues forgotten that we may sit in the orchestra circle. Appearance! A bright woman remarked about the Chicago flats some years ago, "They have Queen Ann fronts and Mary Ann backs." There is a vast difference between the front and back appearance of many a family. On the other hand there are thousands of good, honest families that are good clear through.

GET THE HABIT.

Why not use God's way of assessing values? Why not estimate men and women as God does? We know that in His sight many that are first shall be last and many that are last shall be first. I know a quiet little woman who has reared five sons in the church. She lives in a humble house. She works hard every day. She is always ready to make calls that are intended to lead people into the church. There will be stars in her crown. In the group around the throne she will stand in the first rank. Her heart is right. In God's sight she is a Queen. Remember your story of the widow's mite and be careful how you treat these royal souls of Christ's retinue. I know a man—a plain soul—he has a very modest conception of his own worth. He toils day and night to make ends meet. Yet when I call upon the sick I learn that he has been there before me and when I go to relieve need, he has already made his contribution. He is one of the good and faithful and there shall be for him an abundant entrance into the palace of the King. And boys and girls—what royal hearts they have: their allegiance is almost pathetic. Commend me to the sincere souls. I want to live with them. I like reality. Cut out your bluff, your swagger, your pretense, your impertinence, your empty appearance. It is too thin—we can see through. You are a joke.

THRUSTS.

How often we offend some of God's little ones, or rather great ones, by not observing God's rule of looking on the heart. Everyone of us ought to make particular effort to seek out and praise those modest souls whom we have been passing by. We have had sweet words for the attractive and the prosperous. We have lingered long with the favored and the forward. Next Sunday we will warm the hearts of those neglected, but constant, lovers of God whom we have passed by.

HEREDITY.

There were some hidden qualities in that ruddy shepherd boy that would some day see the light. The cool, calm, loyal blood of Ruth flowed controlledly in his veins and the hot, passionate, dauntless blood of Rahab, the harlot, throbbed and pounded in his arteries. That short, fair-haired, ruddy boy—what powers were his. Lions, bears and Philistines were no terror to him. He sang like the lark. Music swept through the Aeolian harp of his soul. A man of moods and powers. Like the Corsican, "When his temples throbbed the continent shook!" Religion, battle, loyalty, infidelity, control, passion, music, discord, love, hate, peace, storm—how strangely mixed the elements in that shepherd lad!

AFTER GOD'S HEART.

Fortunately we do not have to be perfect before God can use us. It were better that the instrument be perfectly formed and sterilized, but God can do good work with imperfect tools. Otherwise his work would never be done. With all his faults God loved him still. His heart was regal withal. He was kingly. The good far outweighed the evil. He fell, but his direction was right. He kept on. He was human like the rest of us—and God loved him. And so God found his king. What a beautiful story it is! The meadows, the sheep, the harping lad with brave and tender heart, the soft Judean moonlight, the religious raptures, the maturing consciousness of God, the day's work, the call of the man of God, the mysterious horn of oil, the chosen of the Most High.

Pastor Reminisces after Ten Years.

W. A. Moore has rounded out ten years at First church, Tacoma, Wash., and started into the eleventh year. In a recent sermon, he not only gave interesting statistics of his work but he also interpreted his experiences. He has had over 500 funerals and as many weddings. He has preached 1,100 sermons, attended 5,000 other meetings and made 7,000 calls. He said: "Would I preach the same if I had it to do over again? Some things I would not emphasize so much as during these ten years, and to other things I would, if possible, give even greater emphasis. I would give more time to the awfulness of sin. The way of the transgressor is hard;' 'Sin when finished brings death.' Jesus as a Savior for all should be given much time in the pulpit. He is our great Savior and there is none beside him. I would greatly emphasize God's wonderful love for man, and try hard to write it on your hearts. Then if God loves us we ought to love one another. 'A new commandment I give unto you that ye love one another even as I have loved you.' I would preach more on missions and urge that we do more for those who have not heard of him whom we call Lord."

Successful Pastor is Rewarded.

David H. Shields will soon enter the second year of his ministry at Kokomo, Ind. The church appreciates the good work of the past year, and has voted a substantial increase of salary. There have been 124 new members inducted into the church. A crowded house has been the rule for a number of Sunday evenings, while the pastor conducted his book reviews. The books that are being treated are: "The Eyes of the World," "John Barleycorn," "Inside the Cup," Saturday's Child," "Pollyanna," "What Men Live By." A number of the members of the Kokomo church attended the elementary conference of Sunday school workers held at Huntington recently.

Pastor Proves Himself Evangelist.

During this winter a number of pastors have been proving that they can do the evangelistic work in their churches better than can some outsider. Norman H. Robertson has just closed the greatest series of revival services ever held at Watseka, Ill. There have been 124 added to the church and 102 of these are adults, so the accessions will make themselves count in the work of the church immediately. The music was conducted by a local man also, F. M. Brockway of the local choir conducting the chorus. A reception to the new members was recently given by the church.

Hold a Roll-Call.

First church, Frankfort, Ky., of which Roger T. Nooe is pastor, will hold a roll-call on April 11, the Sunday after Easter. At this time an effort will be made to get all the old members back into the pews again.

Church Squares Up.

To be square with the world is the dream of many churches, but at Bristol, Tenn., this dream found realization this winter. In a ten-weeks' campaign the indebtedness of $1,068.45 has been raised, and all but fifty dollars of the pledges are paid. On March 14, a great congregation assembled at the church home, and the mortgage was publicly burned. Gilbert H. Easley is pastor.

Prosperity at Butler College.

Things are looking up at Butler College, Indianapolis. There is a ten per cent increase in the enrollment this year over last year; the graduating class is thirty per cent larger than any class in the history of the school; there is an unprecedented demand for catalogues from prospective students. These and other indications show that a new day has dawned for this high-grade educational institution.
